SUBJECT INDEX

Absence of Star denotes Cases of Provincial or Small Importance.

 Indicates Cases of Great Importance.*

 * Indicate Cases of Very Great Importance.*

Acquiescence—Mere silence is no acquiescence—Silence is acquiescence only when there is duty to speak and silence amounts to fraud—Trespasser spending money on property of another—True owner silent—To amount to fraud, he must know that property is his at that time and that trespasser is acting under mistaken belief that land is his (trespasser's)—Where he does not know any of these there is no acquiescence 711

Admission—Admission is presumed to be true 249a

Adverse Possession—Co-sharer—Possession of co-sharer is not adverse unless there is ouster or assertion of hostile title 106c

—Co-sharer—Ouster—Mere non-payment of rents and profits for long time, does not give rise to inference of ouster—There must be indication that taking of profits amounts to denial of right of other co-sharers (Obiter) 106d —Assertion of right—Assertion of right made during life-time of female holder holding life estate is of no avail as against reversioners 34b

—Co-sharer in possession of whole joint property—His possession is not adverse in absence of assertion of hostile title by him to knowledge of co-sharers 34c

—Acquisition of title—Clear and definite evidence as to different points of time is necessary 31b

Appeal—Right of—Must be given by express enactment 688a

—Parties—Person impleaded as defendant to suit and party to decree dismissing suit—He has right to show even as respondent in appeal, that decree was wrongly passed 593u

—Right of—Right of appeal not lost unless decree conditional, for benefit of appellant, and appellant accepts condition and benefit 424a

—Powers of appellate Court—Issue simple one—Appellate Court will not discard appreciation of evidence by trial Court—Trial Court not properly considering effect of documentary evidence—

Appeal

Appellate Court may draw conclusions of its own 87d

—New case—Appellate Court making new and inconsistent case for party—Its judgment cannot be supported 49c

Assam Bijni Succession Act (2 of 1931)—Scope—Act merely declares rule of succession and contains no provision forfeiting or confiscating property of any person 593v

—S. 1—Act is public Act—It determines right of individuals not merely inter se but as governing their relations with others 593i

—S. 4 (1)—Words "with title dating back" etc. in S. 4 (1) cannot be treated as mere recital and not as part of enactment 593j

—S. 4 (1) and (2)—Declarations contained in sub-ss. (1) and (2) are 'law' 593a

—S. 4 (1) and (2)—Act is confined to succession to the Raj—Any title otherwise than on basis of succession is outside scope of the Act—Claim solely based on alleged right of succession to Raj is barred but not claim based on alleged title acquired by adverse possession 593r

—S. 4 (1) and (2)—Act operates even outside limits of province of Assam 593t

—S. 9—S. 9 is prospective 593s

Assam Criminal Law Amendment Act (1934), S. 20 (1)—Act has no force outside Assam 414

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (1 of 1886)—Fisheries can be offered separately for settlement and assessed separately from land 629b

—Beels can be settled separately or assessed on profits 629c

—S. 6 (b)—Right founded on adverse possession is legally derived 629d

—S. 8 (b)—Status of a landholder—Acquisition of, dependent not on the length of possession but on the lessee's holding under the lease for 10 years 774a

—Ss. 12, 29 and 70—S. 70 was intended to cover only cases of such lands, that

is waste land or lands which have been held on behalf of proprietor Government 774b

—S. 82 (2)—“Or” means “and”—Both conditions must be fulfilled to maintain a suit to set aside sale 715a

—Ss. 82 (2) and 80—Suit to set aside sale is governed by S. 82 (2) and not by Art. 12 (c), Limitation Act 715b

—S. 82 (2)—Surety's properties sold for defaulter's arrears of revenue—Civil suit for declaration that sale is void ab initio is not barred though such plea is not taken in application before Commissioner 715d

—Ss. 91 (1) and 146—Scope of S. 146—All conditions in S. 91 (1) are not to be fulfilled before ordering sale of surety's property 715c

—S. 154—Land revenue settlement—Government is sole judge of propriety of classification and suitability of rent 629a

—S. 154—Offer of re-settlement and temporary settlement should be of whole estate 629e

—S. 154 (1) (a)—Composite proceedings partly settlement and partly partition and entirely foreign to Regulation—Civil Court can pronounce such proceedings ultra vires 629h

*—Ss. 235 and 239—It is discretionary with Court to try accused jointly or separately—High Court has power to hold that joint trial was not proper and to set aside convictions—Joint trial should not be held where there is risk of embarrassment to defence 753a

—S. 235—Conspiracy having one or more objects in view—Offence of conspiracy and acts committed in pursuance of it come under one transaction—Transaction continues so long as conspiracy continues 753b

—Ss. 236 and 237 — Doubt contemplated by Ss. 236 and 237 must arise at time of charge—To decide whether such doubt exists Judge must know at that time what facts can be proved—"Can be proved" means facts about which there is evidence in hands of prosecution—Doubt

within meaning of S. 236 exists where evidence is circumstantial and decision depends upon question whether Court will draw possible inference—Evidence direct and such that if believed would establish but one offence—Question whether jury would believe evidence or not is irrelevant for deciding applicability of Ss. 236 and 237—Such doubt is not contemplated by Ss. 236 and 237 796a

—Ss. 236 and 237—Doubt whether Court will make one and which of presumptions under S. 114, Illus. (a), Evidence Act, is not such doubt as is contemplated by S. 236—Such presumption is not one of fact which can be proved—It can only arise when some fact or facts cannot be proved 796c

—S. 236—Doubt must arise from nature of the act or series of acts—Doubt would arise because of inferences which might be drawn from the acts 796f

—Ss. 236 and 237—S. 237 only applies to cases referred to in S. 236 and does not refer to cases in which it is doubtful which offence will be proved—Accused charged for one offence—He cannot be convicted under S. 237 of different offence 796g

—S. 237—Applicability—S. 237 is controlled by S. 236 and applies only to cases falling under S. 236—Case not falling under S. 236—Accused cannot be convicted under S. 237 of offence with which he was not charged 796b

—S. 239—Accused jointly tried under S. 239—Validity of trial—In judging validity, test to be applied is accusation made and not result of trial—Matter must be looked at as it appeared to Magistrate when framing charges 753d

—S. 239—Several persons jointly tried in same trial—Irregularity, if any, not causing prejudice to accused—Proceedings cannot be questioned, more so when no protest has been made on behalf of accused 753e

—S. 307—Power of reference should be sparingly used—Verdict of jury must not be disturbed unless verdict is perverse 451

—S. 307—Reference—When it should be made 407b

—S. 307—Unreasonable—Jury not satisfied that property was stolen in course of dacoity—Verdict is not unreasonable 407e

—S. 337—S. 337 applies only to trials concerning graver offences (FB) 356e

Criminal P. C.

—Ss. 374, 418 and 423—Accused sentenced to death can appeal on matter of fact as well as of law—High Court can come to its own conclusion as to guilt or innocence of accused independently of verdict of jury and opinion of trial Judge—It should however attach greatest possible weight to verdict of jury, if answering reasonable test 73f

—Ss. 403 (1), 235 (1)—Person, prosecuted under S. 283, Penal Code, for obstructing river by extending tank-banks, acquitted on appeal—Subsequent prosecution under Embankment Act for meddling with embankment—Subsequent offence held not distinct offence and principle of autrefois acquit applied 686

—Ss. 439, 498—Sessions Judge directing accused to show cause why their bail should not be enhanced solely because accused challenged Magistrate's order under S. 5, Identification of Prisoners Act, directing measurements and photographs of accused to be taken—Order is not proper—Question should be left to be dealt with by Magistrate 65d

—S. 494—Withdrawal under S. 494 is unconditioned and unconditional—What the public prosecutor will or will not do subsequently is no concern of Court

(FB) 356g

—S. 494 (a)—Case withdrawn against accused—He cannot be tried again in same proceedings (FB) 356b

—Ss. 494 (a) and 337—Withdrawal of case by Public Prosecutor against accused with object of calling him as witness—Court can give consent—But if S. 337 is available, it is better for Court to use this section rather than S. 494 (a)

(FB) 356c

—S. 498—Appeal finally decided by High Court—Accused applying to Privy Council for leave to appeal—High Court has no power to grant bail during intervening period 809a

—Ss. 517, 520—Words "Court of appeal" are not limited to Court before which appeal from order of acquittal can lie—Court of appeal has jurisdiction to deal with order of disposal of property under S. 517 irrespective of question in what Court appeal from acquittal lies 21

—S. 520—"Court of appeal" means any Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from decision of Magistrate by whom case was tried 185a

Criminal P. C.

—S. 520—Sessions Judge or Additional Sessions Judge is not Court of revision within meaning of S. 520 185c

—S. 561-A—S. 561-A should not be interpreted as having reference to bail (Per Henderson, J.) 809b

—S. 561-A—Appeal finally decided by High Court—Accused applying for leave to Privy Council—High Court has jurisdiction under S. 561-A to extend time for accused to surrender (Per Henderson, J., Obiter) 809c

—S. 561-A — Accused charged under S. 366, Penal Code, acquitted—Proceedings started under Ss. 497 and 498, Penal Code, on same facts, to defeat effect of acquittal—Proceedings being abuse of process of Court are liable to be quashed 224

Criminal Trial — Accomplice — Witness not concerned with crime—His participation limited to knowledge that crime is to be committed—He cannot be regarded accomplice—Person to be accomplice must participate in crime committed by accused 101d —Appeal—New plea—Contention that certain statements are inadmissible by reason of their being not statements as contemplated by S. 164, Criminal P. C., raised for first time before High Court will not be entertained 101b

—Appeal—Evidence — Appreciation — Decision of case turning upon question as to what inference is to be drawn from well established facts about which there is no doubt—High Court is entitled to draw necessary inference 73d *—Complaint to Magistrate under S. 476, Criminal P. C.—Name of person not mentioned in complaint—Magistrate can proceed against such person also 147

—Confessions — Confession implicating others and safeguarding the person confessing—Such confessions should be taken warily 407c

—Confessions—Retracted confession — It is unsafe to use retracted confession against co-accused—Judge can however after due consideration and considering all extraneous facts, such as statements by police, by Magistrate taking down confession and general tone of confession, accept it 316c

—Confessions—Confession not voluntary —Facts proved that inducement of some kind although outside terms of S. 24, Evidence Act, was given—Court may refuse to accept confession as true 316e

Criminal Trial

—Confessions—Confessional and exculpatory statements should be taken into consideration along with other evidence 101a

—Conspiracy—Accomplice—Conspiracy having for its object subversion of British rule in India by armed revolt—Persons, merely having knowledge of crime and merely acting as tools of leaders of conspiracy but not taking part in perpetration of crime should not be regarded as accomplices—Court should ascertain what credit is to be attached to such witnesses—Rule applicable to accomplices should not be applied to their case 101c

—Conspiracy case—Charge should not be introduced before proper appraisal of preliminary prosecution evidence has been adopted by prosecuting authorities 693

—Conviction — Accused declared 'not guilty' by jury sitting as assessors—No cogent evidence inculcating accused — Judge cannot convict accused without reasons 527b

—Evidence—Right of cross-examination —Witness giving evidence against accused withdrawn from witness box and made accused—Conviction of accused should be set aside (FB) 356a

—Evidence — Admissibility of — Court should lean in favour of accused and exclude evidence of doubtful or remote relevance 73a

—Evidence — Proof of case against accused must depend on positive evidence of guilt given by Crown and not on absence of explanation by accused—Accused involved by evidence in state of considerable suspicion—He must for his own safety prove facts reconciling suspicious circumstances with his innocence 73h

—Forum—Advantages or disadvantages of trial before different types of tribunals —It is only opinion of accused which is entitled to serious consideration 529e

—Hostile witness—Duty of prosecution —It is not right for Public Prosecutor to declare prosecution witness as hostile—Only way in dealing with hostile witness lies with Judge 675a

—Jury trial — It is not sufficient if Judge informs the jury to consider case of each accused separately — He himself should do so—Charge should not be long, rambling repetition of evidence without marshalling facts or shifting evidence—He should not go into unnecessary details of matters of little importance 186a

Criminal Trial

- Jury trial—Charge of conspiracy to murder—Letter by some person to complainant that certain accused were conspiring to kill him and had offered him bribe to murder complainant—Judge not explaining evidential value of this letter but leaving jury to imagine it to be substantive evidence of conspiracy to murder—Non-direction held amounted to misdirection 186b
- Jury trial—Judge should make reference to specific accused person and not merely use word "accused" 186c
- Murder—Person committing crime successfully making attack on their victims—Attack directly resulting in death—It is prima facie case of murder 529c
- Order of civil Court determining rights—Criminal Court cannot re-adjudicate 124a

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

AMEER ALI, J.

Haridas Chatterjee and others—Plaintiffs.

Manmatha Nath Mullick and others—Defendants.

Suit No. 245 of 1932, Decided on 7th August 1935.

(a) Hindu Law—Adoption — Dayabhaga—Brother's daughter's son cannot be adopted.

In Bengal, the Niyoga rule is part of the law of the land and the adoption is notionally limited to boys engendered under Niyoga by the adoptive father. Hence the adoption of a son of brother's daughter is prohibited: Case law reviewed. [P 6 C 2]

 (b) Hindu Law—Adoption prohibited by Niyoga rule is no adoption—Adoptee is not extracted from original family.

Adoption of a child (brother's daughter's son) whose adoption is prohibited by Niyoga rule is no adoption, and there is no extraction of the child from the original family. When adoption is attempted and failed, it is not right to consider sonship annulled because the father might have exercised his patria potestas to destroy the child or resorted to other methods of annulling sonship. [P 9 C 2]

(c) Hindu Law — Adoption — Dayabhaga Law—There cannot be adoption without giving and taking.

Though as a general proposition under Dayabhaga law, acceptance is not necessary to constitute a valid gift, adoption is a very special form of gift and there cannot be an adoption without giving and taking. [P 9 C 2]

(d) Evidence Act (1872), S. 114—Scope.
Section 114 includes but is not limited to the presumption of 'regularity'. [P 10 C 1]

(e) Evidence Act (1872), S. 32 (5)—Relationship created by adoption—Evidence of incidents bearing on adoption is admissible subject to careful scrutiny.

Where the relationship created by adoption is of such importance and specifically included in the act, evidence of incidents bearing more or less directly on the fact or otherwise of an adoption and its validity would be allowed subject of course to careful scrutiny as to value.

[P 10 C 2]

*A. K. Roy, H. D. Bose and B. Bose—*for Plaintiffs.

*S. N. Banerjee, S. M. Bose, K. C. Mukerjee, P. N. Sen, J. C. Sett, S. N. Bose, S. R. Das Gupta, H. K. Bose and S. P. Choudhury—*for Defendants.

Judgment.—Having received so much assistance from counsel on both sides in this case, from Mr. H. D. Bose, the most experienced Hindu lawyer at the Bar, for the plaintiffs, and counsel, both senior and junior for the various defendants I would have liked to consider my judgment. I do not do so because in the circumstances of this case, it is desirable that parties should have my decision before my impending departure. I state the facts only so far as may be necessary to explain the points of law which have been discussed before me. This case and the two cases which follow in the list turn on the effect of an adoption made somewhere about 1850. There was a man called Ramgopal who died in 1860 leaving a very valuable estate. He had a brother Shib Kisen married to a lady Annapurna. Ramgopal had only daughters. One daughter married Shib Nath Chatterjee, and they had a son Noni Mohan. Shib Kristo and Annapurna had no male child. They therefore adopted or purported to adopt Noni Mohan. In the course of the arguments and discussing the points of law involved I used the following symbols. Shib Kristo Banerjee the adopting father is A. His wife Annapurna, the adopting mother X. Shib Nath Chatterjee, the natural father, B, and his wife Y. Noni Mohan is Z, and as adopted son ZI. Ramgopal left a widow Jaikali.

The widow's interest lasted for a long period of time, that is until 1920. During that period there were very extensive alienations, alienations by the widow either of her widow's interest or of absolute interest on the ground of necessity, which alienations were in point of fact to X (Annapurna). There were also extensive alienations by X (Annapurna) as transferee in respect of the transactions I have mentioned, and by ZI (Noni Mohan qua adopted son) and his successors in interest.

The defendants are such alienees, and the plaintiffs seek to dispossess them as reversioners to the estate of Ramgopal on the death of Jaikali. In this case the position is somewhat peculiar, because Noni Mohan would be the heir to Ramgopal's estate, firstly as Z, i. e., in his capacity of natural son of B (Shib Nath Chatterjee), and alternatively as ZI (adopted son of A Shib Kristo) to the exclusion of any other person. The persons therefore claiming to be reversioners, i. e., the plaintiffs and certain of the defendants in this suit, and the plaintiffs in the other two suits, can establish no right in respect of the estate of Ramgopal unless it can be shown that Noni Mohan was neither the natural son of Shib Nath nor the adopted son of Shib Kristo. Now this is the essential point. I considered that it should be determined first. The point made is quite shortly as follows:

The plaintiffs seek to get rid of Z and ZI by: (1) setting up an adoption; (2) asserting that the adoption was bad; (3) denying that the adoption was too bad, i. e., had the effect of cutting him off from his own family without introducing him to the new family. I am purposely using non-legal language. In point of fact, as we shall see, that what they actually seek to do is to get him quite out of his own family and half into the new family. These contentions are the subject matter of the first three issues which were raised and which I have tried. The plaintiffs are entitled to give further evidence on the other issues of which there are two classes, issues which are essential to establish that the plaintiffs would be, if the point of law succeeds, the reversioners, a matter depending upon pedigree and dates of death; and another class of issues appropriate to the various defendants in connection with their respective transfers. Neither of those matters have been dealt with. I only purport to deal with the point of law.

I. Adoption.—The defendants as they were quite entitled to do did not admit the adoption. I speak of the fact. The result was that some evidence had to be given. A good deal of evidence was objected to and in some cases the objections were upheld. I may yet have to explain the extent to which that evidence has been admitted. I do not propose to do so at the moment. There was also an attempt to give expert evidence as to Hindu law. I ruled against its admissibility. For the purpose of discussing the point of law I will only say at the moment that from the documents which have been tendered, and from the oral evidence to the limited extent to which it is admitted I think this Court should infer that there was an adoption, —I am using that word at this stage in a perfectly neutral sense. I have not forgotten that reliance was placed upon one particular document, the pedigree in a book produced on behalf of the plaintiff in which Noni Mohan is described as "palan putra". This point was taken and was elaborated by Mr. Mukherjee for one of the defendants, who has shown me certain authorities, which indicate that "palan putra" is a more ungrammatical form of "palak putra" (itself ungrammatical), the primary sense of which is a son brought up or maintained in the house without being the legally adopted son. The common word used for legally adopted son in Bengal is Poshya Putra. But I do not think this fact of itself outweighs the evidence in the aggregate to be drawn from the other documents and the surrounding circumstances. In my view (and upon this basis is the judgment I propose to give), this Court should infer that an adoption took place. I conclude further (although how far I consider this matter to have been satisfactorily established by evidence I may have to state later) that Noni Mohan was adopted at an early age and that the ceremonies appropriate such as Upanayana ceremony and others were performed in the house of Shib Kristo. Noni Mohan was married there as a Banerjee and his daughter was married there as a Banerjee and I think it is legitimate to infer, whatever the effect may be, that Noni Mohan performed the ceremonies of his adoptive father and gave Pinda to his soul and the souls of his adoptive father's ancestors.

2. Adoption bad.—The plaintiffs having established that an adoption in fact took place have now to establish that the adoption was bad in law. The actual pleading is as follows: The issues follow the pleading using the words "valid" and "invalid." The pleading is not as I shall show quite appropriate to the case finally made. The points of law therefore are: (a) Is the adoption unexceptionable? I use this word intentionally in order to avoid the difficulties of "perfect" and "imperfect," "valid" and "invalid." (b) If not unexceptionable, what is the effect of the adoption? It has become apparent during the course of the argument that in order to decide the ultimate question involved in this suit it is not enough merely to say "valid" or "invalid," "perfect" or "imperfect." It is not suggested (a) that there is any inherent incapacity to adopt in A (Shib Kristo Banerjee). Nor any (b) inherent incapacity to give in adoption in B. (c). The obstacle set up in this case is the alleged prohibition against adopting the son of a brother's daughter.

The materials put before me in respect of this prohibition can be classified as follows: (1) Original texts; (2) the deductions, argument, or as it has been called "gloss" of recognised original commentators, such as the authors of the Dattaka Chandrika and Dattaka Mimamsha; (3) "gloss" of later translators and commentators; (such as Sutherland) on the text, or the gloss of original commentators; (4) decided cases; (5) text books and opinion of modern authors. In dealing with this material, of whatever class, it should be borne in mind that there are two questions to be considered (a) whether a prohibition exists; (b) if so whether it is mandatory or recommendatory.

1. Original text.—There is no express prohibition against adopting a brother's daughter's son in the original text. The texts of both Shaunaka and Shakala contain a prohibition against adoption in three specific cases, daughter's son, sister's son and mother's sister's son.

I will refer hereafter to this prohibition as the "three specific cases." Both these texts also in describing the actual adoption refer to the adoptee as "this shadow of a son." (2) The author of the Dattaka Chandrika attaches to the phrase just quoted the following gloss, "that is to say, the capacity to be begotten by Nioga and so forth." The author of the Dattaka Mimamsha in chapter 5 expands this idea of "capacity to be begotten by Nioga" in a manner which I may have to state in greater detail. Speaking generally he connects the "three specific cases" with the "shadow" and "Niyoga" of the earlier commentator and builds on this foundation a theory of "incongruous relationships" and the rule that no one can adopt a child union with whose mother under Nioga would have involved the penalties of incest. ("The Niyoga rule") (3) Sutherland translated "incongruous relationship" as "prohibited degrees", in this manner automatically expanded the idea from "Nyoga" to marriage. Hence the rule that no one can adopt one with whose mother he could not have contracted a valid marriage. ("The marriage rule.")

For the purpose of this case it is not necessary to go into the question whether Sutherland was justified in interpreting Nanda Pundit's view as above stated because the adoption in this case would be hit by the Niyoga law whether, there being no actual text of the original rishis, the view of the authors of these two commentaries is to be accepted or not? That is the whole question and on that question, it seems to me, I have to consider the following points. (1) Is this Court bound by the direct authority as to the Niyoga bar? (2) If not, are there authorities in its support which I should nevertheless follow; (3) if not, whether there are opinions expressed either in cases or in text books which I should follow; and (4) what is my own opinion with regard to the Nyoga law.

As the matter has been fully discussed before me I think it desirable that I should first state my own view and then see how far I am bound by or should follow authority. Apart from authorities there are two questions to be considered: (a) what is the sense of the analogy on which it is based; (b) how far were the commentators justified in applying it having regard to the text on which they were commenting. I understand Niyoga to be this: A husband who for some reason or other cannot himself fertilize his wife is allowed by law to produce a son by appointment or as we should probably say by attorney: the persons to be appointed are to be chosen from a very limited class. As is quite natural i. e., upon elementary principles of physiology or exigamy it was understood that the person to be appointed to fertilize should not be closely related by blood to the prospective mother. Speaking for myself (except for one explanation given to me by the Advocate-General to which I shall refer again) I have been unable to appreciate how the two things, adoption and Niyoga, are in any way similar except that 'there is a son in both'. To me the so-called analogy is utterly incongruous. The reasons why it appears to be incongruous are as follows: I quite appreciate that in primitive no less than modern society fictions have to be maintained, but there is a sense even in fantasy. I can well appreciate any amount of fiction in a case of adoption directed to create the impression that the adopted son is a son born of the adoptive parents.

I could understand for instance if (using the symbols above indicated) B were notionally appointed under Niyoga to produce a son by X for A. That would be congruous with Z being the real son of A and X. On the other hand if the fiction is the idea of A being appointed under Niyoga to Y, wife of B, it is congruous to the idea of Z being a son born of A and X. If A has fertilized Y under Niyoga it means that Z has been born, the natural son of B and Y not of A and X. Hence I am unable to follow the explanation of Mayne at p. 133, Edn. 9.

The explanation is probably to be found in the growth of Brahmanical influence, and the consequent prominence given to the religious principle. If the primary object of adoption was to gratify the manes of the ancestors by annual offerings it was necessary to delude the manes, as it were, into the idea that the offerer really was the descendant. He was to look as much like a real son as possible, and certainly not to be one who could never have been a son. Hence arose that body of rules which were evolved out of the phrase of Saunaka, that he must be 'the reflection of a son.'

I do not intend to make capital out of the language which is no doubt illustrative. My point is that the suggestion that A has produced a son by Niyoga to B and Y is not going to "delude" the manes of the ancestors of A. I should have thought on the contrary that it would alarm them. The only point on which the manes might be deluded is the physical competence of A.

Again the relevant passage in the judgment of Banerjee, J., 17 All 294 (1), at p. 322, is in these words:

I am of opinion that the meaning put on the text by Nanda Pandita is its true meaning. It has been fully shown in the judgment of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Minakshi v. Ramananda (2), that the rule of exclusion deduced by Nanda Pandita, founded on propinquity and incongruous relationship, is not an inconsistent rule, and all I need say is that I concur in that judgment and in the reasons given in it for the conclusion at which the learned Judges arrived. The object of marriage among Hindus is to procreate a son able to confer spiritual benefit, and this cannot be done by the issue of an incestuous marriage. Hence the rules for marriage within prohibited degrees. The same being the object of the procreation of a son through the now obsolete practice of Niyoga, rules of prohibited relationship in Niyoga were also provided. As adoption is resorted to for a similar object, similar rules of exclusion founded on the analogy of Niyoga are the necessary consequence of the requirement of Saunaka that the son to be adopted should 'bear the reflection of a son' that is of a son born in wedlock: otherwise the efficacy of adoption would fail, as in "that case the son to be adopted would bear the resemblance of the 'issue of an incestuous connection.'"

In the case cited by Banerjee, J. 11 Mad 49 (2) at p. 52, the following is said:

There is this justification for the analogy, viz. that the object in permitting niyoga to the extent to which it was recognised by the ancient law, was to provide a substitute for the son of the body and thereby to prevent the extinction of that spiritual benefit which was believed to arise from the performance by a son of funeral and annual obseques.

I do not see that the analogy is "justified," nor do I consider it accurate to describe Niyoga as providing a "substitute for the son of the body." The Niyoga son is an actual son—the adopted son is a substitute or shadow son. The only intelligible explanation of the application of the idea of Niyoga to the idea of adoption is that suggested by the Advocate-General. According to his theory the adoptee is regarded as being actually the issue of A and Y by Niyoga.

2. (1888) 11 Mad 49 (F B).

In other words the adoption is notionally limited to boys engendered under Niyoga by the adoptive father. That I agree does get over the primary incongruity of Niyoga and adoption. On the other hand this explanation does seem to go far beyond the textual foundation. It is not the explanation either of Mr. Mayne or Banerjee, J., nor I think of other text-writer. Therefore, if the matter were open I would say that I cannot understand why Niyoga is at all appropriate. In fact the Niyoga analogy seems to me incongruous to the idea of adoption. I should further have said that its introduction, viz., the phrase in the original text "bearing the reflection of a son" is unwarranted. There has been considerable discussion in this case as in many others as to the meaning of this phrase "bearing the reflection of a son." Should this phrase "bearing the reflection of a son" bring in any analogy at all? Now, again, if that was open before me, I should feel emboldened to say, as was suggested, I don't know when first, but certainly in 6 Cal 41 (3) towards the end of the judgment, that this is no more than description. That is the view taken by the German translators Buhler and Joly and also by Mandlik. I was told and it was agreed that the phrase should be translated "son" bearing reflection of a "son," rather than "boy bearing reflection of a son." This favours the reading of Buhler, Joly and Sir John Edge in 17 All 294 (1). Certainly therefore I should have held both from text and context that the phrase amounts to nothing more than a description of an "ideal" son created by the prescribed means in the place of a born son. . . . "This son; This image son. . ."

I now have to consider the authorities which have or have not established the Niyoga rule as a prohibition in adoption. (1) How far is the matter covered by the authority which is binding on me? So far as the Privy Council is concerned, there are three cases which have to be referred to 12 M I A 397 (4), especially at p. 441; 26 I A 153 (5), both cases and 42 I A 155 (6), especially at 161. Neither of these decisions directly covers the point at issue, nor directly established or otherwise the Niyoga rule.

3. Haran Chander v. Hurro Mohun, (1881) 6 Cal 41=6 C L R 393.

I therefore have to consider whether they have done so by implication. Counsel Mr. Bose contends that they impliedly approved it. Some of the modern authorities contend that they have impliedly rejected it. Before coming to a conclusion on this point it is advisable to consider the direct authorities. (2) In Madras there are direct authorities in favour of the rule, 11 Mad 49 (2) (which I have already quoted); a later case 43 Mad 876 (7) which accepted as a general rule, the marriage or Niyoga test, and on this basis, in the absence of special custom held that the adoption of a brother's daughter's son is invalid. Bengal: 6 Cal 41 (3), the difficulty about this case is that while in the concluding portion of the judgment the learned Judges say that the shadow of a son appears "to have been purely descriptive" in the body of the judgment, they refer to the marriage or Niyoga rule as a generally accepted rule of Hindu Law. Allahabad: 17 All 294 (1). In 17 All 294 (1) [the second case dealt with by the Privy Council in 26 I A 153 (5)] Sir John Edge and the majority of the Court disapproved the Niyoga rule. Banerjee, J., in an elaborate judgment, as I have already indicated supported it. Upon the main point at issue (the three specific cases) the dissenting judgment of Banerjee, J., was upheld. The Board was not called upon to express an opinion on the Niyoga rule. 32 Bom 619 (8): Bombay has been really the only dissenting voice. In 32 Bombay, while expressing no very great approval of Nanda Pandit's Niyoga rule, the Court proceeded upon the basis that it was not necessary to attack it because the adoption there was valid unless it came under the extension of the Niyoga rule for which Sutherland is considered responsible. It therefore rejected Sutherland's gloss on Nanda Pandit. It was not necessary for it to attack Nanda Pandit's gloss. In the later cases, 36 Bom

533 (9) at 536, the Courts confined the marriage or Niyoga rule to "the three specific cases" established as to the subject of mandatory prohibition by the Privy Council in 26 I A 153 (5). They did not take the unnecessary risk of attacking the rule itself. In 39 Bom 410 (10) the Court took the view that Nanda Pandit's rule of exclusion should only be regarded as mandatory where it coincided with the "three specific instances" given in the text. That brings us back to the rulings of the Board. Mr. Bose contends that this Niyoga or marriage rule having been brought to its attention both in 26 I A 153 (5) and in 42 I A 155 (6) and no adverse comment having been made that it has been inferentially accepted by the Board. The case in 42 I A 155 (6) was one in which the adoption was attacked on Nanda Pandit's application by analogy or Niyoga rules to adoption by females, and the passage reads as follows :

It was pointed out by Banerji, J., in Jai Singh Pal Singh v. Bijai Pal Singh (11), on this question as to whether a widow can lawfully adopt to her deceased husband a son of her own brother, that Nanda Pandita in the Dattaka Mimamsa extended to adoption by females the rule of Hindu Law that no one can be adopted as a son whose mother the adopter could not have legally married, an extension by Nanda Pandita which is not the base upon the authority of any of the Smritis or institutes of sages.

The Board negatived that particular extension; it rejected one 'gloss' of Nanda Pandit. It had already rejected others, e. g., by holding in 26 I A 113 (12) that the rule against the adoption of an only son is only monitory. It has in other cases negatived the extensions or rules by analogy of Nanda Pandit, when it considered them not to be warranted by the original text. The question is whether in this case, 42 I A 155 (6), while it has negatived the one extension, the Board must be taken to have adopted or approved the main rule. My own view is that no inference can be drawn either way and that the Board upon this particular argument of Nanda Pandit has not committed itself to an option. It appears to me that in the second case in 26 I A 153 (5) the Board were very careful to avoid entering upon that subject. With regard to the views of the Board on Nanda Pandit that generally I gather from the passage in 12 M I A 397 (4) and again in 26 I A 153 (5) (the first case) and the passage in 42 I A 155 (6), which I have just quoted, that while it is not open to any Court to discuss the reasonableness or the validity of any of the original texts, it is open, other things being equal, to consider whether the special argument of the commentator is to be accepted. On the other hand (i. e., disregarding the rulings of the Board) there is still left a considerable body of cases where the Niyoga rule has been accepted. Notwithstanding, the observations at the end of the judgment, it must, I think, be taken to be accepted in 6 Cal 41 (3). It has been accepted throughout in Madras. Subject to what I have said above, it is accepted in Allahabad. It has not been expressly negatived by the Bombay cases, although it may be said to have been negatived by implication having been limited into "three specific cases".

The question is, should I be justified in disregarding this volume of authority? I am guided in this matter by the course taken by the Judicial Committee itself in 26 I A 153 (5), where, whatever its own opinions may have been, the Board appears to have attached great weight to the fact that the Courts in India had proceeded for a considerable time upon one basis. In addition to the decided cases there is the opinion of authorities, such as Mr. Sutherland himself, Mr. Mayne, of the Hindu Judges, Mr. Banerjee in 17 All 294 (1), and the Hindu Judges who were parties to the decision in 11 Mad 49 (2). There are Mr. Strange, M. W. Siromoni, and of moderns, Sir Dinshaw Mulla, all accepting the Niyoga or marriage rule. I feel bound therefore to disregard my own opinion and to proceed upon the basis, that for this Court the Niyoga rule is part of the law of the land.

3. Adoption not too bad.—Assuming the Niyoga rule or law to have been contravened, what is the effect? This aspect of the case has been ably argued both by Mr. Bose on behalf of the plaintiffs, and by Mr. Sanyal from somewhat different points of view. For that reason I make my own analysis of the plaintiff's case. It seems to me that the results of a questionable adoption can be discussed under three heads. (1) What is the effect of questionable adoption qua adoption? (2) What is the effect of the father's power or rights over the son apart from the effect of the adoption itself, a point emphasised by Mr. Sanyal? (3) What is the effect of ceremonial, a point to which Mr. Bose originally attributed great importance?

(1) Effect of questionable adoption, qua adoption.—Having regard to the lines on which this aspect of the case was developed by Mr. Bose, it does not seem to me that the plaintiff's case in its final aspect is covered by the allegation in the plaint, that the adoption is void or illegal, and that the son cannot regain his place in his old family. In the plaint it is specifically alleged that the adoption "did not confer upon him the status of a son." In order to succeed, the plaintiffs have got to get him out of his old family and into the new family, but only half in, i. e., the best part of him sticking out into nothingness. In other words the plaintiffs seek to establish that there are three and not two positions: (1) unexceptionable adoption, (2) void adoption, and (3) an intermediate stage of quasi adoption. To describe these positions I shall use the phrases (1) adoption, (2) no adoption, and (3) quasi adoption.

(1) Adoption.—Adoption results where there is no defect or prohibition of any kind and also exists where there is a prohibition, but not a mandatory prohibition, as in the case (now) of the adoption of an only son.

(2) No adoption according to the authorities, takes place where the person has no capacity to adopt. The principal example of this class is a widow without the authority of her husband. It appeared to me that if the Niyoga bar is a mandatory prohibition it would in effect cause want of capacity, and therefore there would be no adoption. The plaintiffs do not want that because if no-adoption, X remains in his own family; he does not get into the new family at all.

(3) Quasi-adoption.—That brings me to "quasi-adoption," that is, an adoption but with the adoptee having only limited or qualified rights, i. e., a status inferior to that of an ordinary adopted son. This idea of quasi-adoption is difficult to one as unfamiliar with Hindu law as myself. It appears that Mr. Sanyal and Mr. Bose are right in their suggestion that there are certain cases of quasi-adoption, e. g., a Vaishya or Brahmin adopting one of the other twice-born castes. According to the texts and commentaries such a one is not entitled to inherit in his new family, nor is he entitled or liable to perform the shraddh of his adoptive parents or ancestors. He gets, or may get, certain rights of maintenance. At the same time he is regarded from the point of view of marriage and relationship as belonging to the adoptor's family. That is one case. The other case is where everything else is in order, caste, no prohibition, no other hindrance, but the forms of adoption are not properly gone through. There is a text in the Dattaka Mimansha to the following effect (v. 45).

He who adopts a son, without observing the rules ordained, should make him a participator of the rites of marriage, not a sharer of the wealth.

One question is whether that is only a recommendation, I might have so considered it, but that is not the point which I am dealing with at the moment. A question which rather intrigued me is whether such a person that is a person otherwise fit and proper to be adopted, but in respect of whom the proper ceremonies were not gone through, could perform a shraddh and offer pinda. Looking through some of the texts yesterday I obtained the impression that if merely the forms were not observed the adopted son would be capable of offering pinda. That would mean "adoption." However, unless the defendant's counsel wishes to show me anything on this point I shall assume that Mr. Bose is right in saying that the adoptee cannot do so. I have my misgivings. I shall assume therefore that these are two instances of quasi-adoption of persons becoming, according to Mr. Bose, "sons" but without the rights or ordinary status of sons. He points to the case of a blind natural son. The question in this case is whether a child, the adoption of which is prohibited by the Niyoga rule, constitutes another example of quasi adoption. Treating as I do the Niyoga bar upon the same basis as the "three specific instances", I am bound since the decision in 26 I A 153 (5) to treat the prohibition as mandatory. Mr. H. D. Bose contends, nevertheless, that is, notwithstanding the prohibition that the adoptee becomes the son of the adoptive father. That, as indicated, is not the position originally pleaded, but it is a point of law, and the case has been argued upon that basis.

On this point, i. e., "quasi-adoption" or "no adoption" Mr. H. D. Bose is met by certain body of authority. He distinguishes it upon this ground that the cases for the most part are instances of adoption by widows without their husband's authority. The case in 1 M H C R 363 (13) at p. 367 was certainly a case of a widow adopting without authority. 12 B H C R 364 (14), at p. 365, is a little more difficult. It was a case of a widow who was assumed to have the general power to give in adoption, but who had purported to give in adoption the eldest son, see pp. 393 and 397. It was laid down as a general proposition that if an adoption fails "upon any ground," this ground in particular, the status quo is restored, or as I should rather put it, the child never getting into the new family never gets out of the old. There is 39 Bom 528 (15) at p. 533 apparently again a question of invalidity by reason of want of authority, where the general proposition was reiterated. In 58 Cal 745 (16) at p. 749, where, so far as I can see, the objection was not inherent incapacity to adopt, but incapacity by reason of age, etc., of the adoptee, it is accepted as the general rule that an improper adoption does not extract a child from his own family. There is also the opinion of Mr. Sutherland which is referred to in a footnote and adopted by Mr. Strange at p. 83 of his Hindu Law. On the other hand the manner in which Sir Dinshaw Mulla formulates the rule, and its exceptions supports the contention of Mr.

Bose. Excep. (b) embodies the first species of quasi adoption that of a boy belonging to another caste. The author cites, however, 1 M H C R 363 (13), but as I read it, it is not an unequivocal authority for the proposition in support of which it is used. Excep. (a) of Mr. Mulla is based on the case in 1 Bullnois 137. I will deal with that under another heading.

The question therefore is whether adoption contrary to Niyoga prohibition and adoption by a widow without authority can be logically distinguished. I will deal with the question of gift, but it seems to me that the fact that the incapacity was not a general incapacity to take, but a particular incapacity to take the person whose adoption is challenged, is not logically distinguishable. If the prohibition is mandatory and in the one case there is no adoption, I cannot see why the same consequences do not ensue in the other. There is also the fact that all the cases are not of widows without authority and that it has been assumed that the principle is general. So far therefore as the adoption itself is concerned, my opinion, what it is worth, is on this breach of mandatory prohibition no-adoption, i. e., no extraction from the original family. I have not forgotten the passage upon which Mr. H. D. Bose placed so much reliance, the passage in Dattaka Chandrika, containing the phrase "through the extinction of his filial relation by gift alone", II, 19. I do not read "gift alone" to mean gift other than a gift in adoption. The chapter in the Dattaka Mimansa (Ch. 4) makes this perfectly clear, but I think that the author of the Dattaka Chandrika "by gift alone" did not intend invalid gift or gift prohibited but gift itself, i. e., without appropriate ceremonial. (2) I next come to the effect of the father's power in excess of the actual power to give in adoption.

The contention before me is something like this. The adoption may be bad, qua adoption, i. e., in the case of want of capacity to receive. There is no incapacity to give in adoption. Moreover there is in the father, obstacle-capacity to "give, sell or abandon his son" (Vasistha). Therefore whatever the effect may be, qua adoption, qua patria protestas, or qua powers of the father plus adoption this son can be excluded from his own family, notwithstanding that he is not included in the new family. For the purpose of the discussion I accept Mr. Sanyal and Mr. Bose's view of the text and the authorities. I assume that a father can do all this. I assume also that the son is a chattel. There is nothing remarkable about that. The point made was that being, e. g., an orange, the father can give, discard or destroy the orange. He can expel his son from his own family. (Incidentally it should be noted that in the translation of this text given in Mulla the word "disown" is used. It should be "abandon").

What struck me at the time and it is the view to which I still adhere, is this: that the child may be an orange, but he is an orange with a status. Mr. Bose has contended throughout that he has no status. That the child may have certain rights, e. g., under the Mitakshara system of law. I consider the human Hindu child to be both a physical object and also an ideal object, i. e., a son. The father can no doubt destroy in any manner he pleases the physical object. He can also destroy the ideal status (assuming such a thing to exist), but I think only by methods recognized or conceived. I shall assume that he can destroy or annul the status of a son by gift or sale. The view which appeals to me is this. If the father purports to annul the status by one recognized method, e. g., gift in adoption and fails it is not legitimate to say that he could have sold or could have killed the child, i. e., that he could have annulled the status by some other means or could have in any event destroyed the object itself. I think it wrong to import the absolute power to destroy the physical object or right to annul status by an alternative method in order to aid in establishing an exclusion of the child from his own family.

My view of course depends on whether there is such a thing as the status of a son. So far as I understand Hindu ideas, whatever the patria potestas, a male child is far from being a mere human cub. He is a son and a grandson and a great-grandson. His birth is not regarded as a purely physical or physiological phenomenon but is a spiritual and physical re-birth of the father and the father's ancestors. If that is the underlying idea, the child's status as a son is a matter of prime importance to the family, to the caste, and to everyone. A mechanical figure of speech is probably inadequate, but it suffices for my purpose to describe him as a cog in a certain machine. It appears to me that the effect of adoption is to take this cog out of one machine and to introduce it in its proper place in another machine.

Those are my views on the second point, the point whether by reason of the inherent powers a father can render, what would otherwise be no-adoption, a quasi-adoption. I was dealing yesterday when I broke off with the second ground upon which the plaintiffs base their contention that notwithstanding the mandatory prohibition against adoption, the child nevertheless is cut off from his natural family, i. e., the inherent right of the father to do what he likes with his own child, I expressed the view that there are two separate things, patria potestas and property in the son on the one hand, and status of a son on the other. I have to some extent given reasons for that view. The father can no doubt in the exercise of patria potestas destroy his child, the physical object; he can also by certain methods annul the status of son. I did not think that when adoption is attempted and failed, it is right to consider sonship annulled because the father might have exercised his patria potestas to destroy the child or resorted to other methods of annulling sonship.

There is one matter to be dealt with before I leave this point. It may be suggested that, after all, it is not necessary to resort either to theory of destruction of physical objects or to alternative methods of annulling sonship, because although the adoptor may not have been capable of receiving, the natural father was capable of giving, and therefore as adoption is gift there was in law a gift. That is based upon the proposition that under Dayabhaga law, acceptance is not necessary to constitute a valid gift. I accept that as a general proposition. In my view however, adoption is a very special form of gift and I am not prepared to accept the view that there can be an adoption without giving and taking. Whether it should be regarded as one form of onerous gift, or as a gift in a category of its own it is not necessary for me to determine. I have not forgotten that particular passage relied upon by Mr. Bose "by gift alone." I have already given my view of it.

(3) The last ground upon which the plaintiffs contend that there can be, and is in this case, a quasi-adoption, is the ceremonies. It is on this point that certain questions of the law of evidence arise. It is said in the first place that there can be no presumption that the ceremonies appropriate to a Brahmin were gone through after the so-called adoption, because in this case the fact sought to be inferred are intended to be used to nullify or invalidate the adoption. That point was taken both by the standing counsel and Mr. Mukherjee. It occurred to me at the time and at first sight it seemed attractive. S. 114 of our Evidence Act includes but is not limited to the presumption of "regularity." Moreover, I do not think that because the fact sought to be presumed will or may affect the validity in law of a certain transaction that is necessarily repugnant to the principle. I do not think that one need do more than consider whether in the normal course of things certain consequences are likely to happen. If they are, it is not material to consider whether they will validate or invalidate a transaction. In this particular case assuming the transaction to be invalid, you may infer that the parties knew it to be invalid, and therefore you may again infer that they would not go through the ceremonies appropriate to a valid adoption. That I think, having considered the matter, is the highest it can be put. I do not think you can say that if all the circumstances indicate that these ceremonies are likely to have been gone through, that you must reject that inference, because some argument will be adduced that by reason of those ceremonies, the antecedent adoption was bad in law.

The second point so far as the law of evidence is concerned was that the evidence of hearsay on the question of relationship which is taken from the English law and incorporated in S. 32, sub-S. 5, does not extend to evidence by hearsay of particular ceremonies or incidents and that so and so was present at such and such an occasion. I think this is a somewhat difficult matter and largely a question of fact and degree. The English rule is rather wide. I forget the precise expression, but I think it wide enough to include any incident relative to the fact of relationship. It is difficult to draw the line. I think that under the Indian law where the relationship created by adoption is of such importance and specifically included in the Act, evidence of incidents bearing more or less directly on the fact or otherwise of an adoption and its validity would be allowed subject of course to careful scrutiny as to value. At any rate that is the basis upon which I propose to decide this point and I assume therefore that the Upanayana ceremony and marriage were performed on Noni Mohan after his alleged adoption or purported adoption in the house of the adoptive father. Mr. Bose from the first attached considerable importance to this aspect of his case. It is certainly borne out in the passage in Mulla's Hindu Law, S. 510, sub-S. (a), already referred to.

With regard to authorities there is only this one case in 1. Boulnois. It is obvious that the material portion of this judgment is upon another point and that the opinion quoted did not form any part of the decision. It is merely an opinion of "a very learned person." As it is a matter which affects seriously the rights of an individual, unless it was supported by texts or direct authority, or reason, I do not feel inclined to follow it. So far as reason goes in support of the view expressed in S. 510 (a) of Mulla's Hindu Law the point made is this: that being a Brahmin, investing with the sacred thread constitutes a notional new birth. It must be a new birth in the adoptive family. Therefore, it is said, he is attached to the gotra of the adoptive family, and disconnected from the gotra of his own family. This is said to be so notwithstanding that the adoption is no-adoption. It occurs to one that the new birth must be a new birth as a son and a son to somebody. If it is a birth as a son in the gotra of his adoptive parents, one should logically arrive at the position of a son, and the retrospective removal of any blot on, or defect in the original adoption. That is one view.

On the other hand if there can be no adoption it can be argued that these ceremonies of re-birth were ineffective and therefore there was no re-birth at all. In such a case not having been reborn in the new family, the child would remain a son to his natural father. The plaintiffs have to steer clear of both those positions. In doing so Mr. Bose comes back to his position of quasi-sonship, of part affiliation. Unless there is clear authority in support I do not propose to take that view. In point of fact the authorities support the opposite view, namely that if the adoption is no-adoption, the ceremonies performed in the new family are of no effect. Cf. 1 M H C R 363 (13) and 43 Mad 876 (7) at 891 and 893. To summarise: Left to myself, I would (1) reject the Dattaka Chandrikas's Niyoga explanation, (2) reject the expansion or development, of this represented "Virudha Sambhandha" of Nanda Pundit, (3) a fortiori, I would have rejected the expansion of that "Virudha Sambhandha" into the "prohibited degrees" of Sutherland, (4) I would in any event have treated the Niyoga rule as recommendatory except in the "three specified cases," (5) I should have taken the view that if on the other hand a mandatory prohibition, adoption is no-adoption, and not quasi-adoption.

Having regard to the authority referred to I feel bound: (1) To accept the Niyoga or marriage rule as part of the law and as wider than and including the "three specified cases". Those three specified cases having been treated by the Privy Council as mandatory I must treat the whole rule as mandatory. (2) On the other hand the authorities allow me to take the view that assuming the Niyoga rule to operate, the result of its transgression will be no-adoption. In other words I reject, so far as this class of person (brother's daughter's son) is concerned, the quasi-adoption theory. (3) With regard to the result of no adoption I follow both my own inclination and the authorities in deciding that there being no adoption the child will remain affiliated to its own natural father. That is the result.

I ought to mention one argument put before me by Mr. H. K. Bose that in the particular circumstances of this case the result would be not the child Z is filius nullius, but that the child is Dyamushan, the son of both A and B. The specific argument addressed to me is this: that the plaintiffs have given evidence of certain ceremonies performed after adoption. They have not alleged nor suggested that the tonsure ceremonies were performed in the adoptive family. Therefore, it is said I should infer that it was performed in the natural family, and in those circumstances some authority has been shown to me to show that the child might become attached to both. It is an ingenious point, but having regard to my other views, I do not propose to offer an opinion of my own upon it. I am not clear that the state of the evidence would allow me to find that any particular ceremony was performed in the natural family so as to found a double affiliation. I should also say that estoppel in any form does not form one of the issues before me, and has not been argued. After expressing the above conclusions on the point of law involved in the first three issues I have ascertained from the Advocate-General, who appears with Mr. Bose for the plaintiff, that he desires rather than go on and complete his evidence on the other issues including the issues as to title, as to whether his clients are reversioners in the event of my decision being wrong he would prefer to have the case adjourned and appeal on the point of law. I am perfectly agreeable to this course, and in this case, speaking for myself, I consider it desirable. Counsel for all parties also agree to that course as the most convenient. In those circumstances I will dismiss the suit with costs now on the preliminary points, and should the plaintiffs succeed on the appeal I shall always be ready to put the case back on my list for trial and to hear further evidence on the other issues. I am taking this course at the request of counsel for all parties.

I have heard the Advocate-General on the question of costs. He submits that having won on certain of the issues or on a portion of the case, his clients should not have to pay the entire costs, and he reminded me that there are a large number of defendants, who are separately represented. As regards the last point, I certainly regret that the plaintiffs should have to pay those costs, but in such a case as this the defendants are bound to be represented here and entitled to be separately represented. With regard to the first point, although the case has been split up for the purpose of analysis, the point sought to be established in order to destroy the title of the defendants is really one, and I feel I should not be justified in making any other order. There is a special argument addressed to me with regard to the costs of the Receiver, Mr. Khaitan, for whom Mr. Chowdhuri appears. At an early stage of the case counsel for the receiver asked to be dismissed from the action on the ground that no notice under S. 80 had been served upon him. I did not perhaps treat the matter with the seriousness which it deserved, but I do remember that counsel for the plaintiff was not prepared to have the suit against the receiver dismissed upon that ground and did not suggest that he was not a necessary party and should be dismissed. In those circumstances I should think personally whether he was or was not a necessary party; the plaintiffs having made him a party should pay the costs. But without having considered the matter in any detail I assume the plaintiffs were justified in making him a party since this is an ejectment and title suit in which they claim possession of land in the hands of the receiver. It is pointed out to me that in the written statement filed by the receiver the title of the plaintiffs was not specifically denied, but the position appears to me this: the plaintiffs have to prove their title, and on the views which, however wrongly I have given them, they failed to do so.

Barisal Loan Office Ltd., Barisal—
Defendant 1—Appellant.

v.

Satish Chandra Das—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Appeal No. 171 of 1934, Decided on 9th May 1935, from appellate order of Addl. Dist. Judge, First Court, Backargunge, D/- 30th November 1933.

* Transfer of Property Act (1882), Section 55 (1) (f)—Sale of properties—Vendor not in a position to give possession of some of them and vendee not getting possession—Suit for compensation—Held clause in sale deed did not exclude statutory obligation of vendor under S. 55 (1) (f).

A sale in respect of several properties was executed by the defendant to the plaintiff. Plaintiff was not put in possession of some of the properties and he sued for compensation. The sale deed provided that if any defect in title was found by the vendee subsequently, the vendor will not be liable, and that if the vendee did not give possession he should himself take steps to do so and that the vendor would help him. But it was found that at the time of sale itself, the vendor did not have possession of the properties in question and he had lost all right to obtain possession of same:

Held: that the above clauses did not exonerate the defendant from the statutory liability under S. 55 (1) (f). [P 13 C 1, P 14 C 2]

Costello, J.—The suit out of which this second appeal arises was brought by one Satish Chandra Das against the Barisal Loan Office Limited to recover compensation in respect of certain properties purchased by him from the defendants. The plaintiff had purchased a large number of properties from the Barisal Loan Office Limited by a registered Kobala dated the 2nd Aswin 1335 corresponding to 18th September 1928, for a sum of Rs. 21,900. The Barisal Loan Office Limited had purchased these properties at a sale which took place in certain execution proceedings arising out of a decree in a mortgage suit which the defendants themselves had instituted in order to enforce the mortgage on the properties in question. The Barisal Loan Office Limited was, therefore, in the position of being not only the judgment-creditors, but also the purchasers at the auction which took place in execution proceedings.

The plaintiff was claiming in the suit compensation in respect of six of the properties comprised in the Kobala on the ground that he could not get possession of those properties from the defendants who were the vendors. The position was that the Barisal Loan Office Limited, the purchasers at the auction held by the Court, had never taken delivery of possession of these six properties and that long before the date of sale of these properties to the plaintiff the defendants' right to take possession through Court had become extinguished by virtue of the provisions of Art. 181, Limitation Act. The plaintiff made the case that as he could not get possession of these six properties and as the Barisal Loan Office Limited was not in a position to put him in possession of those properties he was entitled to have back so much of the purchase price as represented the value of the six properties in question. The defence set up in the suit, briefly stated, was that the defendants had given no guarantee of title and, on the other hand, it had been expressly stipulated in the kobala itself that the defendants as the vendors should not be made liable for any defect of title concerning the properties which they purported to sell to the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the case accepted the view put forward on behalf of the defendants and he dismissed the suit. The plaintiff thereupon appealed from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Barisal to the Additional District Judge, 1st Court, Bakargunj and it is against the judgment of that Court that this appeal comes to us. The learned Additional District Judge has summed up the matter in these words :

In my opinion there is nothing in the Kobala which stands in the way of the plaintiff claiming his common law right to get back his money which he paid for property of which he cannot get possession and which the vendor was at the date of the sale legally precluded from putting him in possession.

He accordingly finds that the plaintiff was entitled to compensation and he has made an order that the case should go back to the trial Court for assessment of the compensation. Mr. Gupta appearing on behalf of the defendants appellants has argued that there is sufficient provision in the kobala itself to exclude the operation of the provisions of S. 55, sub-S. 1 (f), T. P. Act. That subsection when taken in conjunction with the operative part of the section is to the following effect :

In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the buyer and the seller of immoveable property respectively are subject to the liabilities, and have the rights mentioned in the rules next following or such of them as are applicable to the property sold. The seller is bound to give, on being so required, the buyer or such person as he directs, such possession of the property as its nature admits.

It is not disputed in this case that the plaintiff, the purchaser of the properties set forth in the schedule to the Kobala, has not been put in possession of the six properties or parcels of land which are the subject-matter of the present suit. Moreover it is admitted that at the time of the conveyance the vendors themselves had never been in possession of these properties and had lost all rights to get possession of the properties by legal process. The position therefore was that on 18th September 1928, the vendors were unable to comply with the provisions of S. 55 (1) (f), T. P. Act. It is argued, however, on behalf of the appellants that their obligation to comply with the provisions of that section does not and did not exist at the time of the Kobala by reason of certain provisions contained in the document and in this connexion Mr. Gupta has relied upon two passages contained in the Kobala. The first of those passages appears at p. 5 of the copy of the translation which has been supplied to us and is in these words:

No objection or excuse thereto by anybody will be accepted. Or if it transpires that no possession has been taken according to law in any of the properties then you may, if you think necessary take at your own cost possession therein according to legal procedure; and if necessary, I shall render you help in taking such possession, at your cost and Tadbir.

Mr. Gupta has argued that that passage indicates that it was common knowledge between the parties to this conveyance that there were certain properties of which the vendors had not acquired possession and this provision was inserted in the Kobala to cover that position and to provide that the plaintiff as purchaser should himself take such steps as were necessary to get possession of those particular properties with such assistance as the defendants—the vendors—were able to render to him. In my opinion that passage is of no assistance whatever to the defendants in this case because it now appears—and indeed Mr. Gupta has admitted on behalf of the clients—that the properties which are the subject-matter of the suit are comprised in the list set forth in Sch. Ka of the Kobala. That appears from a passage in the earlier part of the document which is in these words:

Barisal Loan Office Limited Company on 22nd June 1917 in Execution Case 74 of 1916 arising out of Mortgage Suit No. 845 of 1907 of the 2nd Sub-Judge's Court of Barisal and on 14th December 1920 in Execution Case arising therefrom under S. 90, numbered as Execution Case No. 58 of 1920 and on 20th January 1909 in Execution Case No. 91 of 1908 arising out of Mortgage Suit No. 2 of 1897 of the 1st Sub-Judge's Court, Barisal, purchased at Court sales the shares described of properties Nos. 1-38 of Sch. (ka) below within District Backergunge, and after the confirmation of the said sales by the Courts concerned, the said Company on taking out sale certificates and executing writs for delivery of possession took possession in the said purchased properties through Court, and has been in ownership and possession thereof by receipt of the rent from the tenants of the said Mahals in exercise of the right and possession arising by virtue of the said auction-purchasers, and so far as the khas lands are concerned, by receipt of rent and crops &c, in khas.

There is a definite statement that the whole of the 38 properties with which we are concerned in the present appeal had been taken into possession by the defendants as auction-purchasers and that therefore they were in a position to give possession of those 38 properties to the plaintiff as purchaser under the kobala. In those circumstances it seems to me that the passage at p. 5 which I have read has no application and certainly can be of no assistance to the present appellants. There is however another passage in the kobala which at first sight seems to afford some basis for the contention put forward on behalf of the defendants at the trial. That passage appears at p. 6 of the copy of the translation of the Kobala and it is in these words :

As regards the hastabad (gross collection) which is shown as stith you have got the same checked by reference to the settlement papers and the company's collection papers. If for any reason in future a lesser amount than the same be found as hastabad, or if any defect in title be found with respect to any property, then the company will not be liable therefor. You are purchasing this property being all along cognizant of the full particulars of the mahal and after making a prayer for purchasing the property without any investigation, and in these circumstances the loan office will not be liable to you for any such reason as aforesaid.

The actual words which have been stressed by Mr. Gupta and upon which he mainly relies are these :

If any defect in title be found with respect to any property then the company will not be liable therefor.

Mr. Gupta in his argument has contended that this saving clause exonerating the defendants from all liability for any defect in title must be taken as covering the position where there is not only a defect in title but a complete want of title. Mr. Gupta, has invited us to come to the conclusion that the position in the present case in effect is this : that with regard to the six properties in question the plaintiff has discovered that there was total want of title in the vendors and therefore, says Mr. Gupta, by virtue of the provisions in the passage in the kobala the defendants are not liable to pay compensation to the plaintiff. It seems to me that the fallacy of the argument lies in this, because the passage in question begins with the words "If for any reason in future" we ought to take it that this clause can only come into operation on the supposition that the plaintiff had been put into possession of all the 38 properties and had subsequently discovered that as regards one or more or even all of them there was a defect in the vendors' title. In my opinion the language of this clause by no means excludes the statutory obligation that lay on the defendants to comply with the provisions of Section 55 (1) (f), T. P. Act. The learned Additional District Judge refers to a case, 8 I C 91 (1), and on the authority of that case he says "the contract must be clear and unequivocal". Then he quotes a passage from an English case :

When a vendor sells property under stipulations which are against common law right and places the purchaser in a position less advantageous than that in which he otherwise would be, it is incumbent on the vendor to express himself with reasonable clearness, if he uses expressions reasonably capable of misconstruction; if he uses ambiguous words, the purchaser may generally construe them in the manner most advantageous to himself.

The English case which is referred to must be the case of (1906) 1 Ch 316 (2). On the strength of those two authorities the learned Additional District Judge says this :

The question is whether this statutory right of the buyer and the corresponding statutory obligation of the seller was in the present case taken away by any contract between the buyer and the seller.

In my judgment neither of the passages which I have recited nor any other provisions in the kobala of 18th September 1928 are sufficiently explicit and sufficiently free from ambiguity to justify in holding that the defendants are exonerated from their obligation to comply with S. 55, T. P. Act. It has to be borne in mind that owing to the defendants' failure to take the proceedings prescribed by the provisions of O. 21, R. 95, Civil P. C., for the purpose of obtaining possession of all the properties which they had purchased at the auction sale they at the time of the kobala had not obtained possession of the six properties now in dispute and they had for all time lost the right to obtain possession of those properties by any reasonable means and therefore they could not give to the plaintiff possession of those properties and at no time either when the kobala was executed or subsequently were they or could they be in a position to assist the plaintiff to obtain possession of those properties. For those reasons I am of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed with costs, hearing fee five gold mohurs.

D. N. Mitter, J. — This is an appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of 24 Parganas, dated 19th September 1930, by which he granted probate in respect of a will of a lady of the name of Nitya Kali Debi. The will is said to have been executed on 25th May 1918 and was subsequently registered. The lady lived for nearly 11 years after the execution of the will, and died on 15th December 1929. The will is attested by a number of witnesses. Two of them were pleaders of Alipur Court and one of them was Dr. Satyendra Nath Roy a well-known physician of the city. The will is to be found printed at p. 50, part 2, of the paper book, and its provisions are to the effect that a small provision for maintenance should be left with regard to some members of the family of testatrix and the residue of the estate should go to the two daughters of her deceased brother, Sm. Malina Bala Debi and Sm. Latika Bala Debi. There is also a further provision for her son-in-law Dasarathi Mukherjee who is one of the executors to the Will. It appears that the husband of Nitya Kali Debi, Pashupati Ganguly died in 1890. He was practising as a Mukhtar in the Court of Alipur and amassed considerable fortune. After the death of Pashupati a dispute arose between Pashupati's surviving brother Mohendra Chandra Ganguly who was also a pleader of Alipur and Nitya Kali with regard to the joint estate and a suit for partition of the estate was instituted in 1909, and the partition suit resulted in a compromise.

It was arranged by that compromise that certain properties would belong absolutely to her and that she would be holding them as her stridhan. By her will she has made disposition with regard to her stridhan properties. The attestation and execution of the will have not been challenged before us in appeal. The only question which has been argued before us by Mr. Chakravarty is that the will was induced by undue influence by Dasarathi, who according to the recitals in the will was the person who was looking after her properties to a large extent and had benefited her in various ways. On this recital it was urged that Dasarathi was in a position of active confidence with respect to this lady and therefore the burden lay on the propounder of establishing the good faith of the transaction. In this connection reliance is placed on S. 111, Evidence Act, to support this contention. We have examined the evidence given on behalf of the propounder including the evidence of Dasarathi which show that no sort of influence was exercised by him over this lady in order to induce her to make the provision giving 1/3rd of the property she possessed in favour of Dasarathi. As a matter of fact the appeal has now been confined to those properties bequeathed to Dasarathi and it is said that probate should be refused with respect to the 1/3rd of her properties in respect of which there is a bequest in favour of Dasarathi. Our attention has been drawn also to the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in support of the position that it is for the propounder who has taken the benefit of the provision of the will to remove any suspicion with reference to the execution of the will, and with reference to the due understanding of the will by the testatrix. It is said that the burden in the present case is more heavy because the testatrix is a lady advanced in years, weak in health and easily liable to be influenced by a person who was looking after her affairs.

It is rather unfortunate for the appellant that what has been elucidated in the evidence by the cross-examination of Dasarathi does not disclose any circumstance which would show that he actively participated in the matter of the execution of the will or in giving instruction in connection with the contents of the will. It is not suggested, as it was in the case before the Privy Council, viz., the case of Sarat Kumari Debi v. Sakhi Chand (1), that a particular provision in favour of Dasarathi did not exist in the draft of the will. It appears from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that a faint suggestion was made before him to the effect that the probate should be refused at least with regard to this portion of the will. The Subordinate Judge in his judgment rightly says this:

It has neither been made out that any part of the will need be deleted by reason of its being vitiated by fraud, coercion, undue influence or concealment of facts.

The question as to whether S. 111, Evidence Act, would apply to a case of will may be considered and possibly having regard to the general language of the statute the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction would lie on the propounder. In England there is a conflict of opinion on the point. See the remarks of Sir John Woodroffe in his commentary on S. 111, Evidence Act, in particular the last paragraph. But the language of the Indian Statute is general and we think S. 111 applies to the case of wills. We have examined the evidence, and having regard to the evidence in the case it is difficult to say that that burden has not been discharged.

1. 1929 P. C. 113 I. C. 471=56 I. A. 62=8 Pat 382 (P. C.).

In this case we asked the defendant-appellant to show any evidence on his side which has been tendered in this case and which might show that any undue influence was exercised on the testatrix. No such positive evidence is either forthcoming. In these circumstances we have to accept the testimony of Dasarathi. Besides, the learned Judge of the Court below had an additional advantage of watching the demeanour of the witnesses and of seeing Dasarathi himself. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary we do not think that we should be justified in holding that the will is vitiated by undue influence. The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs—hearing fee 5 gold mohurs.

Lort-Williams, J.—This is a reference under S. 438, Criminal P. C. The learned Advocate-General on behalf of the Crown does not oppose it. The accused in this case was charged and convicted of an offence under S. 6, Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930; that is to say, he was a person in respect of whom an order had been made under Sub.S. (1), S. 2 who had wilfully disobeyed the order. He pleaded guilty to this offence and appealed to the Sessions

Judge on the question of sentence only. The Judge came to the conclusion that the conviction could not be supported; but in view of the accused's plea of guilty, he has made this reference. Now, S. 2 of the Act provides that the local Government may make certain orders as to notification of residence and such other matters with regard to a person about whom there are reasonable grounds for the local Government to believe that he has acted in contravention of the provisions of the Arms Act or has offended in certain other ways. It is provided in that section that such orders shall be received by the local Government at the end of one year from the date of the making of the order, and shall not remain in force for more than one year unless upon such review the local Government directs their continuance. The order in this case was made on 7th January 1933 and was amended on 31st May 1933. There was a further order on 14th June 1934. Since there was no review of the orders dated 7th January 1933 and 31st May 1933 within the time required by law, the order was no longer in force at the time when the accused was alleged to have disobeyed it on 2nd July 1934.

The result is that the conviction and sentence cannot stand. We accordingly accept the reference, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the accused be set at liberty forthwith.

Birendra Kumar De—for Appellant.

Sarat Chandra Basak and Priyanath Dutt—for Respondents.

Mukerji, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption. It is not disputed that the Mahomedan law of pre-emption applies to the case though the parties themselves are Hindus. The following are the facts: The sale in connection with which the plaintiff is seeking to enforce his right to pre-empt is evidenced by a deed which was presented for registration at the registration office on the 30th day of August. Before that date the vendor, on receipt of Rs. 50 out of the total amount of consideration which was fixed at Rs. 500, had put the vendee in possession. On the date abovementioned the vendor admitted execution and thereupon the Sub-Registrar made the usual endorsements on the deed. The necessary entries and copies were thereafter made and the final endorsement that the deed had been registered was made on the 3rd day of September. The Munsif decreed the suit. On appeal by the defendants the Subordinate Judge reversed that decision and dismissed the suit, and his decree has been affirmed by Henderson, J. It has been found that the first talab or demand was performed on the 4th day of September, and the suit has been dismissed on the ground that there was delay in such performance. On that, two questions at once arise: 1st when did the sale take place? 2nd, when did the plaintiff come to know of the sale?

So far as the first question is concerned there may be three points of time at one or other of which the sale can possibly be taken to have been effected: the first is the point of time at which a part of the consideration money having been paid the vendor put the vendee in possession; the second, when the transfer became operative under S. 54, T. P. Act, and the third, any other point of time at which the parties may have intended the sale to be effective. Of the third of these contingencies there was no indication in the pleadings. And therefore upon the view most favourable to the plaintiff it is second point of time aforesaid that should be regarded. This gives rise to the question, when was the deed 'registered' within the meaning of S. 3, T. P. Act. On the question whether the executant of a deed compulsorily registrable has any locus paenitentiae to resile, by reason of the fact that the title under it is incomplete for want of registration, it has been held and that proposition appears to have been affirmed by the Judicial Committee that incompleteness due to want of registration is not a thing of which the executant can take any advantage, and that if the instrument is otherwise complete, the executant is to be regarded as having done everything that was in his power to complete the transfer and to make it effective, because registration does not depend upon the executant's consent but is the act of the officer appointed by the purpose, 59 Cal 1176 (1); 54 I A 89 (2). But as regards third parties the point of time at which the transfer is to be effective is when the deed of transfer can be said to be a registered deed. The question has been considered in 24 Mad LJ 664 (3), in which after referring to the relevant sections of the Registration Act the learned Judges observed:

Briefly then, registration includes the getting made and the making of certain endorsements, making the certification of registration and the copying of the documents in the register book and the filing of the map or plan, if any, in Book 1. The substantial portion is apparently complete with the making of the certificate of registration. It is these that S. 49 prescribes should have taken place with reference to the document before it can affect any immoveable property to which it relates or be received in evidence.

We agree in the view thus expressed and on that view we must hold that the sale took place on the 3rd September. As regards the second question it may be stated at once that the case which the defendants made has failed. But it is with the plaintiff's case on the point with which we are more concerned. His case, by which he sought to establish the element of promptness in the shariat ceremonies, was that he first heard of the sale on the 4th September and that as soon as he heard of it he made the talab first at the Bar Library and then in the house of the defendant. That case, shortly stated, is that the plaintiff's officer Nagendra came to Sylhet on the 3rd September and on going to the registration office on the 4th to inquire whether the kobala had been executed and registered he was told by a deed-writer that it had been, and that he promptly went to the Bar Library and saw the plaintiff who immediately made the talab. The Subordinate Judge has shown the utter falsity of this story and has found that the plaintiff must have come to know of the registration before the time alleged and that the talab at the Bar Library was stage-managed. The element of promptness having been found against the plaintiff, his suit has been dismissed, and on that finding, which is essentially a finding of fact, it has been rightly dismissed. The appeal fails and must be dismissed. There will be no order as to costs of this appeal.

In a trial for an offence under S. 366, I. P. Failure to warn the jury about the danger of convicting the accused on the girl's evidence only amounts to a non-direction, which vitiates the trial. So also where the Lort Williams, J.—In this case, a rule was issued to show cause why the convictions and sentences passed upon the petitioners under S. 366, I. P. C., should not be set aside. The learned Sessions Judge was asked to submit his explanation of a statement made by him in para. 3 of his judgment to this effect : "It has not been contended that there was any misdirection or non-direction on points of law" and with special reference to para. 2 of the petition in revision in which a number of points were specified, which had been pressed upon the attention of the learned Judge on behalf of the accused. The first of these points was that the Assistant Sessions Judge, when charging the jury, had failed to direct them on the question of necessity of corroboration of the girl's evidence; further, that the Assistant Sessions Judge had failed to direct the attention of the jury to certain evidence given by the girl to the effect that she had not objected to going with the two accused, which was obviously very material upon the question of abduction. There were other points referred to in the petition with which it is not necessary to me to deal. The learned Sessions Judge seems to have misunderstood the direction given by this Court, because in his explanation he says that :

As there is ample corroboration (for what it is worth) of the girl's evidence, the question of the corroboration of the girl's evidence does not arise as a point of law.

Then he refers to certain evidence which, in our opinion, does not amount to the kind of corroboration required by law. The point to which we desired to draw the learned Judge's attention was that if the Assistant Sessions Judge had failed to direct the jury on the question of the necessity of corroboration and had failed to warn them about the danger of convicting the accused on the girl's evidence alone, in sexual cases such as this, that was a non-direction which vitiated the trial. It seems clear, therefore, taking into consideration the evidence of the girl to which our attention has been drawn and the charge to the jury, that the statement in para. 3 of the learned Sessions Judge's judgment was erroneous, because it had been clearly contended before him that there was misdirection and non-direction on points of law, namely, the failure of the learned Judge to give the jury the necessary caution which has been referred to by this Court on many occasions and is specifically stated in 38 C W N 108 (1). The head-note of that case states that it is extremely dangerous and permissible only in exceptional cases to convict a man of a sexual offence on the uncorroborated testimony of the complainant. The rule must be properly emphasised in the charge to the jury. It is unnecessary to repeat all that was said on that occasion, except to say that the Judge should point out to the jury that they are entitled, if they please, to convict the accused upon the uncorroborated testimony of the girl, but that it is dangerous to do so in cases dealing with sexual offences such as rape, abduction and similar cases, and that only in exceptional cases should they convict upon the uncorroborated testimony of the girl.

Now, in the present case, the girl said in her evidence that she had been beaten by her husband, because she had not said her prayers, and had gone out of the house to a tank, where she met the two petitioners. They told her that her husband would beat her again, and so they would take her to her Nani's bari if she would come away with them. After they had repeated this statement, she agreed to go and they took her away from that place. Eventually she was handed over to three other persons who kept her confined and raped her. But no charge of rape was made against them. The present accused were charged under Ss. 363 and 366, I. P. C., and the jury brought in a majority verdict of guilty under S. 366, the majority being one of three to two. In cross-examination the girl said that she had left her husband once or twice before and had gone to her father's house. She was further asked whether she got frightened and told the accused to take her to her Nani's bari and she said "Yes". She also said that she could not stand being beaten any more and that she did not object to going with them, that she went of her own accord and that neither of the two petitioners ever made any immoral proposal before. Before this occurrence she had never been in her husband's house for more than 15 or 16 days at a time. The learned Assistant Sessions Judge failed altogether to give any warning to the jury upon the question of corroboration. Apparently, he forgot all about the necessity of giving this direction: Nor did he direct them as to whether there was evidence corroborating her statement, of the kind required by law, that is to say, evidence independent of her own statements. So far as the learned Assistant Sessions Judge gave any direction at all, it appears to have been misleading, because the evidence of Meher, Marfat and Samir might have been thought by the jury to be corroborative evidence upon the question of abduction. This evidence consisted of statements made by the girl to them and, therefore, was not the kind of corroboration required by law.

These being the circumstances of this, it is obvious that the convictions cannot be allowed to stand. In view of the fact that the Magistrate originally considered the complaint of the girl to be suspicious, and in view of the evidence of the girl to which I have referred, about her going away willingly and, further, in view of the fact that it was a majority verdict of 3 to 2, we do not think it necessary to send this case back for a retrial. The convictions and sentences are set aside and the accused acquitted. The accused, who are on bail, will be discharged from the bail bonds.

Calcutta Municipal Act (3 of 1923), Ss. 488, 534—Provisions of S. 534 indicate necessity of prompt action—Delay in starting proceedings—Corporation must establish that they are within prescribed period.

The provisions of S. 534 indicate the necessity for prompt action and delay in prosecuting an offence under the Act is as little to the interest of the Corporation as to that of the rate-payers. [P 20 C 2]

Where therefore Corporation seeks to prosecute certain persons under S. 488 of the Act and there is no evidence whatever on the record to show when the offence was first brought to its notice, it is the duty of the Corporation to establish that the pleadings although begun at a late stage are still within the period prescribed by the law. Bartley, J.—This rule was issued on the Municipal Magistrate of Calcutta, calling on him to show cause why his order dated 20th May 1935 striking off proceedings against the other opposite parties to the rule, on the ground that they were barred by limitation, should not be set aside. The material facts are that on 5th September 1933, the Magistrate, on an application by the Calcutta Corporation, passed orders under S. 363, Calcutta Municipal Act, directing demolition of certain structures erected by the opposite parties, within three months. These orders were not complied with, and on 12th March 1935, about 18 months later, an application was made on behalf of the Corporation to prosecute the offenders under S. 488 of the Act. This was refused, on the ground that further proceedings were barred by limitation.

Now under S. 534 of the Act, no person is liable to punishment for an offence unless the complaint is made within three months of its commission, or, in the case of a continuing offence, of the date on which the offence was first brought to the notice of the Executive Officer or of the Corporation. In the present case, there is no evidence whatever on record to show when the offence was first brought to notice, and in view of their delay in taking action, it was obviously the duty of the Corporation to establish in the first place, that proceedings begun at such a late stage were still within the period of limitation prescribed by law. The provisions of S. 534 indicate the necessity of prompt action, and delays such as we have noted in the present case is as little to the interest of the Corporation as to that of the rate-payers. This rule must accordingly be discharged, and we direct accordingly.

Order.—This rule was issued by this Court on the District Magistrate of Nadia as also on the opposite party to show cause why an order passed by the learned Sessions Judge of Nadia on 8th July 1935, setting aside, on appeal, the order of a Magistrate directing an amount of money to be returned to the opposite party should not be set aside.

It would appear that in the trial before the Magistrate, the accused persons placed on their trial were acquitted of the charge under S. 411, I. P. C.; under S. 258, Criminal P. C., and the Magistrate directed that the money found with the accused in the course of a search was to be paid to the petitioner Banuruddin Biswas. There was an appeal to the Sessions Judge against the aforesaid order passed by the Magistrate under S. 517, Criminal P. C., relating to disposal of the money, and on appeal the order of the Magistrate was set aside. The Sessions Judge in allowing the appeal, directed that the money found with the appellants before him must be returned to them. The merits of the case in which the order of the Sessions Judge was passed are not in question before us in the rule.

It was urged in support of the rule issued by this Court that there was no provision in law for appeal from the order of the Magistrate, the Sessions Judge acted illegally and without jurisdiction in reversing the order of the Magistrate passed under S. 517, Criminal P. C.

The decision of the question whether the Sessions Judge had jurisdiction to entertain and hear the appeal from the order for disposal of property, although there was and there could be no appeal to the Judge from an order of acquittal passed by the Magistrate, passing the order for disposal of property, depends upon the interpretation of the words "any Court of appeal" as used in S. 520, Criminal P. C. These words are not limited to a Court to which an appeal against the conviction or acquittal is or may be pending; orders made under S. 517, Criminal P. C., were independent of the question of conviction or acquittal in a case before a Criminal Court. It was held by this Court so far back as the year 1878, in the cases of 3 Cal 379 (1), that the words "Court of appeal" in S. 419, Criminal P. C., 1872, which has now been replaced by S. 520, of the Code of 1898, that the words "Court of appeal" were not limited to a Court before which an appeal from a conviction was pending; it might very often happen, that the question of the propriety of an order for disposal of property produced before the Court might in no way concern the convicted person; and it was thought unreasonable to put such a construction on the provision relating to appeals from orders relating to disposal of property as could make the power of the Judge to modify, alter or annul a Magistrate's order affecting property contingent on the accident whether another person has or has not chosen to appeal. The reason for the decision referred to above, with which we are in entire agreement, was adopted by a Full Bench of the High Court at Rangoon, in 7 Rang 345 (2). The rule underlying the decision of this Court in Joggeswar's case (1), mentioned above, has also been recently recognised by the High Court at Bombay to be sound, in 56 Bom 369 (3), in which case a Full Bench of that Court overruled a previous decision laying down that the words "Court of appeal" implied the Court to which an appeal lay in the particular case, and not the Court to which appeals would ordinarily lie from the case deciding the particular case. The case before the High Court of Bombay was a case of acquittal by the Magistrate.

As indicated above, in consonance with the decision of this Court in 3 Cal 379 (1), we hold that the words "Court of appeal" as used in S. 520, Criminal P. C., are not limited to a Court before which an appeal from an order of acquittal could lie, and the jurisdiction of the Court of appeal to deal with an order for disposal of property in the case before us, was not dependent upon the question in what Court an appeal from an order of acquittal might have been brought, which, in point of fact, had not been brought. The rule is discharged; the order of the Sessions Judge, directing return of money passed on appeal is affirmed.

Judgment.—The suit in which this appeal has arisen, was instituted by the plaintiffs, as the purchasers of a Patni Taluk, for establishment of their title to the lands in suit, for khas possession of the same, as also for realisation of mesne profits. The entry in the finally published record of rights was against the plaintiffs, inasmuch as it showed defendants 1 and 2 had a nishkar, called an upajibika carved out of the patni, purchased by the plaintiffs, and that the defendants were in possession in that nishkar right. The case of the plaintiffs was that the lands never appertained to any upajibika or nishkar, and even if defendants 1 and 2 possessed the lands on assertion of a nishkar right, that possession could not affect the plaintiffs' right to get possession of the lands appertaining to the patni purchased by him, free from all incumbrances.

On the pleadings of the parties, the issues raised in the suit relevant for the purpose of this appeal, were these: Are the lands in suit covered by nishkar upajibika as alleged by the defendant? Can the plaintiff get khas possession of the suit lands? Can the plaintiff get any mesne profits?

The Courts below decided the case against the contesting defendants in the suit, and directed khas possession to be delivered to the plaintiff with the exception of lands in the possession of defendants 11 to 15.

In exhaustive judgments dealing with the evidence in the case, both documentary and oral, the Court of first instance, as also the Court of appeal below, came to the conclusion that the lands in suit were not covered by the nishkar upajibika set up by the defendants. On this part of the case, the question raised before us related to this, that the onus of proof was wrongly placed on the contesting defendants in the suit, so far as the existence of the nishkar right was concerned. We are wholly unable to give effect to the contention urged in this behalf and we agree in the view expressed by the lower appellate Court, that the question on whom the initial onus lay was of no importance, after the parties had full opportunity of placing all evidence in support of their respective cases. Strong comments were made, in support of this appeal, on certain documents which negatived the right claimed by the contesting defendants and the existence of the nishkar set up by them; and it was said that the Court of Appeal was not right in holding that the khatian in favour of the defendants could not be deemed to be correct inasmuch as the sanad and the Hukumnama on which the defendants mainly based their title could not be treated as valid and genuine documents creating a lakheraj. It was contended that there was other evidence, which supported the case for the defendants. It was not possible for us to appreciate the arguments advanced before us in this part of the case, as the Courts below have concurrently arrived at the conclusion on all the evidence in the case, that the nishkar interest set up by the contesting defendants had not been established and that the entry in the settlement record upon which the defendants relied could not therefore be held to be correct. Arguments based on some of the documents used as evidence in the case were advanced in support of the appeal; but there can be no question that the conclusions on evidence, partly documentary, are as much binding on us on in second appeal, as conclusions on oral evidence. On the findings arrived at by the Courts below, on full consideration of all the evidence in the case, the plaintiffs in the suit had established their case before the Court, that the lands in suit appertained to the Patni taluk purchased by them, and that there was no nishkar interest in regard to the same by virtue of which defendants 1 and 2 could be held entitled to resist the possession of the plaintiffs as claimed by them in the suit.

It would appear that some of the tenant defendants resisted the plaintiffs' claim for khas possession claiming protection from eviction under S. 11, Cl. (3), of the Patni Regn. (8 of 1819). It has been concurrently held by the Courts below that none of the tenants defendants besides defendants 11 to 15 had proved that he was a khudkast or resident cultivating raiyat of the village in which the lands of the Patni are situate; and the Court of Appeal below has held that inasmuch as protection from eviction extended only to khudkast or resident cultivating raiyats, before S. 195, Bengal Tenancy Act, was amended in the year 1928, the tenants defendants other than defendants 11 to 15, although raiyats with rights of occupancy, could not resist the claim for khas possession as made by the plaintiffs. The suit in which this appeal has arisen was instituted on 21st December 1927 and the amendment made in S. 195, Bengal Tenancy Act, had no application. The decision of this Court in 3 C W N 13 (1) has a direct bearing on the case before us, so far as the application of S. 11, Cl. (3) of the Patni Regn. (8 of 1819) is concerned, and we give effect to the same. In our judgment, raiyats having rights of occupancy only in holdings were liable to be rejected at the instance of the auction-purchasers in the position of the plaintiffs in the case before us, if they were not khudkast raiyats that is resident and hereditary cultivators of the lands in regard to which khas possession was claimed by the purchasers of a Patni at a sale for arrears of rent. This is the only view that could be taken under the law as it stood before the amendment of S. 195, Bengal Tenancy Act, in the year 1928; and the decision of this Court 37 C W N 4 (2) on which reliance was placed on behalf of the defendants respondents seeking to resist the plaintiffs' claim for khas possession, entirely loses sight of the legal position of parties, so far as this part of the case before us is concerned.

1. Jogeshwar Mazumdar v. Abed Mahomed Sarkar, (1899) 3 C W N 13.

2. Janaki Nath Nandi v. Amarendra Nath Biswas, 1933 Cal 490 = 145 I C 243 = 37 C W N 4

The only other question that was raised in support of the appeal, was the one relating to the principle of assessment of mesne profits in the case. In view of the position appearing from the judgments of the Courts below, that mesne profits were determined with reference to the kabuliats filed by the plaintiffs and the contesting defendants, and the rents recorded in the settlement khatians, we are unable to hold that in assessing mesne profits allowed to the plaintiffs, any wrong principle has been followed by the Courts below. The result of the decision arrived at by us on questions raised in this appeal, is that the appeal fails, and it is dismissed. The plaintiffs respondents are entitled to their costs in the appeal.

Railways Act (1890), S. 72—Suit against Railway Company for short delivery of tins of ghee from consignment—Contract embodied in risk note H—Consignment a through consignment—Closed tins kept and wagon sealed and rivetted—Pilferage occurring in intermediate station—Company's servants held not guilty of any misconduct—Evidence as to condition of wagon at intermediate station by company held not necessary.

Misconduct is not necessarily established by proving even culpable negligence. It is something opposed to accident or negligence, and is the intentional doing of something which the doer knows to be wrong, or which he does recklessly, not caring what the result may be.

A sued B, a Railway Company, for recovery of a certain sum on account of short delivery of certain number of tins of ghee from the consignment booked on his address. The contract between the parties was embodied in the risk note H which exonerated the company from all loss or damages to the consignment except on proof that such loss or damage arose from misconduct on the part of the servants of the Railway Company; it was further provided that in case of non-delivery of the whole of one or more packages forming part of the consignment such non-delivery not being due to accident to a train or to fire, the company shall be bound to disclose to the consignor how the consignment was dealt with throughout the time it was in possession or control of the company, and if necessary, to give evidence thereof before the consignor was called upon to prove misconduct but, if misconduct could not fairly be inferred from such evidence, the burden of proving such misconduct was to lie on the consignor. It was found by the Court that the tins were placed in a wagon which was sealed and rivetted and that nothing more was required to ensure the safety of the consignment which was a through consignment. It was discovered on an intermediate station that the seal had been removed and some of the tins had been pilfered:

Held: that no misconduct on the part of the Railway servants could fairly be inferred from the established facts: [P 24 C 2; P 25 C 1, 2]

Held further: that there was disclosure by the company of the manner in which consignment was dealt with while under their control, within the meaning of the contract. [P 25 C 2]

Held also: that it was not necessary in the case of through consignment, for the company to give evidence as to the condition of the wagon at any intermediate stage of the journey, which might be the case if question of transshipment was involved: 1933 Cal 742, Ref.

Bartley, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the dismissal, by the Court below of their claim for damages. The suit was against the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway to recover Rs. 899-14-0, on the allegation of short delivery of 25 tins of ghee out of a consignment of 63 tins booked to the plaintiffs at Tinsukia from Malakhera station. The company denied liability, and the main issues for trial were whether the defendants were exempted from liability under the risk notes, A and H covering the consignment and whether the plaintiffs were entitled to sue. The Munsiff decided both points in favour of the plaintiffs, and decreed the suit. The Court of appeal below reversed these findings and dismissed the suit. Plaintiffs have appealed to this Court. The contract between the parties is embodied in risk note H. It is a contract of carriage at a special reduced rate, in consideration of which the Company is exonerated from all liability for loss or damage to a consignment, except on proof that such loss or damage arose from the misconduct of the servants of the Company. There is a proviso that in case of non-delivery of the whole of one or more packages forming part of the consignment such non-delivery not being due to accident, to a train or to fire, the company shall be bound to disclose to the consignor how the consignment was dealt with throughout the time it was in possession or control of the Company, and if necessary, to give evidence thereof before the consignor is called upon to prove misconduct but, if misconduct cannot fairly be inferred from such evidence, the burden of proving such misconduct shall lie on the consignor.

Both Courts below have directed themselves properly in regard to the evidence adduced before them, but they differ in the conclusion derived from consideration of that evidence. The Munsiff's finding was that the defendants had not shown in what condition the wagon was at Kapasamohanta, (one of 22 stations between Gorakhpur where the consignment was intact and Chapra where the loss was detected) and had therefore failed to disclose how they dealt with the consignment throughout the time, and were not protected under the risk note. The Court of appeal below held that no such evidence of examination of the wagons at intermediate stations was necessary that the loss was due to pilferage; that no misconduct on the part of the Railway servants could fairly be inferred from the evidence showing how the consignment was dealt with; that the onus of proof of misconduct therefore lay on the plaintiff and that it was not discharged. The suit was therefore dismissed.

On appeal before us, the substantial contentions have been that the Court below should have inferred, from the evidence given on both sides that there was misconduct on the part of the Company's servants, and that there was no disclosure, on the part of the Company, of the manner in which the consignment was dealt with such as would, under the terms of the contract throw the onus of proving misconduct on the present appellants. In view of these contentions, reference was made before us to a number of reported cases, in which the question of misconduct was directly or incidentally considered. Only one of these cases however is exactly in point 60 Cal 996 (1). In that case it was laid down, after an exhaustive review of the authorities on the point that thing opposed to accident or negligence, and is the intentional doing of something which the doer knows to be wrong, or which he does recklessly, not caring what the result may be.

I concur in that view, and would adopt the definition given in that case. In the light of that definition, it certainly cannot be held on the findings of fact arrived at by the Court of appeal below, on the evidence that a fair inference of misconduct on the part of the company's servants can be made in the present case. It was found by that Court that the closed tins were placed in a wagon which was sealed and rivetted, and that nothing more was required to ensure the safety of the consignment, which was a through consignment. The wagon was intact at Gorakhpur. At Chapra, the offside of the wagon was open, the seal removed, and some of the contents missing. The rivets and seal had been cut and pilferage had taken place between Gorakhpur and Chapra. I see no reason whatever to dissent from the conclusion arrived at by the Court of appeal below, namely, that no misconduct on the part of the Railway servants can fairly be inferred from the established facts. It remains to consider the further contention raised on behalf of the appellants, that there was no disclosure by the Company of how the consignment was dealt with while under their control.

There is in my view, no substance whatever in that contention. The duty cast on the Company was to show what was done by them in fulfilling their part of the contract—the carriage of the goods from Malakhera to Tinsukhia. They proved that the goods were placed in a sealed and rivetted through wagon consigned to Tinsukhia. It has been definitely found that no additional precautions are necessary in the case of through consignments. I cannot assent to the proposition that disclosure connotes that the Company must, in the case of a through consignment, be prepared to give evidence as to the condition of the wagon at any intermediate stage of the journey. The position might possibly be different if a question of transshipment were involved, but on the facts found in the present case it must be held that there was disclosure by the Company within the meaning of the contract. In the result this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

*Birendra Kumar De—*for Petitioners.
*Gopendra Nath Das—*for Opposite Parties.Order.—The question raised in this rule is whether the petitioners had the right to apply under S. 174, Cl. (1), Ben.
Ten. Act, for setting aside a rent sale.
The facts are not disputed and the question raised before me is a pure question of law and on that the question of jurisdiction of the lower Courts depends.
Both the lower Courts have held that the petitioners have no locus standi to make and maintain the said application.The petitioners before me obtained a mortgage decree against opposite parties
Nos. 8 to 10. The preliminary decree was passed on 5th January 1933 and the final decree was passed thereafter. On 6th January 1933 the petitioners made an application for attachment before judgment of some properties belonging to opposite parties Nos. 8 to 10 other than properties included in the mortgage and covered by the preliminary mortgage-decree. The statement in that application was that they obtained a preli-minary mortgage decree a day previously and there was no chance of the whole amount decreed being recovered by sale of the mortgage properties. They accordingly wanted an attachment of properties other than properties included in the mortgage, in order that they might be secured so far as their personal decree was concerned, a decree which they expected to get.The notice was issued upon the opposite parties Nos. 8 to 10 to show cause why the said properties should not be attached before judgment. On 20th February 1934 the final order attaching the said properties before judgment was made.
One of the properties so attached is the subject-matter of the present rule. Opposite parties Nos. 1 to 7, viz., the Banerjees and Roy Choudhuris who were the landlords of opposite parties Nos. 8 to 10 the Mitters, instituted a suit to recover rent and obtained a decree. They put up the rent decree into execution and a sale was held under the provisions of Chap. 14, Ben. Ten. Act, on 19th June 1934 and the opposite party No. 11 Bala-ram purchased the defaulting tenure. He only appears in this Rule and opposes it.
On 17th July 1934 the petitioners applied under S. 174 (1) to set aside the rent sale by making the necessary deposit. On 11th September 1934 they made an application in their mortgage suit for a personal decree under the provisions of
O. 34, R. 6, Civil P. C., but the proceeding started in that application was stayed by an order dated 13th November 1934.
It is admitted that no personal decree has yet been passed against opposite parties Nos. 8 to 10 and in favour of the petitioners.Section 174 (1) gives to two classes of persons, the right to make the application, viz., (1) the judgment-debtor in the rent suit and (2) any person whose interests are affected by the rent sale. The words of S. 174 (1) are pari materia with the provisions of O. 21, R. 90, Civil
P. C., because besides the judgment-debtors and persons entitled to share in the rateable distribution of assests, persons whose interests are affected by the sale, are given the right to apply under
O. 21, R. 90 of the Code. The question therefore, is whether the persons who have attached before judgment the property put up to sale in execution of a rent decree, have the right to apply under

S. 174, Ben. Ten. Act. I agree with the decisions of this Court which have laid down that the words "whose interests are affected by the sale" are not limited to persons whose proprietary or possessory interests are affected. They include also persons whose pecuniary interests are affected by the sale. The question therefore, reduces itself to this, viz., whether a person who has obtained an attachment before judgment but has not got a decree in his suit, is a person whose pecuniary interests are affected by the rent sale. There cannot be any doubt on the authorities that a person who attaches the property put up at a rent sale, for the purpose of enforcing his decree, is a person whose pecuniary interests are affected by the sale and he will have the undoubted right to make the application under S. 174.

I am also of opinion that a person who has attached before judgment the property subsequently put up at a rent sale, and who before his application under S. 174, has obtained a decree in his suit is also a person whose pecuniary interests are affected by the rent sale. My reason is this that in accordance with the provisions of O. 38, R. 11, such a person has not to apply for re-attachment of the property which has already been attached before judgment. As soon as he gets a decree in the suit the attachment before judgment has the effect in the eye of law of an attachment in execution of the decree. The cases of 51 Cal 495 (1) and 38 C W N 172 (2) are of the latter type. The facts as reported in the judgments appear to be that the person who made an application under O. 21, R. 90, was a person who had obtained attachment before judgment in his suit but had before the application, obtained a decree. Those cases are, therefore, distinguishable. The case before me is governed by the judgment pronounced by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of 17 C W N 80 (3) and a decision of a single Judge in the case of 42 C L J 37 (4). In both these cases the person who applied to set aside the sale under O. 21, R. 90, was a person who had simply attached before judgment the property, the sale of which was sought to be set aside, but had not on the date of the application obtained a decree in his suits. In the first mentioned case Mookerjee, J., points out the distinction between an attachment before judgment and an attachment in execution of a decree, and this distinction is founded on the provisions of the statute itself. At p. 81 of the report he makes this observation :

As was pointed out by Woodroffe, J., in the case of 33 Cal 639 (5) the object of an attachment before judgment is simply to safeguard the property, so as to enable the plaintiff to realize the amount of his decree if he should get one substantially, the same view was taken in the case of 38 Cal 448 (6) where the distinction between the two kinds, of attachments, namely of attachment before judgment and attachment in execution, was explained, and it was pointed out that the objects for which the two kinds of attachments are made are entirely different. An attachment prior to decree is not an attachment for the enforcement of the decree, but it is a step taken merely for the purpose of preventing the debtor from denying or obstructing such enforcement when the decree subsequently passed shall be sought to be executed. An attachment after decree, on the other hand, is an attachment made for the immediate purpose of carrying the decree into execution, and it presupposes an application on the part of the decree-holder to have his decree executed. The position of a person who has obtained an attachment before judgment and has not yet obtained a judgment, is that he has a chance of obtaining a judgment for the satisfaction whereof he is entitled to proceed against the property given to the Court by way of security. He has undoubtedly no present interest which is affected by the sale.

As I read this judgment I find that the principle is this : When an attachment is effected in execution of a decree, that attachment is effected with the immediate object of getting satisfaction, that is to say, the attaching creditor is a person pecuniarily interested in the attached property which is to be the means for getting the money which the decree directed the judgment-debtor to pay. Whereas in a case of attachment before judgment he has not got any existing pecuniary interest, the object of that attachment being merely to prevent the judgment-debtor from harassing him further if, and only if, he obtains a decree. On this principle I hold, apart from the Judgment.—This is an appeal by some of the defendants in a suit brought by the plaintiffs for recovery of joint possession to the extent of a seven-annas share in the lands described in the plaint, on declaration of their title. The suit as instituted was necessitated by an order passed against the plaintiffs under O. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C. It appears that there was an application made by the plaintiffs to the Court for permission to sue as paupers, the application was made on 7th June 1926, within the period of limitation prescribed for the institution of a suit of the description contemplated by Art. 11-A, Sch. 1, of the Indian Limitation; it contained all the materials necessary for a plaint, and the application was in accordance with the rules prescribed for presentation of an application for leave to sue as a pauper. The application for leave to sue as pauper was refused on 30th January 1928, and on 8th February 1928, time was allowed by the Court for payment of court-fees payable on the plaint which was considered by the Court to have been filed on 7th June 1926. The plaint was subsequently registered by order of the Court, on payment of court-fees as directed on 4th April 1928.

The suit as registered on payment of court-fees was resisted by the contesting defendants, the appellants in this Court, on the ground of limitation; it was pleaded in defence that the suit was barred by one year's limitation from the date of disposal of the claim made by the plaintiffs under O. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C. There was another ground on which the suit was contested by the defendants; it was on this ground that the plaintiffs had no title to the lands in suit inasmuch as the same had been completely extinguished by a sale in execution of a decree for rent in respect of a tenancy which was fully represented by the defendants in the suit for rent. The Courts below negatived both the defences raised by the contesting defendants and agreed in passing a decree in favour of the plaintiffs as prayed by them in the suit.

The question whether the title of the plaintiffs had passed by the sale in execution of the rent decree, is concluded by the findings concurrently arrived at by the Courts below and cannot be allowed to be agitated in this appeal. The plaintiffs on the findings on evidence come to by the lower Courts were entitled to a decree as claimed by them in the suit if their claim was not barred by limitation.

The decision of the Courts below on the question of limitation was challenged in this appeal on the ground that the plaintiffs' suit should be regarded as having been instituted on the date on which court-fees were paid, and not on the date on which the application to sue as pauper was filed; it was argued that the application for leave to sue as a pauper having been rejected on 30th January 1928, and the proceedings in that connection having terminated on that date, there was no case pending before the Court and the Court had no power under S. 149, Civil P. C., to grant any time or extend the time for payment of court-fees on the plaint.

In our judgment, the position must be recognized as settled by the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of 6 I A 126 (1), that the document mentioned as an application for permission to sue as a pauper in O. 33, R. 2, Civil P. C., which contains all the particulars that the law requires to be given in a plaint and in addition a prayer that the plaintiff might be allowed to sue as a pauper, is a plaint required to be filed in a suit, and the refusal by the Court to grant the prayer of the plaintiff to sue as a pauper, and termination of the proceedings in the matter of granting or refusing leave to sue as a pauper, does not amount to rejection of plaint, so far as the plaintiff was concerned. If the position under the law is as it must be held to be the case that the plaint was before the Court, and it was a document on which proper court-fees had not been made by virtue of a refusal of the prayer of the plaintiff to sue as a pauper, the provisions of S. 149, Civil P. C., could come to the assistance of the plaintiff. The view taken by the Patna High Court in the case of 9 Pat 439 (2), which follows closely upon, and gives effect to the pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in 6 I A 126 (1), referred to above, is in our judgment, the correct view of the law, applicable to the facts of the case before us, so far as the question of limitation involved in it goes; and we have no hesitation in agreeing with the same.

In the course of argument reference was made to decisions in cases mentioned below in support of the appeal: 24 Cal 889 (3); 20 Bom 508 (4); 9 Bom L R

204 (5); 18 I C 518 (6); 1933 Nag 237 (7). Some of these decisions, it would appear, were given before the provisions contained in S. 149, Civil P. C., were enacted; in others, not only the provisions of S. 149 of the Code, but also the pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in 6 I A 126 (1), case referred to above, which has a direct bearing on the question of limitation raised in the case before us, were not kept in view.

In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs. The decision and decrees of the Courts below are affirmed.

Appeal No. 1886 of 1932, Decided on 6th February 1935, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, Khulna, D/- 30th April 1932.

Where a kabuliyat executed by a tenant states that it is a kabuliyat for land let out at a produce rent and provides that the tenant will have to deliver certain quantity of paddy every year and that in case of failure to deliver the paddy, the landlord would be entitled to realize amicably or by suit the 'ticca' sum of Rs. 20 with interest, and there is no provision for what is termed 'Bari', the landlord is only entitled to payment in default of delivery of paddy to Rs. 20 per year with interest as stipulated for in the kabuliyat and not to the value of the quantity of paddy fixed, calculated at the market rate at the date of the suit. titled to recover at the present market rate the value of 6 bishes of paddy or at the rate of Rs. 20 per year. The present market value of 6 bishes is Rs. 70. The Court of first instance decreed the suit at the amount claimed by the plaintiff giving the defendant a credit to the extent of Rs. 20 on account of payment. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal has held that the plaintiff is entitled to claim only at the rate of Rs. 20 per year. The rights of the parties are governed by the terms of a registered kabuliyat dated 4th Baisakh 1295. The kabuliyat begins and ends by saying that it is a kabuliyat for lands let out at a produce rent. After stating that the tenant will have to deliver 6 bishes of paddy every year, it proceeds on to state that if the tenant fails to deliver the paddy, the landlord would be entitled to realize amicably or by suit the ticca sum of Rs. 20 with interest at the rate of Re. 1 per month. The use of the word 'ticca' gave rise to controversy between the parties. The learned Subordinate Judge relying apparently on one of the meanings given to that word by Wilson in his Glossary came to the conclusion that 'ticca' means 'fixed in perpetuity'. In this respect, he is certainly supported by Wilson and I cannot say that the interpretation of the word 'ticca' given by the learned Subordinate Judge is a wrong interpretation.

I do not however wish to rest my judgment on that point alone. According to the terms of the kabuliyat which I have quoted above, the parties themselves provided for the case where the tenant would fail to deliver the paddy. It is stated that the landlord would be entitled to realise the sum of Rs. 20 with interest at the rate of Re. 1 per month. The parties therefore contemplated that in case of non-delivery of the paddy, the landlord would be entitled to claim only the money mentioned in the kabuliyat and that with a certain rate of interest. It is significant that on non-delivery of paddy, there is no stipulation of interest being calculated in terms not of kind, that is, there is no provision for what is termed 'Bari'. In my view therefore on a fair reading of the kabuliyat the landlord is entitled to payment, in default of delivery of paddy of Rs. 20 per year with interest as stipulated for in the kabuliyat. The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Jogesh Chandra Roy and Sachindra Kumur Roy—for Appellants.

Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of defendants 1, 2 and 3 in a suit instituted by the plaintiff for a declaration that his interest is not affected by the sale in execution of a decree for rent obtained by defendants 1, 2 and 3 against one Abdul. At the said sale, defendants 1 to 3 purchased the property. It is admitted that one Sadhu Khan held a jote at a rental of Rs. 13 a year under one Krishna Sundar Bhowmik. This jote has been recorded in khatian No. 64. Defendants 1 to 3 have purchased the interest of Krishno Sundar Bhowmik. On the death of Sadhu, the jote was inherited by his widow Sowa Bibi and four sons Abdul, Ebrahim, Nasar and the plaintiff Lachoo Sheikh. In the year 1921, two kabuliats were executed in favour of the landlords one by Nasar, one of the sons of Sadhu Khan and the other by Abdul. In the kabuliat Abdul stated that he was executing the kabuliat on behalf of himself, his mother Sowa Bibi and his brothers, the plaintiff and Ebrahim. In the year 1930, defendants 1 to 3 sued for rent. They made Abdul a defendant but the plaintiff was not made a defendant. Defendants 1 to 3 obtained a decree and in execution of that decree have purchased the property. The plaintiff comes to Court on the allegation that that was not a rent decree at all inasmuch as he had not been made a party defendant. The answer of defendants 1 to 3 is of a two-fold character. Firstly, they stated that Abdul did in fact represent the tenancy with them inasmuch as he represented his other co-sharers in executing the kabuliati in the year 1921. Secondly, they say that in any event, the suit was a properly constituted suit and the decree obtained therein by them was a rent decree having regard to the provisions of S. 146-A, Ben. Ten. Act. So far as the first point is concerned, the Court of appeal below has recorded a finding that in executing the kabuliati in the year 1921, Abdul did not represent his other co-sharers.

On the second ground, namely, as to whether the suit of the year 1930 had been framed in accordance with the provisions of S. 146 A, Ben. Ten. Act, the learned Subordinate Judge construes the section and holds that the four clauses of sub-S. 3 of S. 146-A must be taken together and they cannot be taken in a disjunctive way. For the purpose of supporting his conclusion, he noticed the word 'and' before Cl. 4, of the said sub-section. Sub-S. 2 of S. 146-A provides that notwithstanding anything contained elsewhere either in the Bengal Tenancy Act or in any other law, a decree for arrears of rent of a tenure or holding and a sale in execution of such decree shall be valid against all co-tenants whether they have been made parties defendants to the suit or not and against the holding in the manner provided in Ch. 14 if the defendants to the suit represented the entire body of co-sharer tenants in the tenure or holding for the rent for which the suit is brought. Then sub-S. 3 enumerates the circumstances under which the entire body of co-sharer tenants may be deemed to be represented by the defendants in a suit for recovery of rent. Four circumstances are noticed in the sub-section each being the subject-matter of a separate clause. A reading of the clauses would show that if the defendants in a rent suit fulfil the requirements of any of these four sub-clauses they would be taken to be representing the entire body of co-sharer tenants in the tenure or holding. This is the construction which I put upon this sub-section but inasmuch as the learned Subordinate Judge had put a different construction upon the said sub-section he did not record necessary findings. But as my construction of the section does not agree with the construction put by the learned Subordinate Judge, I am of opinion that the case cannot be disposed of without recording proper findings on the materials on the record. If the learned Subordinate Judge finds that Abdul came within any of the clauses of sub-S. 3, he would hold that the holding had passed to defendants 1 to 3 in execution of the decree for arrears of rent and would dismiss the plaintiff's suit. If he finds on the materials on the record that Abdul did not fulfil any of the conditions stated in any of these four clauses, he would give the necessary declarations in favour of the plaintiff. But in making the declarations he would specify the interest which the plaintiff has in the tenure.

The result is that this appeal is allowed. The decree of the learned Subordinate Judge is set aside and the case is remanded to the lower appellate Court for being dealt with in accordance with the directions given above. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal No. 130 of 1930, Decided on 18th January 1935, against original decree of Sub-Judge, 2nd Court, 24-Parganas, D/- 26th April 1930.

Mukerji, J.—In this appeal which has been pressed only as regards item 1 of property namely plot No. 1 of the schedule to the plaint the substantial question in controversy, such as it was before the Court below, was whether that property was originally acquired by one Ijjatannessa Bibi or had belonged previously to her father Nasirulla. By reason of some documents which the appellant has discovered during the pendency of the appeal the question has been placed before us for our consideration in a somewhat altered form namely whether it had not belonged to Ijjatannessa Bibi's mother who is said to have been one Mariam Bibi. The appellant has applied for the reception of the said documents as evidence at this stage. O. 41, R. 27, of the Code as explained by the decisions of the Judicial Committee in the cases of 34 I A 115 (1) and 58 I A 254 (2) would not enable us to receive these documents as additional evidence, even though we may find that notwithstanding the exercise of due diligence on her part the documents were not within her knowledge, which is the only ground on which the appellant takes her stand for her application—such a condition legitimately forming a ground for an application for review. The rule so far as it is pertinent here, enjoins that the appellate Court would require such evidence to be produced to enable it to pronounce judgment. The application such as it is, namely, an application by the appellant for receiving additional evidence must accordingly be rejected.

We have heard the appeal on the materials that are on the record. The earliest document relating to the property that we have before us is the kabuliati of Ijjatannessa dated 1852 (Ex. 1). That document according to plaint was the foundation of her title. We find however that when on a false allegation that Ijjatannessa had died, her son Fazlur Rahman applied for a Redemption Certificate in 1889, a patta dated 4th February 1873, in favour of Ijjatannessa, in connexion with this very property was filed by him. There was then a proceeding as the result of which upon a compromise between the mother and the son the Redemption Certificate (Ex. 12) was issued in favour of Fazlur Rahman. The importance of the aforesaid facts seems to have been lost sight of at the trial; neither the parties nor the Court having referred to them at any stage of the trial. Before any decision can be pronounced with confidence, it is, in our opinion, necessary that there should be a further investigation into these facts, the parties being allowed to adduce all such evidence as they may and as would bear upon the history of the holding up to the date of the said Redemption Certificate. It is only fair to refer to another aspect of the case to which the plaintiff-respondent has referred and which would arise for consideration in case it be held that the original acquisition of Ijjatannessa on which the plaintiff has rested his title is either negatived or not established. It has been argued on his behalf that in that event there are enough findings of fact in the judgment appealed from on which it may be held that Ijjatannessa and her descendants had acquired a good and indefeasible title by adverse possession. The findings, such as they are, are in respect of facts which would be sufficient to indicate that she and her descendants were the sole owners. But when a question of acquisition of title by adverse possession has to be determined much clearer, fuller and more definite evidence relating to the different points of time have to be brought in. The evidence, such as it is, as bearing on the question of title by adverse possession, is in such a state that no definite opinion, one way or the other, can be pronounced. The parties should be allowed to adduce such evidence on this point also as they may desire to do.

We therefore set aside the decree appealed from and send the case back to the Court below to hold a further trial, allowing the parties to adduce further evidence on the two points noticed above. The appellant has not pressed her appeal in so far as it relates to Plot No. 2 of the schedule to the plaint. The appeal as regards that plot will stand dismissed. The appellant in our judgment was primarily to blame for the insufficiency of Government Appeal No. 5 of 1935, Decided on 25th November 1935.

Companies Act (1913), Ss. 92, 5 and 93—Prospectus filed in English before Registrar—Subsequent prospectus issued in Bengali without being filed before Registrar—Prospectus found not to contain certain particulars required by S. 93 and not to be verbatim translation of English prospectus—Complaint by Registrar under S. 92 (e)—Accused held liable to be convicted under S. 92 (5)—Question involved being of importance High Court held could not refuse to interfere.

R filed a prospectus fulfilling all requirements of law in the office of the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies, and subsequently issued a prospectus in Bengali. It was found that the prospectus in Bengali did not contain certain particulars required by S. 93, Companies Act, and was not a verbatim translation of the English prospectus. The Registrar filed a complaint under S. 92 (5) on the ground that the Bengali prospectus had been issued without having been filed before him. The Magistrate holding the offence to be purely technical and omission not culpable acquitted R :

Held: that R was liable to be convicted under S. 92 (5), Companies Act. That the proceedings were initiated by the Registrar and not a private person and as the question involved was one of great importance in view of the scope of the Act and of necessity in the interest of the community of the strictest observance of its provision, the High Court could not refuse to interfere. Bartley, J.—This is an appeal by the Legal Remembrancer, Bengal, against the acquittal of the respondents on a charge under S. 92 (5), Companies Act.

The facts are that the respondents filed a prospectus in English in the office of the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies, on 12th July 1934. This prospectus fulfilled all the requirements of law. Subsequently they issued a prospectus in Bengali, substantially identical with the English Prospectus, but which did not contain certain particulars required by S. 93 of the Act. A copy of this document was forwarded by a private person, to whom it had been sent, to the Registrar, who thereupon filed a complaint under S. 92 (5) of the Act before the Chief Presidency Magistrate on the ground that the Bengali prospectus had been issued without having been filed before him. The learned Magistrate held that in effect the Bengali copy had been filed, that the offence was purely technical and that the omission was not culpable. He acquitted the accused.

We are of opinion that the view taken by the learned Magistrate was wrong. What was filed before the Registrar was a prospectus in English. The prospectus on which this prosecution is based was in Bengali and was not a verbatim translation of the English document. It did not in fact contain certain particulars specified in the English prospectus and required by law under S. 93 of the Act to be included in every prospectus issued on behalf of a company. The issue of such a document was clearly in contravention of S. 92 of the Act.

It was urged before us that this is not a case in which the High Court would interfere with an acquittal, in that the proceedings were initiated by a private individual.

This of course is not strictly true, as the complaint was made by the Registrar though the information reached him from a person to whom the prospectus was sent. Moreover the question involved in this case is one of great importance in view of the scope of the Act under consideration and of the necessity, in the interests of the community, of the strictest observance of its provisions. We therefore consider that we ought not to give effect to any such argument or refuse to interfere when, in our opinion, there has been a contravention of the law. We must therefore set aside the order of acquittal and direct the conviction of the respondents under S. 92 (5), Companies Act.

We do not however think it necessary to impose any further penalty on the respondents. The offence was undoubtedly technical in that a prospectus had been filed and that the Bengali prospectus issued was, except for the omission of certain particulars, a translation thereof. The respondents are accordingly warned and discharged.

Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of defendants in a suit instituted by the plaintiffs for declaration of title to a certain property and for recovery of possession. The Court of first instance granted the plaintiffs a decree for eight annas share and dismissed their claim with regard to the remaining portion of the property. The plaintiffs and the defendants being both dissatisfied with the decree passed by the trial Court preferred appeals which were heard together by the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, at Faridpore. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the defendants' appeal but allowed the plaintiff's appeal. A decree has accordingly been passed which is entirely in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendants have preferred this appeal against the decree made by the Subordinate Judge, second Court, Faridpore. To follow the controversies between the parties the following facts have to be stated. The property which is the subject-matter of the dispute, that is to say the share of the property which is the subject-matter of the dispute, originally belonged to one Krishna Chandra Banerjee. He married twice. By his first wife he had a daughter named Digambari and by his second wife, Uma Sundari, he had another daughter of the name of Sushila. During his life-time Krishna Chandra Banerjee made a gift of half of the properties to his wife Uma Sundari who survived her husband. On the death of Krishna Chandra Banerjee. Uma Sundari was in possession of the eight annas share of the property in suit as an heir of Krishna Chandra Banerjee and the remaining eight annas on the basis of the gift made to her by her husband. She died in the year 1301 and on her death the share which had been gifted to her devolved upon her daughter Sushila. The share which belonged to Krishna Chandra Banerjee at the time of his death was inherited by both of his daughters, Digambari and Sushila. Sushila died in the year 1309 and this position is accepted that on her death the eight annas share which she inherited from her mother as her Stridhan property passed to the brother's sons of Krishna Chandra Banerjee, their names being Probhat, Jagat and Gopal. The other eight annas share of the property which devolved upon Sushila and Digambari by inheritance vested in Digambari alone by survivorship. It appears that before the death of Sushila a suit had been instituted by a third party to recover a sum of money from Sushila, Digambari and other persons and a decree was passed with Sushila appearing as one of the defendants. In 1904, this decree was put into execution and the property in suit was purchased by one Kailash Chandra. It does not appear whether the legal representatives of Su-shila in respect of the property inherited by her from her mother as Stridhan were represented in the execution proceedings or not.

If they were represented in the execution proceedings then the effect of the sale would be to pass only the life interest of Sushila, because it is well established that if a female inherits a Stridhan property she does not get an absolute interest in it. At the date of the sale Sushila was dead and therefore the purchaser Kailash did not acquire anything. That sale undoubtedly passed the 8 annas share of the estate of Krishna Chandra which ultimately devolved upon her daughter Digambari by inheritance, but inasmuch as there is no evidence that the debt in respect of which the suit was brought was a debt binding on the estate of Krishna Chandra, the 8 annas interest in the property which Digambari inherited from Krishna Chandra would no doubt pass but it would give the purchaser an interest which would last as long as Digambari would be alive. The position therefore of Kailash was that he had acquired no interest in the 8 annas of the property, that 8 annas being the subject-matter of the gift of Krishna Chandra to his wife Uma Sundari, and had acquired the other 8 annas share in the property but had only a limited interest in it, namely an interest, which, as I have stated above, would last for the life-time of Digambari. In the year 1313 Kailash sold whatever he had purchased to Digambari. It may be that Kailash was the benamidar of Digambari. But whether he was a benamidar or not the position is not in the least altered. Digambari died in the year 1332 and on her death the 8 annas share of the property which belonged to Krishna Chandra Banerjee and devolved by inheritance on Digambari passed to the sons of Jagat and Probhat who were then the reversioners of Krishna Chandra Banerjee.

The plaintiffs have purchased from these reversionary heirs. With regard to the other 8 annas, the subject-matter of the gift, Digambari remained in possession till her death. In the year 1321 there was an Ekrarnama with Digambari as the first party and Probhat, Jagat and Gopal as the second parties. In the Ekrarnama it is recited that Krishna Chandra Banerjee had made a gift of 36 items of property. After the settlement record had been finally published one of the items had been amalgamated with others. Therefore the position was that there were really 35 items of property which were in existence at the time of this Ekrarnama. The Ekrarnama recites that Probhat, Jagat and Gopal had instituted a certain suit against some third parties. As a result of the proceedings in that suit they apprehended that they would lose by lapse of time the interest which they got in the said 35 items of property on the death of Sushila. Then follow many clauses in the deed. In Cl. Ka of the deed it is recited that rights of the second parties in all the 35 items of property which were the subject-matter of the gift would remain intact and their rights in the property described in the schedule of that document would not be in any way affected because they were left in the possession of Digambari. The schedule to the document comprises 27 items of property and does not mention the property which is in dispute now. In Cl. Ja it is stated that in respect of these 27 items of property Digambari would be in possession as a licensee and from out of the income thereof she would maintain the Dev Sheva of Krishna Chandra Banerjee. Then it is stated that seven items of property are in possession of strangers and the second parties would recover the possession of the same. With regard to the property in suit it is simply stated that it has been sold.

No mention has been made as to who is the purchaser and who is in possession of that particular item of the property. It appears that in the year 1332 shortly before her death Digambari made a gift of the property in suit to two persons, namely Promoda and Romesh who in their turn have sold it to the defendants in 1332. So far as the title of the plaintiffs is concerned there cannot be any dispute with regard to half share of the property which Digambari inherited from her father; they are the reversioners. With regard to the other half which Krishna Chandra Banerjee made a gift of in favour of Uma Sundari their fathers became the owners on the death of Sushila and the present plaintiffs who are the sons as I have stated above, of Jagat, Probhat and Gopal have inherited the same from their father. Dr. Sen Gupta appearing on behalf of the defendants-appellants contends that although the title may have devolved upon the plaintiffs in the manner stated above their rights to the properties have been extinguished by adverse possession on the part of Digambari. The lower appellate Court has repelled that contention. Dr. Sen Gupta for the purpose of establishing adverse possession on the part of Digambari has relied upon the Ekrarnama of 1321. Mr. Das for the purpose of repelling that contention has also relied upon the same document. It is therefore necessary to consider the effect of that document, because on its effect the question as to this eight annas share of the property in suit would depend.

So far as the 8 annas share of the property which Digambari inherited from her father is concerned there cannot be any question of adverse possession. The sale of the year 1904 only passed to Kailash, as I have stated above, an interest which would last for the life-time of Digambari. So long as Digambari was alive the present plaintiffs, who became entitled to the properties as reversioners only on the death of Digambari, would have no right to get possession and therefore if Kailash and any transferee from Kailash made any assertion that he had a higher right during the life-time of Digambari that assertion would be of no avail as against plaintiffs whose right to get possession accrued only in 1332 on the death of Digambari. On this principle I hold that with regard to that share the claim of the defendants founded on adverse possession must fail. With regard to the other 8 annas share, the subject-matter of the gift, the position stands in this way. Sushila died in the year 1309 and on her death the plaintiffs' predecessors Jagat, Probhat and Gopal became entitled to possession. If they had been kept out of possession for 12 years certainly their interest in that share would have been extinguished. The further question is whether in the circumstances of this case that share has been extinguished. By the sale of the year 1904 at which Kailash purchased, Kailash became a rightful owner to the extent of half of the property, namely the share which vested in Digambari by inheritance. The other 8 annas share in the property did not pass. When Digambari took a conveyance from Kailash she stepped into the shoes of Kailash. The position therefore of Digambari from the year 1313 was that she was a co-sharer along with Jagat, Probhat and Gopal. In 1313 there had not been a prescription for a period of 12 years. Their title was still there. It had not been and could not have been extinguished by time because this is only four years from the death of Sushila. It may be assumed that Digambari was solely in possession of the property in suit but she was a co-sharer. She had the right to remain in possession because undoubtedly she was the owner of 8 annas of the property. The question therefore is whether her possession became adverse from the year 1313 or the possession of Kailash became adverse from the year 1904. It is an undoubted proposition of law that if a co-sharer is in possession of the whole of the joint property her possession ordinarily would be referred to a lawful title. It would not be adverse against her co-sharer unless there be an assertion of a hostile title by him to the knowledge of his co-sharers.

This principle has been well settled and it is not necessary to cite any case law on the point. The matter has been fully discussed and settled by the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of 28 C L J 437 (1). The question therefore is did Digambari assert a hostile title and that to the knowledge of her co-sharers, Probhat, Jagat and Gopal. Dr. Sen Gupta contends that there was such an assertion in the Ekrarnama of the year 1321. Mr. Das says that there is no assertion therein at all but the Ekrarnama goes further and admits the possession of Digambari as a possession of the licensee in respect of all the properties which were the subject-matters of the gift. I cannot on a fair reading of the Ekrarnama subscribe to the last contention of Mr. Das. Digambari admits that she is in possession as a licensee but her admission is expressly limited to 27 items of property described in the schedule. That in my judgment is the effect of Cls. Ka and Ja of that deed. But I do agree with the other contentions of Mr. Das that there is no assertion of a hostile title by Digambari in respect of the property in suit. In

1. Hadit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh, 1918 P C 1=47 I C 626=64 P R 1918=28 C L J 437 (P C).

Cl. Ja of the document there is only a recital of the fact that the property in suit has been sold. The document is silent as to who had purchased the property or who was enjoying the property as owner. Even the facts as to who was in possession of the property in suit in the year 1321 is not mentioned in the document. There is no assertion in the document that Digambari was holding possession of the same, much less she was holding possession of the same in her capacity as the purchaser from Kailash. In Cl. Ka of the document the second parties to the same assert that their title would not in any way be affected to the properties which were the subject-matter of the gift and the first party acquiesces in that statement. This is inconsistent with the position that the lady, Digambari intended to assert her hostile and exclusive title to the property in suit.

The construction attempted to be put by Dr. Sen Gupta on Cl. Ja of the document where it was stated that property in suit had been sold would be inconsistent with the stipulation contained in Cl. Ka of the document. I accordingly hold that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in holding that the possession of Digambari was the possession of a co-sharer and there was no assertion of any hostile title by her to the property in suit. That being so Digambari did not acquire any interest in the property by adverse possession. The suit being instituted within 12 years of Digambari's death there is no answer to the plaintiffs' claim. In this view of the matter I affirm the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs. Leave to appeal under S. 15 of the Letters Patent has been asked for but is refused.

S. K. Ghose, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff against the Darjeeling Himalayan Railway Company as the defendant 1 on the following allegations. The plaintiff is the owner of certain house properties in Darjeeling situated above the cart road and comprising what is called the Wilk's Hall Estate which includes Margaret Villa. The latter property stands on grounds at a distance of 453 feet above the railway lines which are on the cart road. Previous to the 8th August 1927, in spite of repeated protests and verbal notice, the defendant Railway Company wrongfully, negligently and in utter disregard of the natural safety and the acquired right of support in respect of the aforesaid Margaret Villa and its adjoining grounds, regularly and persistently carried on deep cutting on the steep hill-side for days together, till the boulders above were disturbed and lost their support and an artificial land-slip was caused on the aforesaid date with considerable damage, actual separation and subsidence of the forest lands, forming part of the said premises of the plaintiff and covering approximately an area of 40,000 square feet. This is para. 3 of the plaint. The plaintiff further alleged that his property had become unsafe and further land-slip was imminently expected. In consequence of this he brought the suit claiming damages against the defendant company for a sum of Rs. 50,000 and certain other reliefs. The defendant company in their written statement denied the allegations against them and asserted that owing to natural causes the defendant company apprehended danger to their lines shortly before the land-slip occurred, and that they in the exercise of due diligence in order to avoid the danger took steps as far as lay in their power. They also denied that there were any protests made or notice given as alleged by the plaintiff. On the contrary the defendant company has suffered a heavy loss as the result of the land-slip. The Secretary of State for India in Council was added as defendant 2 and his written statement is on the same lines. Various issues were framed and of these issues 3, 4 and 5 are material to this appeal.

Issue 3: Did the defendant carry on any deep cutting negligently and in utter disregard of natural safety and the right of support and did the same cause the slip; and if so, are the defendants liable in any way. And what was the area of the slip? Issue 4: Has the land-slip affected the safety of the buildings "Margaret Villa" and lands adjoining the site? Has there been any damage at all? And if so to the extent of Rs. 50,000 or any sum? Are the defendants liable therefor? Issue 5: Has the plaintiff any cause of action for this suit even if there was any damage at all against the defendant company?

At the trial the case made for the plaintiff was that the cutting of the hillside by the Railway Company was started from the beginning of July 1927, whereas the defendants asserted that nothing was done until the 25th July 1927. On this point the learned Subordinate Judge found in favour of the defendants. He also found that the Railway Company had exercised great care at every step and that there were no protests of any kind on the part of the plaintiff. Then, as regards the cause of the disaster, the learned Subordinate Judge found that it was due to natural causes and not due to any action on the part of the Railway Company, but that it took place in spite of all precautions which could possibly be taken and were actually taken by the Railway Company. As regards the actual damage, the learned Judge found that no damage whatever was caused to the property of the plaintiff, except such as have been compensated for under the Land Acquisition Act. In the result the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. Hence this appeal.

It is admitted or taken as proved that the land-slip occurred on 8th August 1927 at about 10 p.m. between bridges 511 and 512 of the railway line on the cart road, the distance between these two points being 350 feet. Just above the cart road there is a strip of land called "Cart Road Reserve land" which is the property of the Railway Company. Above this is the land of the plaintiff. According to the map Ex. 2 prepared by the plaintiff the top of the land slip is about 169 feet above the railway lines. It went down to some distance below the cart road, but the evidence on this point is not definite. The area of the plaintiff's land affected by the slip is about 70 poles. The whole of this area together with 76 poles of unslipped land has been acquired by the Government since the occurrence and compensation amounting to Rs. 342-3-8 has been paid to the plaintiff.

The question raised in this appeal is comprised in issue 3 above quoted and the decision of the appeal turns upon a question of fact, namely whether the plaintiff has been able to prove that the slip was caused by the cutting of the hillside on the part of the Railway Company. As mentioned already, the Company admit that they started working from 25th July whereas it is the plaintiff's case that work was started about the beginning of July. This is deposed to by the following witnesses for the plaintiff who had occasion to see the locality before the slip actually occurred. P. W. 1, Mrs. O' Neal, has a residential house close to Margaret Villa. She deposes that she passed by that locality on 23rd July and also before that date and she saw the railway workmen digging and cutting all along the line. P. W. 2, Satya Ranjan Das Gupta says that he was in Darjeeling in July and August, that he passed by the road about 20 or 21 days before the slip, and that he saw the railway workmen cutting 200-250 feet along the place. P. W. 3, Sarat Ch. Chakravarti also deposes to the same effect. P. W. 9, Karak Lal Das is the stable superintendent of the plaintiff and he lives on the premises. He seeks to support the plaintiff's case as made in the plaint and deposes that he saw the railway men cutting the hillside on 8th July, again on 18th July, and the third time on 24th or 25th July before the slip had occurred on 8th August. He did not however write to inform his master till 8th August, vide his letter Ex. 4 and his telegram of 9th August Ex. 6 was sent after the slip had occurred. Mr. S. K. Dutt, who was examined on commission as a witness for the plaintiff, stated that he saw some cutting going on 8 days or so before the slip, which is not inconsistent with the defendants' case. Hiralal Ghose, witness 7 for the plaintiff, states that about a month before the slip he saw the railway people shifting the railway lines as the stones were interfering with the traffic. The learned Subordinate Judge did not place any reliance on the evidence of Karak Lal Das. He is of course interested and we agree with the learned Judge in thinking that his evidence is unreliable. As regards the other witnesses, their evidence is not definite enough for the purpose of fixing a date on which the cutting of the hillside was begun. Not only as regards the date, but as regards the quantity and the nature of the work also, the evidence is very indefinite and it suffers from the fact that the witnesses were deposing long after the occurrence when they must have forgotten the details. Furthermore all this oral evidence is not supported by documentary evidence of any kind.

In addition to this the plaintiff has put in evidence the statements of certain persons who examined the place some time after the slip had occurred. One of them is Mr. K. Dutta Gupta, a District Engineer, who made enquiries with Babu Hiralal Ghose, P. W. 7, and made a report regarding the slip. Then there is Mr. Donelan who had been in the service of the railway company from 1889 to 1910 and has also acted as a Permanent Way Inspector. He deposes among other things to the composition of the soil near about the place of the occurrence and says that in his opinion the usual method to avoid a slip is to slope down the site by cutting away earth from the top by which the weight at the top is removed and strengthening the base by putting rivetment walls. Mr. S. K. Dutt also made an examination of the place after the slip. He says that he saw the place a day after the slip, but it appears from the evidence of Hiralal Ghose P. W. 7, that the examination might have been made about a month later. Generally speaking, the evidence of these witnesses as to the condition of the hillside immediately before the slip is based on hearsay. The composition of the soil is stated to be sand mixed with boulders, which throws very little light on the question at issue and the opinion of these expert witnesses as to the cause of the slip is mere speculation. It does not go to prove that the cause must have been the work done on the hillside by the Railway Company. They did not notice springs, but it is admitted that springs do always come up to surface and might escape observation. The defendants have given evidence to show that the portion between bridges 511 and 512 was an old settlement. Their witness 5, Mr. Webber, who acted as Permanent Way Inspector at the material time, deposes that in 1926 there was a slight settlement. In July 1927 he noticed a similar settlement, and on the 26th July he sent a telegram to the Assistant Engineer, Public Works Department, vide Ex. C as follows :

Kindly sanction cutting of hillside as a large portion is coming down due to settlement which may lead to a serious block if not removed.

This evidence, which is amply corroborated by other witnesses, goes to show that by the 25th July the slip had already started. On the work being sanctioned by telegram on the 26th July this officer cut the rock which was infringing the running dimensions of the trains and removed the details. According to this officer this rock was at the Ghoom end (i. e. south) of the large rock, and it had moved forward and fallen on the road. The work went on from the 26th July, but the settlement was gradually taking place and eventually, on the 8th August at 10 p. m., the whole hillside between bridges 511 and 512 slid away to a length of 350 feet taking the cart road and the railway track with it. The witness Sarada Kanta Banerji, who is an Overseer on the Railway, confirms the aforesaid evidence of the Permanent Way Inspector. On the 25th July he noticed that the cart road between bridges 511 and 512 had sunk about 2 feet and a crack had formed and also a small land-slip came down from the hillside to the south of a big rock blocking the railway line and the cart road drain there. He engaged coolies to clear the slip from the railway track and the road drain. The nature of the work that was done in order to prevent further mishap would appear from the work memo which was prepared on the 1st August, vide Ex. M. This work comprised cutting and sloping the hillside, rock breaking and rock cutting and clearing slip.

There is no justification for drawing the inference that this work was the cause of the slip that occurred on the 8th August. Defence witness 1 Bhakat Bahadur Chattri and defence witness 2 Dhanbir, who were engaged for the work, depose substantially to the same effect. Mr. White, who was examined on commission, was the Assistant Engineer, Public Works Department, at the time and he sent the telegram sanctioning the cutting of the hillside on the 26th July. He says that from 26th July to the 8th August the hillside was sinking daily and subsequently he discovered a number of springs which fact was reported by him to the Executive Engineer vide Ex. Z (h). This letter is dated 19th December 1928, but according to the witness the date should be 19th December 1927. Counsel for the appellant has contended that this is false, but the falsity could easily have been demonstrated by calling for the correspondence referred to in the letter. For the purpose of this appeal the point is not material. Mr. Batterbery, witness 3 for the defendants, was the Resident Engineer on the railway, at the time, and he received the telegrams Exs. C and D on his arrival at Kurseong on the 29th July. On the 30th July he had occasion to examine the slip that had been reported in the telegram Ex. C. This statement is sought to be discredited by a reference to Ex. B, the travelling allowance bill of this officer. But there is nothing in that document which is inconsistent with his evidence and we are not prepared to disbelieve him. He says that between bridges 511 and 512, just south of a big upstanding rock, a small rock mixed with earth had moved down towards the track and the cart road showed a distinct crack and slight settlement. Thereupon he ordered the contractor's men to chip away the face of this small rock that was moving, as it was likely to infringe over running dimensions.

He also ordered the contractor to fill in with earth and to save the crack that had appeared on the cart road. He inspected again on the 30th July when the small rock face referred to above was being out and earth was being cleared from the drain and near the rock. This small rock was about 15ft. x 10ft. x 5ft. On the 8th August he again went up to bridge 512 and found that the cart road had sunk much more than on the 30th July and there was still a slight movement to the south of the big rock. He noticed no sign of movement of the hillside below the cart road, but he noticed 3 or 4 springs 100-150 ft. below the road and immediately below the point where the settlement was taking place. On the morning of 9th August when he was coming up to Darjeeling he saw that a heavy slip had occurred and he would attribute the disaster to the springs below the cart road. He is positive that in July there was no work done between Ghoom and Darjeeling under the special repair estimate Therock referred to in this evidence went away with the big slip.

It appears that near about the bridge on either side of the slip area there is a jhora which is permanent and between the road and the hillside there is a drain. This however is not inconsistent with springs appearing at other places in the locality. The Railway Company, no less than the plaintiff, is interested in preventing a slip occurring at this place. The evidence shows conclusively that no cutting of the hillside took place before 25th July, that on that date a small slip occurred, and that this was the reason for the work being started on 26th July. At the trial the plaintiff sought to make a case that the company had been cutting the hillside for a month before the slip in order to remove two level-crossings between bridges 511 and 512 and to divert the railway track towards the hillside. This was denied (vide D. W. 5) and this case was given up during the argument in this Court. The evidence shows conclusively that by 25th July natural forces were already at work towards causing the land-slip. It may be that the cutting of the hillside hastened this disaster. But no such case was made by the plaintiff. The plaintiff sought to prove that the whole cause of the disaster was the cutting of the hillside, while the defendants started a counter theory that the cause was the appearance of springs. It might be both, but there is nothing to show to what extent each might have contributed to the result and no such argument on behalf of the plaintiff was advanced. Mr. Banerji for the plaintiff has contended that the cause must be either the cutting or the springs, and that if the springs theory be given up then it must be the cutting. The expert evidence on the side of the plaintiff is all speculation. If speculation to some extent be unavoidable we may refer to the following passage in the evidence of Mr. Kerr who was the Superintending Engineer in charge :

The first thing I noticed when I got to the spot is that about 80 to 100 yards of the railway and road had slipped, that the slip had come down in practically a solid mass. It appears to have slipped down on an inclined plane. My reasons for saying this were that I noticed that the trees on the top of the mass that had come down were practically undisturbed and still vertical except round the edges of the slip. It seemed to me that the cause of the slip was that a mass of heavy and very hard rock was overlying a layer of shale and decomposed rock. The slip had been caused in the first place by water finding its way down between this large mass of hard rock and the underlying load of shale and decomposed rock. At the time of my visit the slip had practically slipped ; there was slight movement in the south corner due to an isolated boulder. The main slip, as far as I could make out, was absolutely steady.

This opinion was formed after inspection of the place on 9th August, that is, the day after the slip. This is an officer of experience and the opinion was formed apparently after a very careful observation. There is no reason why, in preference to this, the opinion of the expert witnesses on the side of the plaintiff should be accepted. The burden of proof as to the cause of the slip is upon the plaintiff and it is not discharged merely by showing that the theory of springs is untenable. As a matter of fact, we are not prepared to hold that this theory is altogether untenable merely on the ground that it was not put forward in the written statement. Apparently the officers of the defendants had not formed a definite opinion as to springs being the cause of the slip until some time after the occurrence. But, in any case, the case made by the plaintiff, that the slip was caused by the cutting of the hillside on the part of the Railway Company, is not based on any reliable evidence as to the extent of the cutting. The plaintiff however rushed to make a case of damage at Rs. 50,000 as will appear from the telegram Ex. 10 and the letter Ex. 8, both of 10th August 1927, and the demand made on the Railway Company by the letter Ex. 11 of 11th August 1927.

doned the case of negligence which was sought to be made at the trial. He pointed out that in any case, the defendant had dealt with the property and that he was entitled to the right to support from the adjacent or subjacent soil in respect of land in its natural state. He contended that in any case the action of the railway in dealing with the property resulted in the weakening of the support and therefore the defendants were liable even though they had acted carefully : see Gale on Easement Edn. 11, pp. 360 and 361. Mr. Banerji also drew our attention to the following cases : (1850), 12 Q B 739 (1), (1859), 9 H L C 503 (2), (1881), 6 A C 740 (3) and (1899) A C 594 (4). The fallacy of this argument is that Mr. Banerji has assumed that it is established that the slip was caused by the action on the part of the defendants. But this has not been established and it is this factor which distinguishes the present case from the cases cited. The more important ones amongst the aforesaid decisions have been referred to and discussed in the case of 11 Rang 47 (5) in which the law as regards the right to support has been considered. If a plaintiff proves that owing to an attempted withdrawal of support there is danger or apprehension of injury he may under certain circumstances be entitled to an injunction. But if damage is claimed the right to support must be shown to have been infringed and this infringement takes place as soon as and not until damage is sustained in consequence of the withdrawal of the support. A relation as between cause and effect will have to be established before a decree for damages may be made. This the plaintiff has failed to establish. Considering all the evidence we must agree with the trial Court in holding that the disaster was due to natural causes and that the plaintiff has not succeeded in proving that it was due to any action on the part of the defendants. In this view it does not become necessary to consider the question of damages. The suit was rightly dismissed and the appeal must be dismissed.

As regards costs it has been contended that the costs of the Secretary of State for India in Council should be borne by the railway company at whose instance the former was made a party. Considering the circumstances, however, we think that the appeal should be dismissed with one set of costs to be divided between the two sets of defendants. The appeal must therefore stand dismissed with costs as aforesaid.

Mohammad Hossain — Defendant 2—Respondent.

Appeal No. 1190 of 1932, Decided on 11th January 1935, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Burdwan, D/- 16th February 1932.

Mortgage — Subrogation — Purchaser of equity of redemption expressly agreeing to pay prior mortgages and paying off the same is not entitled to subrogation—He merely discharges his own obligation.

If the debt is the debt of the person who paid or is a debt which he has covenanted to pay, his payment of it raises no right of subrogation but is simply performance of his own obligation or covenant. [P 43 C 2]

Where, therefore, a purchaser of a portion of equity of redemption, retains at the time of the purchase a part of the price and expressly agrees by a covenant in the deed of purchase to discharge the prior mortgages, and thus absolves the mortgagor from the payment of the prior mortgages, taking upon himself the unconditional liability of paying of those debts, he is not entitled to claim subrogation as he merely discharges his own obligation under the covenant: *Throne v. Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit on a mortgage bond which was executed by the predecessor in interest of defendant 1 in favour of the plaintiff on 6th November 1919. Defendant 2, who contested the suit, was impleaded on the ground that he was a purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption. His defence was that he satisfied two prior mortgages in respect of the property which he purchased and consequently he was entitled to stand in the shoes of the prior mortgagees whose claims were satisfied by him. The trial Court repelled the defence of defendant 2 and decreed the suit in full. On appeal by defendant 2 the lower appellate Court dismissed the appeal on the ground that the appeal was incompetent. A Second Appeal (S. A. 505 of 1930) was taken to this Court by defendant 2 and this Court set aside the judgment of the lower appellate Court and directed a re-hearing of the appeal according to law. Thereupon the lower appellate Court has re-heard the appeal and has allowed it in part. It has come to the conclusion that defendant 2 was entitled to get credit for Rs. 210 for satisfying the prior mortgages. Hence the present appeal by the plaintiffs.

The following points were taken by the learned Advocate in support of the appeal: (1) that defendant 2 was not entitled to subrogation, inasmuch as he satisfied the prior mortgages under a covenant, under which he was bound to discharge the prior mortgages; (2) that the payment by defendant 2, being only a payment as agent of the mortgagor, defendant 2 was not entitled to claim any subrogation; (3) that the lower appellate Court in coming to the conclusion that the intention of defendant 2 was to keep the mortgage alive did not take into consideration the fact that the previous mortgage bonds were not taken back at the time when they were alleged to have been satisfied; (4) that out of the five items of the property mortgaged by Ex E only one is included in the plaintiffs' mortgage and consequently defendant 2 who paid off Ex E was not entitled to claim the entire amount paid for the satisfaction of Ex. E by way of subrogation; (5) that the lower appellate Court has not come to any definite finding that the prior mortgages which were satisfied were for consideration; (6) that the satisfaction of the prior mortgage, Ex. E, was not a proper satisfaction, inasmuch as the money was not paid to the mortgagee but to the son-in-law of the mortgagee; and (7) that in any view of the case the lower appellate Court should not have allowed full costs to defendant 2. As regards the first point the contention of the learned Advocate for the appellant is that defendant 2 at the time of his purchase retained a part of the price and expressly agreed by a covenant in the deed of his purchase to discharge the prior mortgages out of the same and consequently he having discharged his own obligation under the covenant was not entitled to claim subrogation. It cannot be disputed and in fact it was not disputed by the learned Advocate for the respondent that if the mortgagor, that is, the vendor of defendant 2, had himself paid off the previous mortgages out of the price, he could not claim subrogation, because in that case he would have performed his own obligation. This principle has now been expressly recognized by the legislature in the Transfer of Property Amendment Act, i. e. Act 20 of 1929. It is however contended by the learned Advocate for the respondent that the rule against subrogation of the mortgagor cannot be extended to defendant 2 who, as purchaser, satisfied the prior mortgages in order to protect his own interest. In other words the contention is that the continuance of the prior mortgages paid up by him must be presumed to be for his benefit, unless the contrary is shown and consequently his intention at the time of the satisfaction of the prior mortgages must be taken to keep them alive as a shield against any other encumbrance which might be discovered later on. Now it is well established that:

When the owner of an Estate pays charges on the Estate which he is not personally liable to pay, the question whether these charges are to be considered as extinguished and as kept alive is simply a question of intention. You may find the intention in the deed or you may find it in the circumstances attending the transaction or you may presume an intention from considering whether it is or is not for his benefit that the charge should be kept on foot: (1895) A C 11 (1) at p. 18: see also 10 I A 62 (2), 11 I A 126 (3), 29 I A 9 (4) at p. 16, 39 I A 68 (5) at p. 81.

5. Syed Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v. Ambika Persad Singh, (1912) 39 Cal 527=14 I C 496=39 I A 68 (P C).

It is equally well established on authorities that:

If the debt is the debt of the person who paid it, or is a debt which he has covenanted to pay, his payment of it raises no right of subrogation, but simply a performance of his own obligation or covenant. See Jones on Mortgages Edn. 7, Vol 2, p. 419. See also on Mortgages, Edn. 9 Vol 2, pp. 1452—1453, Story's Equity Jurisprudence, Edn. 14, Vol. 2, S. 707, (1905) 2 Ch D 587 (6) at 603, 2 C L J 288 (7) at p. 299, 6 C L J 134 (8) at p. 138 and 14 C L J 500 (9) at p. 505 and 36 C W N 4 (10).

In the present case it is clear from the deed of defendant 2's purchase that he absolved the mortgagor from the payment of the prior mortgage debts and took upon himself the unconditional liability of paying off those debts. There can be no doubt therefore that he simply performed his own obligation when he paid off the prior mortgages. Sir Dinshah Mulla in his commentary on the Transfer of Property Act has observed at p. 481 as follows:

The rule against the subrogation of a mortgagor is extended to any purchaser of the equity of redemption or incumbrancer who discharges a prior incumbrance which he is, by contract, express or implied, bound to discharge. A person cannot claim subrogation when he simply performs his own obligation or covenant.

Referring to the decision of the Privy Council reported in 36 C W N 4 (10) referred to above, the learned author has observed as follows:

In a recent case before the Privy Council 36 C W N 4 (10) a purchaser covenanted to pay half the amount due on a mortgage and retained part of the price for the purpose; he did not pay until after the mortgagee had brought the property to sale. He then paid the whole of the decretal amount and set aside the sale. He was not entitled to subrogation as to half the mortgage debt he had covenanted to pay, nor as to the five per cent. paid to the auction purchaser. But he was subrogated as to the other half which he had not covenanted to pay.

I have already stated that defendant 2 was under an obligation under a covenant contained in the deed of his purchase to pay the prior mortgage debts. Therefore where he paid off those debts he simply discharged an obligation which was upon him under an express contract. Under these circumstances I am of opinion that the first contention of the learned Advocate must prevail. In view of my conclusion on the first point it is not necessary to discuss the other points raised by the learned Advocate for the appellant in this appeal. The result therefore is that this appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court are set aside and the decree of the trial Court is restored. The plaintiff will be entitled to get from defendant 2 the costs incurred by him in this appeal and in S. A. 505 of 1930 in this Court as well as the costs of the lower appellate Court after remand.

Leave to appeal under S. 15 of the Letters Patent has been asked for in this case and is refused.

COSTELLO AND LORT-WILLIAMS, JJ.

Dinonath—Plaintiff—Appellant.

v.

Hansraj Gupta and others — Respondents.

Appeal No. 122 of 1933, Decided on 5th July 1934.

Will—Construction—Clause in will to the effect that debts of testator were to be paid out of his estate "including charities and subscriptions promised"—Words including charities and subscriptions promised held to be void for uncertainty—Legacy thereby given held invalid—Charities and subscription held not to be debts—Parol evidence held inadmissible to prove to what charities testator had promised.

The only debts which may be proved in administration are debts at law and do not include promises made without consideration which are not binding. [P 45 C 1]

Where a general charitable intention is disclosed the legacy will not fail for want of uncertainty of object. [P 45 C 2]

Where a clause in a will was "I direct that all my debts be paid out of my estate in the first instance including the charities and subscriptions promised":

Held: that the words in the Cl. 1 of the will "including the charities and subscriptions promised" could not be given legal effect to and that part of the clause was void for uncertainty and legacies thereby given (if any) were invalid. [P 46 C 1]

Held further: that the charities and subscriptions referred to were not debts and could not be included in that category. [P 45 C 2]

Held also: that parol evidence was not admissible to show to what charities the testator had promised "the amounts and subscriptions" although for reasons of equity it might be admissible to establish trust: In re, Whittaker, 42 Ch D 119; In re, Hetley (1902) 2 Ch 866 and Blackwell v. Blackwell (1929) A C 318, Rel. on. [P 45 C 2]

Lort-Williams, J.—The validity or otherwise of a clause in a will is the only question for decision in this appeal.

Raghumull Khandelwal died on 5th September 1926, leaving a will dated 4th September 1926, and considerable property. Cl. 1 of the will is as follows:

I direct that all my debts be paid out of my estate in the first instance including the charities and subscriptions promised.

The will was type-written, but the words "including the charities and subscriptions promised" were written in ink, and initialled in the margin, apparently at the last moment, but before execution. By Cl. 14 thereof the testator bequeathed property of considerable value to trustees for the purposes of "education, hospital, orphanage, social service, widows and other religious and/or charitable purposes," to be applied as the trustees should think fit.

The executors issued advertisements to ascertain the names and the validity of the claims of parties to whom charities and subscriptions had been promised by the testator. Twenty-two claims, amounting in all to over six lacs of rupees, were made, mostly without any documentary proof. Of these alleged promises, no date was forthcoming with regard to three, two were alleged to have been made so far back as 1917, three in 1918, two in 1919, three in 1920, two in 1921, one in 1922, three in 1924, two in 1925 and one of a small amount in 1926, and less than Rs. 20,000 were alleged to have been promised since 1922. Of the total, under one lac of rupees only had been paid by the testator at the date of his death. In these circumstances, the executors decided to ask for the directions of the Court as to whether the charities and subscriptions promised, referred to in Cl. 1 of the will of Raghumull Khandelwal deceased, are valid and binding and payable out of the estate of the deceased or not.

The matter was heard by Ameer Ali, J., and the following issues were raised, inter alia: (1) Can the provisions of Cl. (1) as to "the charities and subscriptions promised" constitute such "charities and subscriptions" debts provable in the administration in the manner of legal debts although they may not be legal debts? (2) If not, are they legal debts? (4) Can the clause be construed as a legacy? (5) If so, is it a valid legacy? (7) What is the true construction and effect of Cl. (1) of the will?

After further discussion the Judge formulated the following questions of construction: (1) What can be included in debts, the word "debts" in an ordinary direction for payment of debts by a testator so as to constitute those claims debts provable in the administration? (2) Can the testator of his volition give an extended meaning to the ordinary significance of the word "debts" in his will? (3) Can Cl. (1) constitute the promisee legatee? Can it be construed as a legacy? (4) If a legacy, is it valid or is it void for uncertainty?

It was contended on behalf of the claimants that there could be a class of debts in an extended sense, something between a debt and a legacy, and that the testator could by the terms of his will extend the class of debts. The learned Judge decided, and in my opinion correctly, against this contention, and held that the only debts which may be proved in administration are debts at law, and do not include promises made without consideration, which are not binding: 42 Ch D 119 (1). On the question of construction, he decided that Cl. 1 should be read as follows: "I direct my debts to be paid including the amounts and subscriptions promised to charities," and that the "amounts and subscriptions promised" were valid legacies, in the nature of limited charitable bequests, if and so far as they had been promised to charities, and he directed that an inquiry should be held to ascertain to whom such promises had been made, and the amounts which had been promised.

The main argument on behalf of the claimants on appeal has been based upon the maxim "id certum est, quod certum reddi potest," and the case of 69 E R 935 (2). This argument is based of course upon the assumption that Cl. 1 is capable of the construction put upon it by the learned Judge. Once it has been decided that the latter part of Cl. 1 means "amounts and subscriptions promised to charities," it might be possible to argue that there is no real uncertainty or ambiguity about the intended legatees, because the testator has defined them as those to whom he has promised "amounts and subscriptions," and these and the amounts promised to each can be ascertained by inquiry, just as debts and creditors can be so ascertained. Even so, in my opinion, parol evidence could not be admitted for this purpose: In (1902) 2 Ch 866 (3), though for reasons of equity it might be admissible to establish a trust: 1929 A C 318 (4). It is true that where a general charitable intent is disclosed, the legacy will not fail for uncertainty of object. But no such general charitable intent is disclosed in Cl. 1: the testator's general charitable intentions are disclosed specifically in Cl. 14. But in my opinion the latter part of Cl. 1 is not capable of the construction put upon it by the learned Judge, and that part is void for uncertainty. It is capable of several constructions, each of which may reasonably represent what the testator really intended. In the first place, it is to be noted that the "charities and subscriptions promised" are included among debts, and are referred to in a clause directing payment of debts, and not in Cl. 14 which deals specifically with charitable bequests. This may mean that only such charities and subscriptions are referred to as are of the nature of legal debts, that is to say, promises which were made for consideration and which were legally binding upon the testator. Such for example, as periodical subscriptions payable to a club or other institution under the terms of a contract of membership, or where work has been undertaken or debt incurred at the promisor's instigation, or upon his promise to indemnify, express or implied. Or it may mean that the testator regarded his promises which only created moral obligations as being equivalent to legal debts, and wished them to be so treated by his executors.

Or the word "including" may have been intended to mean "in addition." That is to say, the charities and subscriptions promised were to be paid as legacies, in addition to the payment of debts. The latter part of the clause may refer only to amounts and subscriptions promised to charities, as thought by the learned Judge. But the testator did not say so, and if these amounts are to be regarded as legacies. there seems to be no valid reason why subscriptions to institutions other than charitable should be excluded. It is almost impossible to say with certainty what the testator meant by the word "subscriptions". He may have meant only subscriptions in arrear at the time of his death, or he may have meant subscriptions which would become due in future, that is to say, he may have meant something in the nature of an endowment; because apparently some of the institutions which were brought into being as a result of his promised help could not be carried on at all, unless such help were to be continuous and permanent. Again it seems necessary to fix some limit of time during which the promises must have been made, but no indication of any such limit is given in the will. The testator cannot have intended to refer to promises which he may have made at any time during his life, perhaps many years before and long-forgotten, and if effect were to be given to such a provision, it would open the door to every kind of fraudulent claim. Yet no other limit is indicated and the Court cannot make the testator's will for him, or supply such a deficiency. It is true that of claims so far received the earliest date from no further back than 1917 if the three undated promises are disregarded, but the fact that the testator had met so few of his alleged promisees at the time of his death, seems to indicate that most of the claimants were not within his recollection or intention when he caused these words to be added at the last moment to Cl. 1 of his will.

For all these reasons I am of opinion that the words "including the charities and subscriptions promised" in Cl. 1 of the will, cannot be given legal effect to, and that this part of the clause is void for uncertainty: that the legacies thereby given (if any) are invalid, and that the charities and subscriptions referred to are not debts, and cannot be included in that category or within the direction to pay them. To this extent only the decision of the learned Judge is modified and the decree is set aside. There is of course nothing to prevent the trustees under Cl. 14, if they should think fit, from including some of these claimants among the charitable beneficiaries indicated in that clause. The appeal is allowed. Mr. H. D. Bose, leading counsel for all the charities interested, having undertaken on their behalf not to appeal against this decision, it is ordered that the Receiver do pay out of the assets in his hands the costs of all parties appearing, including all reserved costs, upon the same terms and conditions, mutatis mutandis, as were imposed by the trial Court. The Advocate-General will get his costs as between attorney and client.

Costello, J.—I agree with the judgment which has been given by my brother Lord-Williams. I desire however to make one or two observations with regard to one point which was put before us in connexion with the question whether in any sense and in any circumstance the testator in using the expression "including the charities and subscriptions promised" could have had in mind obligations which might properly be comprised in the term "debts." It was suggested in the course of the argument before us in support of the validity of the latter part of Cl. (1) that there might possibly be cases where 'a subscription promised' actually constituted a debt enforceable in law and we were referred in that connexion to the decision in 14 Cal 64 (5), where it was held that a suit would lie to recover a subscription promised, if the subscriber knew that, on the faith of his and other subscriptions, an obligation would be incurred to a contractor for the purpose of erecting a building to be paid for out of the moneys subscribed. The plaintiff in that case was a Municipal Commissioner of Howrah and one of the trustees of the Howrah Town Hall Fund. It had been in contemplation to build a Town Hall in Howrah, provided the necessary funds could be raised, and upon that state of things being existent, the persons interested set to work to see what subscriptions they could obtain. When the subscription list had reached a certain point the Commissioners, including the plaintiff, entered into a contract with a contractor for the purpose of building the Town Hall, and plans of the building were submitted and passed; and as the subscription list increased the plans increased also and the original cost which was intended to be Rs. 26,000 swelled up to Rs. 40,000.

For the whole of that Rs. 40,000 the Commissioners, including the plaintiff,

5. Kedar Nath Bhattacharji v. Gorie Mahamed, (1887) 14 Cal 64.

were liable to the contractor as well as for the amount of the original contract, because the additions to the buildings were made by the authority of the Commissioners and with their sanction. The defendant, on being applied to, put down his name in the subscribers' book for Rs. 100, and the question was whether the plaintiff, as one of the persons who made himself liable under the contract to the contractor for the cost of the building, could sue, on behalf of himself and all those in the same interest with him, to recover the amount of the subscription from the defendant. Sir Comer Patheram, C. J., and Beverley, J., held that there was a perfectly valid contract and for good consideration; it contains all the essential elements of a contract which can be enforced in law by the persons to whom the liability is incurred.

On the strength of that case, it was argued before us at any rate as regards those of the claimants under Cl. (1) of the will of Raghumull Khandelwal who had actually carried out or started building operations on the faith of promises made to them by the testator, they could undoubtedly benefit under the terms of Cl. (1), because there had been a relationship of a contractual character between them and the deceased which the law would recognise and give effect to. It was said therefore that the testator was not mistaken in thinking that some of his promises at least would be regarded as "debts" for the purpose of the administration of the estate after his death. With all possible respect to the learned Chief Justice and the other learned Judge who decided the case of 14 Cal 64 (5), just referred to, I take leave to doubt whether that case was rightly decided, particularly having regard to the decision in the English case of 54 L J Ch 811 (6) where in circumstances similar to those of the Howrah case (5), Pearson, J., in the course of his judgment said:

This is the first time when an attempt has been made, and made against a dead man's estate, to make it liable for a promise given by him during his lifetime to make a charitable contribution to any object. Certainly when I heard the case opened, I was struck with the novelty of the application. I asked whether there was any authority for it and I was told that there was none.

Later, the learned Judge says:

Mr. Cookson admitted very fairly at the beginning that, unless he could show that there was a legal debt due from the estate of the testator, he had no case at all, and it was, therefore, necessary for him to shape the case so as to satisfy the Court that there was a positive legal contract entered into by the testator to pay the whole of this sum of £20,000 which rendered the estate of Mr. Hudson liable for so much of the £20,000 as was not paid by him during his lifetime.

Later in the judgment the learned Judge stated:

"I am utterly at a loss to ascertain that there was any consideration."

Again, he says:

The whole thing from beginning to end was nothing more than this: an intention of this gentleman to contribute to the fund and an intention of the Committee, so long as the different members of it remained members of that Committee, to dispose of that fund according to the purposes for which it was contributed. There really is in this matter nothing whatever in the shape of a consideration which could form a contract between the parties.

I respectfully agree with the views expressed by Pearson, J. It is to be noted that this decision was given in the month of May 1885 and the decision of Sir Comer Patheram was given only about a year later. The probability is that having regard to the length of time required for communication between England and India in the light is that English case was not brought to the attention of this Court when the Howrah case was being heard. I make these observations in order to emphasise what my learned brother has already said with regard to the impossibility of construing the clause under consideration as being a direction to pay debts. The terms of the clause are too vague and uncertain and obviously susceptible of such a variety of interpretations for the Court to give effect to them as constituting a gift as the nature of a legacy. I agree that this appeal must be allowed and the judgment of the learned Judge as regards his decision on Cl. (1) set aside. The question of costs is reserved till this day three weeks when this case will be set down "To be mentioned."

v.

Jitmal Mohata

S. C. Suit No. 9061 of 1933 and Suit No. 10448 of 1933, Decided on 13th August 1934.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115—It is not proper for counsel to go alone to Judge and impart information inimical to other side—It is also improper for Judge to pass order after hearing one side only—Case sent back for retrial as result of information so conveyed—Order held liable to be set aside.

It is not proper nor professional on the part of a counsel to go alone before a Judge or Judges in a private room and impart to them a matter very inimical to the other side. So also it is improper that the Judge, having received that information, should give advice as to what course should be taken when they have only heard one side of the question. It is an undesirable and improper course to adopt on the part of both the Counsel and the Judges.

Where, therefore, a Full Bench of the Court of Small Causes orders a case to be sent back for retrial, as a result of some information conveyed to them by the counsel for one party in their private room and at an ex parte interview, its order is liable to be set aside. [P 49 C 1]

Order.—This is the petition of one Jitmal Mohata, the plaintiff in a suit in the Small Cause Court, to obtain an order setting aside a direction of the Full Bench of that Court which allowed a re-opening of two cross-actions originally heard by the Sixth Judge of that Court. The learned Judge in question is no longer a Judge of the Small Cause Court. When the hearing for the new trial came on before the Full Bench he had been succeeded by another learned Judge. It is the practice of the Small Cause Court to form their Full Bench from the trial Judge and the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court. On this occasion the Chief Judge was sitting with the successor of the trial Judge. The application was made under S. 38, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. The matter comes before me by virtue of the provisions of the well-known S. 115, Civil P. C. It is a some-what curious and unusual combination of facts which has been detailed in the various affidavits before me now. What appears to have happened is this. The conduct of the petitioner's case in the trial Court was in the hands of a Mr. Bonnerjee. When this application for the new trial came on (and I may mention that it was launched by the respondents to this application, who were the opponents of Jitmal Mohata), a Mr. Dutt was briefed to look after their interests. On the other side, leading Mr. Bonnerjee, was another Mr. Dutt. Before the learned Judges entered the Court, when they were still in their private room, a certified copy of the schedule of the debts and assets in insolvency of the trying Judge was placed in the hands of Mr. Dutt, the advocate for the respondent. Mr. Dutt looked through the schedule and there he found that Jitmal Mohata, the petitioner here, figured as a creditor of the trying Judge to the extent of Rs. 500. Mr. Dutt showed this schedule to the other Mr. Dutt, and I imagine that both the learned gentlemen at once appreciated that an awkward and embarrassing position had arisen. Mr. Dutt for the respondents, after some conversation with the lawyers on the other side, came to the conclusion and announced his intention of communicating this information to the learned Judges in their room.

What exactly happened there is somewhat in doubt. Mr. Dutt was called before me and gave his evidence, I thought, in quite a straightforward manner; but he did not say in chief in answer to Mr. Ghose that he told the Judges that he had informed the other Mr. Dutt of what had been found out and that he had asked him to come with him into the Judges' room and be present at the interview. Cross-examined rather severely however he stated that he told the learned Judges that he had communicated with his opponent and asked him to be present at the interview. Subsequently he admitted his recollection was not clear on the point. The line taken by the learned Judges at the end of the interview was that the Chief Judge advised Mr. Dutt to go back into Court, see his opponent and suggest to him that in the public interest and in the interest of the reputation of the judiciary they should come to an agreement privately that a new trial should take place. He did this, but the other Mr. Dutt refused to settle. In answer to me Mr. Dutt in the witness box admitted that when he obtained this information about the trial Judge he at once realised that he had an asset on his client's behalf and he had a new weapon to use in his application for a new trial. The learned Judges seem to have appreciated this too. There is no other inference to be drawn from the advice the Chief Judge gave to Mr. Dutt. It was argued also, though rather half-heartedly, that there were two other legal arguments developed before the learned Judges in addition to the insolvency point. In the upshot the Full Bench allowed the new trial, and it is from that order, as I have already indicated, that this petition arises.

I have to make up my mind whether the Full Bench was influenced to send the case back for retrial by what was told them in their private room at this ex parte interview. With regard to this question the whole matter seems to me to turn on the manner it was presented to the Full Bench. Is it proper, is it professional, that counsel should go alone before a Judge or Judges in their private room and impart to the Judges in question a matter very inimical to the other side? And is it proper also that on having received that information the Judges in question should give advice as to what course should be taken when they had only heard one side of the question? It seems to me that there can be no doubt that this is an undesirable and improper course to adopt both, on the part of the advocate and on the part of the learned Judges. It was the Advocate's duty either not to visit the learned Judges at all and bring the matter out in open Court, or, if he was going to communicate with them privately, to insist on taking the legal advisers of the other side with him. On the other hand, it seems to me that it was no less the duty of the Judges in their private chamber to disregard the information altogether or to insist on hearing it communicated in the presence of the legal advisers of the other side, and to hear their arguments and contentions on this very controversial point as soon as possible. As I pointed out, these were not the courses which were adopted, and from my view I am convinced that the real reason why the case was sent back for retrial was because of this very striking, very harmful, piece of evidence which was presented to the Judges of the Full Bench in private.

The two other arguments which are said to be legal arguments, one based on a question of discount and the other based on a question of interest, do not seem to me, in truth and in fact, to be legal arguments at all. Those of us who have practised at the Bar know how easy it is to dress up a question of fact into a question of law, which on investigation proves to have no legal aspect whatever, or a legal aspect of such a minor character as not to deserve the dignity of the adjective. In these circumstances, I think that this order of the Full Bench of the Small Cause Court ought to be set aside, and that the judgment of the original trying Court should be restored. I may add that it has been pointed out to me that there is a possible explanation of the connection of the petitioner here with the debt to the learned Judge. Nothing has really been decided, because both sides have not been heard, and I am not going to suppose that judicial human nature is necessarily going to be unduly influenced by the fact that a Judge is engaged in trying one of his own creditor's case. It may be very undesirable that a case should be tried by a Judge where his creditor is concerned. It may very well be that such a question may be subject of an order for transfer; but once a Judge has undertaken the duty of trying a case of this nature, I am not going to presuppose that he would necessarily decide it in a different fashion. For these reasons the order I have indicated will be the order of the Court. Costs will follow the event.

Section 181, Ben. Ten. Act, in express terms protects the incidents of a service tenure from being affected by the provisions in the earlier portion of the Act by which occupancy and other rights are to be acquired. [P 51 C 1]

It is one of the incidents of service tenure that, where the land is held really in lieu of remuneration for service, the landlord has a right to resume it on refusal to render service. This right is specially protected by S. 181, irrespective of the fact whether the lands are agricultural or not or that the person holding it on service tenure actually cultivates it or not. Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of possession. Plaintiffs' case is that the lands in suit were made over to the defendants to be held by them in lieu of service to be performed by them, the nature of the service being washing of the clothes of the plaintiffs. The land in suit is plot No. 504 and is admittedly the land used for the purpose of growing crops. The plaintiffs, I may state, are the proprietors of Taluk No. 900, Nos. 1 to 3 having two-thirds share therein and Nos. 4 to 7 the remaining one-third share. Of the three defendants who are washermen by caste, only defendant 1 put in a contest. Her only defence appearing from the written statement was that plot No. 504 along with Plot No. 503 constituted an ordinary tenancy held under the proprietors of Taluks Nos. 900 and 728 at a cash rent of Rs. 3 per year. Her case was not that though she and the other defendants had to render service to the landlords, the plaintiffs, the lands were only burdened with service.

Both the Courts below have held that plot No. 504 appertains to Taluk No. 900 alone and the story of the defendant that she held plots Nos. 503 and 504 at a cash rent under the proprietors of Taluks Nos. 907 and 728 is a false one. The Court of first instance held that it was really a service tenure and inasmuch as the defendants have refused to perform the service, plaintiffs are entitled to khas possession. In that view of the matter the learned Munsiff decreed the suit. Defendant 1 preferred an appeal to the Subordinate Judge. The learned Subordinate Judge agrees with the finding of the learned Munsiff that the land in suit appertains to Taluk No. 900 alone and that the defence of defendant 1 that it along with plot No. 503 constituted an ordinary holding under the proprietors' Taluks Nos. 900 and 728 at a cash rent of Rs. 3 is a false one. But the lower appellate Court starts for defendant 1 a case which she never made in her written statement, a case of which there is no indication either in the judgment of the trial Court. The learned Subordinate Judge held that although no cash money was payable for the occupation of plot No. 504, the defendants had to render service for being allowed to remain in occupation of the same. These services he held were not the sole consideration for this occupation, that is to say, he held that the land in suit was only burdened with service. For the purpose of coming to this conclusion he relied upon an entry in the record of rights which was put in by the plaintiffs for the purpose of establishing their title to the lands in suit.

The entry shows that plot No. 504 is included in Taluk No. 900 of which the plaintiffs are the proprietors and the defendants are in possession. The nature of their interest is described by two words "Karsa Chakran". The learned Subordinate Judge interprets these words to mean a holding burdened with service. I do not agree with the interpretation put by the learned Subordinate Judge on this entry. If that entry has any meaning it means that the lands constituted a service tenure, the character of the lands being agricultural lands. I am not however basing my judgment upon the interpretation put upon the words 'Karsa Chakran'. It may be that these words may have been misconstrued, but that would not be a question of law. I do think that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be supported because he had no justification to make at the appellate stage for the defendants not only a new case but a case inconsistent with the defence as put forward in the Court of first instance, a defence which has been negatived both by the trial Court and by the lower appellate Court.

Mr. Ghose who appears on behalf of the respondents seeks to support the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge on a ground not mentioned in the judgment, but as it is a pure question of law I have allowed him to argue it. Mr. Ghose relying upon the case of 61 I A 93 (1) says that inasmuch as the lands which are in occupation of the defendants are agricultural lands actually cultivated by them, the defendants cannot be ejected, they having acquired occupancy rights therein although the lands were held for the purpose of rendering service. He says that although it may be that the lands were held in lieu of remuneration for the service still the character of the lands being agricultural lands and inasmuch as the defendants are themselves cultivating the same they have acquired occupancy rights. I do not see how the said decision of Sir John Wallis in 61 I A 93 (1) helps Mr. Ghose. There, the plaintiffs held the land under a service tenure. They had let out the same to certain cultivators who were the defendants. Later on, they instituted a suit for possession against the defendants. The defendants set up a plea that they had acquired occupancy rights. The Privy Council held reversing the decision of the Patna High Court that the defence was a valid defence, that is to say, although the plaintiffs held the lands as a service tenure they had let out the lands to the defendants who were agriculturists; the defendants had acquired occupancy rights and there was nothing in S. 181 to prevent the acquisition of occupancy rights by the defendants. That was a case where a question was raised between the service tenure holder and his tenants. It was not a case between the service tenure holder and his landlord.

Section 181, Ben. Ten. Act, in express terms, protects the incidents of service tenure from being affected by the provisions in the earlier portion of the Bengal Tenancy Act by which occupancy or other rights are to be acquired. It is one of the incidents of a service-tenure, that is to say, where the land is held really in lieu of remuneration for service that on refusal to render the service the landlord has a right to resume. This right is specially protected by the provisions of S. 181, Ben. Ten. Act, no matter whether the lands are agricultural or not and no matter whether the defendant, the man who is holding on service tenure, actually cultivates it or not. In this view of the matter, I do hold that there is no substance in this contention. The result is that I set aside the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge and restore those of the learned Munsiff. The appeal is accordingly allowed with costs to the plaintiffs throughout.

(a) Vendor and Purchaser—Breach of contract—Purchaser paying money in part payment of price and not as earnest money is entitled to recover it.

Where a contract of sale is not completed, the purchaser paying certain sum in part payment of the price and not as earnest money is entitled to recover it with interest whether the breach is on his part or on the part of the seller. [P 52 C 1]

(b) Vendor and Purchaser—Contract of sale—Earnest money is guarantee for performance of contract—Breach on part of vendee—Earnest money is forfeited—Vendee contending that earnest money is not forfeited must prove that agreement prevents forfeiture.

Earnest money is a guarantee for the performance of the contract. If the transfer goes forward, it is a part of the purchase price, but if it falls through on account of the default of or breach by the vendee, it is forfeited, in the absence of a contract either express in its terms or to be inferred from the whole contract. If the purchaser says that the earnest money has not been forfeited, though the breach is on his part, he has to show that the agreement prevents the forfeiture. Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of the defendant and arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiffs to recover from him a sum of Rs. 475 (with interest) paid to him on the basis of a contract by which the latter agreed to sell to the plaintiffs a piece of land. The contract was an oral one, entered into on 28th Kartick 1335. By it the price was fixed at Rs. 1,375. It is the plaintiff's case that at the date of contract Rs. 375 were paid by them as earnest money and later on a further sum of Rs. 100 was paid in part payment of the price. There is nothing to show that the last mentioned sum was paid by way of earnest. The plaintiffs came to Court with the case that the balance of the price was to be paid in the month of Magh 1335 at the time of the conveyance, but before that, that is, at some time in Pous 1335, the defendant refused to sell. The defence is that the time for completion according to the contract was Augrahan 1335 and that the conveyance, was not executed by him as the plaintiffs failed to find the money. Both the Courts below have held that the contract could not be completed on account of the refusal by the defendant to convey his land, the breach being on his part. Whether the breach was on the part of the defendant or on the part of the plaintiffs, there is no defence to the plaintiffs' claim for the refund of Rs. 100. That was not earnest money and the plaintiffs are entitled to recover it with interest in any event. The question, therefore, is whether the plaintiffs can recover the other sum, namely Rs. 375, which admittedly was paid by way of earnest. It is well settled on the authorities that earnest money is a guarantee for the performance of the contract.

If the transaction goes forward it is a part of the purchase price, but if it falls through on account of the default of or breach by the vendee, it is forfeited, in the absence of a contract either express in its terms or to be inferred from the whole contract. 1926 P C 1 (1), 24 C W N 967 (2), 1930 Bom 213 (3), and 41 All 324 (4). If the purchaser says that the earnest has not been forfeited, though the breach is on his part, he has to show that the agreement prevents the forfeiture. This he can do, if the contract says so in plain terms, or if the same can be inferred from all the terms of contract itself. In 9 A & E 508 (5) such an agreement was inferred from a clause in the contract that the party in default would pay a penalty of £1000, Lord Deenham, C. J., observing that "the intent of the parties being clear, that there should be no other remedy." Both the Courts below have held that time was the essence of the contract, but have not decided the question as to whether the date for completion was the month of Magh or the month of Augrahan. If the finding that time was the essence of the contract is a correct finding based on evidence, the question as to what was the time for completion, whether the month of Augrahan or Magh 1335, is a material one, as the plaintiffs' case is that the defendant refused to sell when an agent of theirs went to him with a part of the balance of the price in the middle of the month of Pous 1335. On looking into the judgments it seems as if the finding that time was of the essence is not based on evidence. The learned Subordinate Judge in one line says that he agrees with the Munsiff's finding on the point. The Munsiff records his findings on the said point in the following terms :

It is quite clear that time was a very prominent material of the contract. As a matter of fact, in a contract for sale of land like the present, usually time must have counted. I, therefore, hold that time was an essence of the contract.

If he meant to say that time is of the essence of the contract, simply because a period for completion is mentioned in a contract for sale of land, he is certainly wrong. It is not ordinarily of the essence of the contract, but the parties can make it so by express agreement in the contract itself or subsequently by giving reasonable notice to complete on a certain day or if the nature of the property intended to be sold requires it, as for instance if the contract is for sale of a life interest or a mining lease given for a fixed period of time. For the reasons given above I hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for Rs. 100 with interest, but their claim to the further sum of Rs. 375 which was paid by way of earnest must be further considered, and for that purpose I remand the case to the lower appellate Court. That Court will consider on the evidence the following points: (i) as to whether time was of the essence of the contract; (ii) if so, whether the time of completion was Augrahasan or Magh 1335. If it finds that time was of the essence of the contract and the time for completion was Augrahasan, it will dismiss the plaintiffs' claim to that sum of money, namely to Rs. 375 and interest claimed thereon. If the Court below finds either that time was not of the essence of the contract or that the time for completion was the month of Magh 1335, it will decree the plaintiffs' claim to that sum, for I maintain the finding of the lower appellate Court, which must be taken along with the plaintiffs' case, that the defendant refused to sell the lands in the middle of Pous 1335. The appeal is accordingly allowed in part and the case remanded to the lower appellate Court with directions to decide the plaintiffs' claim to Rs. 375 and interest thereon in the way indicated above. As the success of the appellant is only partial, the parties will bear their respective costs of this appeal. Future costs will be in the discretion of the lower appellate Court.

*Case remanded.A. I. R. 1936 Calcutta 53

DERBYSHIRE, C. J., AND COSTELLO, J.

Ramprosad Surajmull — Plaintiff — Appellant.

v.

Motilal—Defendant—Respondent.

Appeal No. 8 of 1935, Decided on 22nd August 1935, from order of Panckridge, J., D/- 23rd January 1934, and 14th December 1934, respectively.

Calcutta High Court (Reference) Rules, Ch. 26, Rr. 4 and 8—P obtaining decree against D in 1920 for certain sum less an unascertained sum—Suit referred to Registrar for taking accounts—P appealing from decree—Suit remanded for finding and finding given—P doing nothing for 9 years till 1929—P's appeal coming for hearing in 1929, dismissed for default—Reference never proceeded with—P again doing nothing for five years till 1934—D in 1934 praying that suit be dismissed for want of prosecution—P's suit dismissed—Matter held to be governed by Rr. 4 and 8—Suit held to be rightly dismissed.

P obtained a decree in 1920 for a certain amount less one definite sum and less an unascertained amount. The suit was referred to the Assistant referee to take the accounts and the further hearing of the suit was adjourned until after the reference. P appealed from the decree. The suit was remanded to the trial Court for a finding on certain facts and there was a finding by the Court. Nothing however was done for about nine years, when P's appeal appeared in the peremptory list. P did not appear and his appeal was dismissed as also an application by him for restoration of his appeal. The reference was never in fact proceeded with and nothing of any consequence was done by P for a space of five years. After five years, in 1934, a summons was taken out by the defendant D asking for an order that the suit be dismissed with costs for want of prosecution. P secured an adjournment and was directed to file an affidavit. Nothing was done by P. He again sought an adjournment on the next date, it was refused and P's suit was dismissed for want of prosecution:

Held: that the matter was governed by the provisions of Rr. 4 and 8, Ch. 26, Reference Rules. It was P's duty and not that of the defendant D to file the decree in the Account Department of the Registrar's office and that was not done and therefore the lower Court was justified in coming to the conclusion that D could apply under R. 8 for dismissal of the suit for want of prosecution; even if D were held to be the party having the carriage of reference it was open to P, on D not having taken any steps within 30 days, to ask under 2nd part of R. 8 to have all proceedings under the reference stayed and to obtain a final decree in the suit which he could execute. After the lapse of 30 days P had a present right to enforce the decree as he could have applied to have the reference stayed and a final decree made. P's position was analogous to that of a mortgagee who obtained a preliminary decree and then did nothing towards putting himself into the position of being able to obtain a final decree before the lapse of 12 years from the date of the preliminary decree: 1914 P C 150, Ref.; 1924 P C 198, Disting.

Costello, J.—This is an appeal against two orders made by Panckridge, J., one on 23rd January 1934 and the second on 14th December 1934. The latter order was made as the result of an application on behalf of the plaintiffs in the suit to set aside a previous order which had been made by the learned Judge, purporting to act under R. 8, Ch. 26, Reference Rules, of this Court whereby the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed for want of prosecution. An examination of the history of the litigation between the parties demonstrates very clearly that neither the plaintiffs nor the defendant have any merits in the matter. The suit was instituted as long ago as 13th December 1918 for the recovery of the sum of Rs. 12,665-11-9 alleged to be due on a mutual, open and current account. The written statement was filed on 14th February 1919 and the defence taken by the defendant was to this effect: the current account referred to in the plaint was admitted but defendant claimed to be entitled to credit by way of set off for the sum of Rs. 3,343-12-0 said to be due to the defendant from the plaintiffs on account of certain dealings in silver bars. The defendant also claimed to be entitled to a half share of the profits of a joint venture in connection with a transaction concerning 75 bales of Grey Shirting material. On 9th January 1920 Greaves, J., made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. That decree was for the amount claimed less the set off claimed by the defendant on the silver bar account and less such profits as the defendant might be entitled to arising out of the joint transaction in Grey Shirting material. It is important to observe the precise form of the decree. The operative part reads as follows :

It is ordered and decreed that the defendants do pay to the plaintiff firm the sum of Rupees 12,665-11-9 less the sum of Rs. 3,343-12-0 and also the amount representing the half share of the defendant's firm in the net profits accrued in respect of the joint venture in respect of 75 bales of Grey Shirting to be agreed upon between the parties in the pleadings in this suit mentioned with interest to run after 7 days on the ascertained amount if the amount is agreed at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until realisation thereof; otherwise the question of interest be reserved until after the Assistant Referee of this Court shall have made his report as hereinafter directed.

And then comes the direction :

And it is further ordered and decreed that the further hearing of this suit be adjourned and that it be referred to the said Assistant Referee to take an account of the profits as were made by the joint venture in respect of

Then there is a direction with regard to costs. So that on 9th January 1920 the position was that the plaintiffs obtained a decree for a certain amount less one definite sum and less an unascertained amount, and the further hearing of the suit had been adjourned until after the reference. From that decree the plaintiff appealed on 9th February 1920. On 16th June of that year there was a decree made by the Court of appeal remanding the suit to the Court of first instance in order that there might be a clear finding with regard to the alleged existence of an agreement for the dealings and transactions between the parties to form part of the one current account in connexion with which the plaintiff was making his claim in the suit.

The matter again came before Greaves, J. and on 26th July 1920 there was a further finding by him on the issue which was sent back to him by the Court of appeal. Greaves, J. held that the agreement which was set out in para. 2 of the written statement had been satisfactorily established. Greaves, J. also made an order that the costs of the further hearing on remand were to be dealt with by the Court of appeal when the matter was further considered by that Court. For some reason or other, which has not been satisfactorily explained, nothing more happened until virtually nine years later. On 3rd July 1929 the plaintiffs' appeal appeared in the peremptory list. The plaintiffs, it seems, did not appear and the appeal was then dismissed with costs for want of prosecution. It appears that after that there was some kind of negotiation of a settlement. Be that as it may, the reference was never in fact proceeded with, but on 15th July 1929 the plaintiffs made an application for the restoration of the appeal to the list. That application was dismissed with costs. Nothing of any consequence was done by the plaintiffs for the space of a further five years. Accordingly on 6th January 1934 a summons was taken out by the defendant returnable on 9th January 1934 asking for an order that the suit should be dismissed with costs for want of prosecution. The plaintiffs secured an adjournment until 23rd January 1934 and they were directed to file an affidavit by 19th January. Apparently however nothing was done prior to 23rd January. On that date the matter came before Panckridge, J. and an attorney appeared on behalf of the plaintiffs and sought a further adjournment which was refused, and the learned Judge thereupon made an order dismissing the plaintiff's suit for want of prosecution. That is one of the orders now complained of.

On 5th February 1934 there was an application on behalf of the plaintiffs for a re-consideration of the matter, as they said, in view of the plaintiffs' inability to attend the Court on 23rd January. That application originally came before an acting Judge of this Court who took the view that the matter ought to stand over until after the return of Panckridge, J. at the end of the long vacation in 1934. Ultimately the matter was dealt with by Panckridge, J. on 14th December 1934, when the application was heard by him and ultimately dismissed by a judgment of that date, and that is the judgment we have now to consider. The learned Judge said :

This is an application on behalf of the plaintiffs to set aside an order I made purporting to act under R. 8, Ch. 26 of the Reference Rules dismissing the plaintiffs' suit for want of prosecution.

Then he set out some of the history of the matter. Then he states :

No steps were taken with regard to the reference, although it was prima facie incumbent on the plaintiffs to take such steps in terms of R. 4. The reason for the plaintiffs' failure to take any action in the matter is said to be the fact that negotiations were in progress for an amicable arrangement between themselves and the defendant. The defendant took out a summons which was returnable on 9th January. The plaintiffs appeared on that day and at their request I adjourned the application until 23rd January in order that they might have an opportunity of placing before me materials as grounds of opposition to the order asked for in the defendants' summons. 23rd January arrived and on that occasion no materials in opposition were forthcoming and I made an order in terms of the summons taken out by the defendants and dismissed the suit.

The present appeal, as I have said, is directed against the two orders of 23rd January 1934 and 14th December 1934 and it was filed on 4th January 1935, that is to say, very nearly 12 months after the making of the first of those two orders. No satisfactory explanation has been put forward by Mr. Ghose for no appeal against the order of 23rd January being preferred at the proper time. Mr.

Ghose merely says in extenuation rather than in explanation that in the circumstances no appeal was filed because on 5th February there was the application for a reconsideration of the matter by the learned Judge himself. In my view the filing of that application for a review affords no protection to the plaintiffs in answer to the contention that so far as the order of 23rd January 1934 is concerned this appeal was filed out of time, in that it was lodged long after the lapse of twenty days from the date of the order. We are therefore in this position: We can only concern ourselves with the judgment and order of 14th December 1934. There is one further passage in that judgment which I desire to quote. The learned Judge said :

The first point taken by learned counsel for the plaintiffs is that Rr. 4 and 8 have no application. He points out that the reference was directed with a view to reducing the defendant's liability under the decree and that therefore the defendant should take the necessary steps in the reference. He also submits that the reference rules cannot contemplate the dismissal of a money decree already passed. I think with regard to that it is sufficient if I say that no reason has been shown why these legal arguments could not have been advanced when the matter was before me on the former occasion, and I do not think that I should be justified in entertaining them now.

In my opinion the only matter the learned Judge had to consider on 14th Dec. 1934 was whether there was sufficient cause or excuse for the plaintiffs in not appearing on 23rd January 1934 and putting whatever contention they then desired to make. Upon a consideration of the facts of the case and after examining the affidavits which have been put in, in connection with this matter I think we ought to come to the conclusion that the learned Judge was quite justified in holding as he did that there was no reason why he should re-open the matter or reconsider the order which he had made on 23rd January 1934. And even if we go behind that order and consider the merits of the case I should say that the learned Judge was, in the circumstances of this case, quite right in holding that the matter was governed by the provisions of R. 4 and R. 8, Ch. 26 of the Rules of this Court. Mr. B. C. Ghose has contended that the plaintiffs were in this position : they obtained a decree made on 9th January 1920 which was still subsisting and therefore it was not competent to the learned Judge to dismiss the suit and in that connexion Mr. Ghose put before us the decision in 51 I A 321 (1) and he relied upon the judgment of Lord Phillimore. It is to be observed however at the outset that that judgment was given in connexion with a case which was originally filed not in this Court or any other Chartered High Court but in one of the Courts of the Mofussil. Therefore it was not a case which fell within the purview of any rules analogous to R. 4 or R. 8, Ch. 26 of the Rules of this Court. In my opinion these two rules are applicable to the present case, and the only question which arises is whether or not the terms of the two rules are such as would enable the learned Judge to make the order which he made on 23rd January 1934. R. 4 provides that :

An office copy of every decree or order directing a reference shall be filed in the Account Department of the Registrar's office by the party having the carriage of the reference within a week after the filing of the decree or order, and in default, may be filed in the Account Department by any other party within a week thereafter.

Mr. B. C. Ghose has argued that in the present case the plaintiffs had not the carriage of the reference because the effect of the decree of 9th January 1920 was to entitle them to a certain sum less an unascertained sum which might be deducted for the benefit of the defendant after the matter had been considered by the Assistant Referee. Mr. Ghose contended that in the circumstances it was the duty of the defendant to set in motion the machinery, necessary for the taking of the account in connexion with the Gray Shirting business. If that was the position no doubt it could be said that the defendant was the party having the carriage of the reference, but in my opinion nothing occurred in this case which could rightly be said to have the effect of relieving the plaintiffs from the duty of proceeding with their suit so as to put themselves into the position of being able to obtain a decree which they could eventually put to execution. The plaintiffs instituted the suit and they were seeking to recover a sum of money from the defendant. They could not recover any sum whatever from the defendant until after the reference had taken place. Therefore it seems to me that in the circumstances of this case the learned Judge could come to the conclusion that it was the duty of the plaintiffs and not that of the defendant to file the decree in the Account Department of the Registrar's office. Admittedly that was not done. In fact no steps were taken within thirty days to apply for and file the decree or order of reference and no office copy was filed in the Account Department within the time prescribed by R. 4. Therefore it was not unreasonable for the learned Judge to come to the conclusion that the defendant could properly apply under the provisions of R. 8 for the dismissal of the suit for want of prosecution as contemplated by that rule. Mr. Ghose has put forward somewhat the extravagant and indeed startling proposition that it was open to the plaintiffs to rest content with the decree which they had obtained (which, said Mr. Ghose, was merely a preliminary decree) and do nothing towards putting themselves into the position of being able to enforce that decree for an indefinite and indeed infinite period of time. That is a proposition which cannot be accepted. As I pointed out to Mr. Ghose in the course of the argument it seems to me that the plaintiffs in this case are in a dilemma for either they obtained a decree or they did not. If they did not obtain a decree in the strict sense of the term then quite clearly it was open to the learned Judge to dismiss the suit for want of prosecution seeing that some 16 or 17 years had elapsed since the date of the institution of the suit and some five or six years since the plaintiffs had made any active move in the matter. If on the other hand it can rightly be said that the plaintiffs did obtain a decree, then the position was that the decree, even if it was merely a decree in the nature of a preliminary decree, was subject to the provisions of Art. 183 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act, for the language of that Article is sufficiently wide to cover the position which the plaintiffs had created for themselves. That Article prescribes that the period of limitation within which a judgment, decree or order of a Court established by Royal Charter can be enforced is a period of 12 years and that period begins to run from the time when the present right to enforce the judgment, decree or order accrues to some person capable of enforcing such right.

Now, as I see it, in the year 1920 the position was this: the plaintiffs ought to have filed a copy of the decree in the Account Department as being the parties having the carriage of the Reference, but even if the defendant was the party having the carriage of the Reference because it was to his advantage to have a Reference held on the chance of being able to set off a certain amount against the plaintiffs' claim, then the defendant not having taken any steps within 30 days it would have been open to the plaintiffs under the 2nd part of the provisions of R. 8 to ask that all further proceedings under the Reference should be stayed and thereupon to obtain a final decree in the suit, that is to say, a decree in such form as the plaintiffs could proceed to put it into execution. The plaintiffs however did nothing whatever. Therefore it seems that it must be taken that after the lapse of 30 days the plaintiffs had a present right to enforce the decree seeing that they could have applied to have the Reference stayed and a final decree made. That they did not do. The position seems to have been very analogous to that of a mortgagee who has obtained a preliminary decree and then does nothing towards putting himself into the position of being able to obtain a final decree before the lapse of 12 years from the date of the preliminary decree. In connection with this point I may refer to the case of 21 C L J 118 (2) which was a case which ultimately came before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Their Lordships dismissed an appeal from the decision of this Court which was to the effect that where the Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction passes a preliminary mortgage decree under S. 88, T. P. Act, 1882, an application under S. 89 of the Act for an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged property made after 12 years from the date of the preliminary decree would be barred by Art. 183, Sch. 1, Lim. Act, 1908. In all the circumstances of this case I am of opinion that the judgment given by Panckridge, J., on 14th December 1934, was correct and therefore this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

DERBYSHIRE, C. J. AND COSTELLO, J.
Inland Steam Navigation Workers' Union, In re.

Appeal: decided on 19th August 1935, against orders of Registrar of Trade Unions, D/- 7th June 1935.

Trade Unions Act (1926), Ss. 8, 11—Application for registration of Union—Objects of Union not going outside objects prescribed in Act and all requirements of Act complied with—Registrar is bound to register Union and is not entitled to go into other questions—Appeals from orders refusing to register Union should be taken by single Judge sitting alone.

The Office of the Registrar of Trade Unions is one created by the Trade Unions Act of 1926, and the functions which the Registrar has to perform are prescribed by that Act. The functions of the Registrar are laid down in S. 8.

Where an application is filed before the Registrar for the registration of a Union, under the provisions of the Trade Unions Act, the duties of the Registrar are to examine the application and to look at the objects for which the Union is formed. If those objects do not go outside the objects prescribed in the Act, and if all the requirements of the Act and the regulations made thereunder are complied with, it is his duty to register the Union. [P 60 C 2]

An application filed before the Registrar for registration of a Union was rejected by him on the ground that the Union was for all practical purposes the same as another Union which had been previously declared unlawful under S. 16, Criminal Law Amendment Act. The Registrar in passing the order relied on a letter written by the Secretary of the Union to the Bengal Government in which it was prayed that the ban on the other Union be raised. The Registrar appeared to have acted on the letter without giving the Union any opportunity of explaining the statements made therein. The Union went in appeal to the High Court under S. 11. The original proceedings were started by a petition in which the petitioner described himself as the Secretary of the Union and prayed that a Rule might be issued to the Registrar to show cause why the order passed by him should not be set aside. Later an application was made to the High Court for having the matter put in the list to be dealt with before it and for a date to be fixed for the hearing:

Held: that the functions of the Registrar were limited to seeing that the requirements of the Act had been complied with and he was not entitled to go into the question, whether or not the Union in question was the same which had been declared unlawful. The Registrar, when he relied on the letter to the Bengal Government, ought to have brought to the notice of the Union before he acted on it and given it opportunity to explain the statements made therein. The order of the Registrar refusing to register the Union should be directed to be taken by a single Judge sitting alone so that if necessary, evidence could be taken. [P 60 C 2]

Per Costello, J.—That there was considerable doubt as to whether the procedure that had been followed was correct. [P 61 C 1]

I. P. Mukerjee—for Appellant (Union).

S. M. Bose—for the Registrar.

Derbyshire, C. J.—This matter comes to us by way of appeal from the Registrar of Trade Unions for Bengal. The appeal is brought under S. 11, Trade Unions Act of 1926. [Sub-Ss. 1 to 3 read as follows:]

"Any person aggrieved by any refusal of the Registrar to register a Trade Union or by the withdrawal or cancellation of a certificate of registration may, within such period as may be prescribed, appeal (a) where the head office of the Trade Union is situated within the limits of a Presidency town or of Rangoon, to the High Court, or (b) where the head office is situated in any other area, to such Court, not inferior to the Court of an additional or assistant Judge of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf for that area. (2) The appellate Court may dismiss the appeal, or pass an order directing the Registrar to register the Union and to issue a certificate of registration under the provisions of S. 9 or setting aside the order for withdrawal or cancellation of the certificate, as the case may be, and the Registrar shall comply with such order. (3) For the purposes of an appeal under sub-S. (1) an appellate Court shall, so far as may be, follow the same procedure and have the same powers, as it follows and has when trying a suit under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and may direct by whom the whole or any part of the costs of the appeal shall be paid, and such costs shall be recovered as if they had been awarded in a suit under the said Code."

In the petition which brings the matter before us it is stated that on 8th March 1935 a meeting of the employees of all Inland Steamer Services in the Province of Bengal was held at Jorabagan Park in the town of Calcutta and the employees assembled resolved to form a Union in the name of "Inland Steam Navigation Workers' Union" and the said Union was formed on the date. It is also stated in para. 2 that the rules of the said "Inland Steam Navigation Workers' Union" were so framed as to enable all employees of all Inland Steamer Services in India to become members of the said Union and the subscription was fixed on a monthly basis. Para. 3 states that thereafter, on the 26th March 1935, an application was filed before the Registrar of Trade Unions for registration of the said Union under the provisions of the Indian Trade Unions Act, 1926. Para. 4 states that thereupon, on the 16th May 1935, the Registrar refused to register the Union and passed the following order:

The application below purports to be an application for registration under the Indian Trade Unions Act, 1926, on behalf of a Union calling itself the Inland Steam Navigation Workers' Union. A few days before this application was filed the General Secretary of this Union addressed the Government of Bengal in a letter dated 22nd March 1935 and stated that he had been directed by the general body of the Inland Steam Navigation Workers' Union, formerly known as R. S. N. and I. G. N. and Ry. Workers' Union, to approach Government and request that the notification under S. 16, Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908, declaring the R. S. N. and Ry. Workers' Union an unlawful association might be withdrawn. The rules and the constitution of the so-called Inland Steam Navigation Workers' Union are for practical purpose identical with those of the banned Union: the principal officers are common to both and in view of the declaration in the Union's letter of 22nd March 1935 that this Union was formerly known as R. S. N. and I. G. N. and Ry. Workers' Union I have no hesitation in finding that the present application is an attempt to have the Union which was registered on 18th September 1934 and No. 62 and thereafter declared an unlawful association registered under a new name. The application is accordingly refused.

The letter that is referred to by the Registrar is headed Inland Steam Navigation Workers' Union, Head Office, 209, Cornwallis Street, Calcutta, dated 22nd March 1935, addressed to Sir John Woodhead Esq., Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Respected Sir,

Unlawful bodies.

I have been directed by the general body of the Inland Steam Navigation Workers' Union to approach your good self with the following few lines for your kind information and necessary order.

That the R. S. N. and I. G. N. and Ry. Workers' Union was organised by me in September last 1934.

That within a short period it had enrolled about 6,000 members and the majority of them are clerks.

That 98 percent members of the Executive Committee including the president belonged to the active service of industry.

That myself was the General Secretary and Mr. S. N. Banerji was one of the Vice-Presidents of the Union who had no connexion with any Communist Party in India or abroad.

That except myself, Banerji and few members of the Union were ever allowed to deliver speeches in the meetings of the said Union.

That, the so-called communist had no hands or any connexion with this particular Union.

That this Union had no connexion with Communist International nor its object preached or methods adopted.

That this Union had no touch with the peasants' movement.

That this Union had never received any financial help from outside nor from any other party in India.

That this Union approached on several occasions the Government Officials and Labour Commissioner to secure redress of the steamer employees.

That this Union submitted an application for a Board of Conciliation: vide Trade Disputes Act of 1929.

That this Union never carried out any programme of mass revolution nor advocated militant communist methods.

That on 10th March last in the protest meeting neither myself nor Mr. Banerji made any sort of violent speeches which might be in the record of the Police Report.

That Mr. Colson, Commissioner of Police, is personally known to me for the last eight years who can speak well of me.

Under the circumstances, when the Government of India have expressed their desire to lift the ban on genuine Trade Unions, should we not get its advantage?

A favourable decision will highly oblige.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,

(Sd.) K. C. Mittra.

Thereafter the present appellant endeavoured to open the matter with the Registrar of Trade Unions with a view to secure registration of this Trade Union amplifying the letter that I have read with arguments to show that the appellants were and are Trade Unions different from the one declared to be unlawful by the Government. These arguments were not successful as on 24th May the Registrar of Trade Unions, Bengal, wrote back that he was not prepared to revise the orders that he had made in his letter of 16th May. From that order the appellants have appealed under the provisions of the Act above cited to this Court. This is the first appeal of its kind which has come before this Court. We are in doubt as to whether the matter ought to be dealt with by a single Judge on the original side or by two Judges sitting here in what is ordinarily called an appellate Court. We directed the matter to come before us. It may be that in future such appeals from the Registrar of Trade Unions in matters of this kind will be directed to be taken by a single Judge sitting alone so that if it should be necessary, evidence can be taken. Now the first thing that strikes me is that the Registrar relied on a letter which was written by the Secretary of the appellant Union to Sir John Woodhead as showing that this Union was, for all practical purposes, the same as the I. G. N. Union which had been declared to be unlawful under S. 16, Criminal Law Amendment Act. He appears to have acted on that letter without giving the appellant any notice of it or without giving them any opportunity of dealing with the statements therein set out.

In my view, if the Registrar was going to rely upon that letter he ought to have brought it to the notice of the appellants before he acted on it and given them an opportunity to say anything that they had to say with regard to it. It is quite true that after he had given the decision the matter was raised again and the appellants were given an opportunity of saying what they had to say. But that is not enough. Such opportunity ought, in my view, to have been given before the Registrar considered that letter—if indeed he ought to have considered that letter at all. The office of the Registrar of Trade Unions is one created by the Statute of 1926 and the functions which the Registrar has to perform are prescribed by that Act. By that Statute, in S. 2 (h), Trade Union is defined, and it is defined to be any combination, whether temporary or permanent, formed primarily for the purpose of regulating the relations between workmen and employers or between workmen and workmen or between employers and employers, or for imposing restrictive conditions on the conduct of any trade or business, and includes any federation of two or more Trade Unions. Then there is a proviso which does not come in in this case at all. S. 4 of the Act provides for mode of registration; S. 5 deals with application for registration; S. 6 prescribes provisions to be contained in the rules of a Trade Union; S. 7 empowers the Registrar to call for further particulars and to require alteration of name; S. 8 provides that the Registrar on being satisfied that the Trade Union has complied with all the requirements of this Act in regard to registration, shall register the Trade Union by entering in a register, to be maintained in such form as may be prescribed, the particulars relating to the Trade Union contained in the statement accompanying the application for registration. S. 9 prescribes the form of the certificate of registration; S. 10 deals with cancellation of registration. S. 15 sets out the objects on which the general funds of the Union may be spent. S. 16 deals with the constitution of a separate fund for political purposes. S. 17 deals with criminal conspiracy in trade disputes. S. 18 deals with legal proceedings and other suits in certain cases. S. 22 prescribes the proportion of officers to be connected with the industry. S. 23 deals with the change of name of the Trade Union. S. 24 deals with amalgamation of Trade Unions; S. 27 deals with the dissolution of Trade Unions. S. 28 deals with the returns to be made by Trade Unions. S. 29 gives the Local Government, subject to the control of the Governor-General-in-Council, powers to make regulations for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the Act. Under S. 29 in the Province of Bengal regulations have been made which are called Trade Union Regulations of 1927. They make provisions for various ministerial acts and duties to be carried on in connexion with the registration and the carrying on and rendering of accounts and returns of Trade Unions.

Now it has been said on behalf of the Registrar that he was quite right in refusing to register this Union. It is said that he came to the conclusion on the facts before him that this Union was really the I. G. N. Union under a different name. The I. G. N. Union had been declared to be an unlawful Association. Therefore he was justified in refusing to register this Union. In my view, the Registrar in taking up that attitude is wrong. The functions of the Registrar are laid down in S. 8.

The Registrar on being satisfied that the Trade Union has complied with all the requirements of this Act in regard to registration shall register the Trade Union . . .

Then the prescribed form is set out. The new Union may or may not be a continuation of the other Union or its successor. Whether the new Union is or is not the same as, or successor to the old Union, depends on evidence. Until further evidence is forthcoming in my view it is impossible to say whether the new Union is or is not the same as the old Union or the successor to the old Union.

In my view, the duties of the Registrar were to examine the application and to look at the objects for which the Union was formed. If those objects were objects set out in the Act, and if those objects did not go outside the objects prescribed in the Act and if all the requirements of the Act, and the regulations made thereunder had been complied with it was his duty, in my view, to register the Union. If at sometime that Union is deemed by those who have the power to deal with the matter to be an unlawful association within S. 16, Criminal Law Amendment Act this Union can be proscribed as an unlawful association in the same way as any other body. But in my view the Registrar is not, at this stage, entitled to go into that question; his functions in my view are limited to seeing that the requirements of the Act have been complied with. We have not before us the necessary materials to decide whether this Trade Union should be registered, and I am of opinion that this appeal should be allowed and the matter should be sent back to the Registrar for him to consider the question as to whether the requirements of the Act, and the regulations made thereunder, with regard to registration, have been complied with or not. If, on the face of the application, the objects and the provisions for carrying them out are within what is allowed by the Act and the requirements as to registration have been complied with, he should register; if not, he should decline to register. We think, in the circumstances, there should be no order as to costs on either side.

Costello, J.—This matter has come before us as an appeal under S. 11, Trade Unions Act of 1926. The original proceedings were started by a petition dated 13th July 1935. In that petition one Kalidas Bhattacharji who has described himself as the General Secretary of the Inland Steam Navigation Workers' Union prayed that a rule might be issued on the Registrar of Trade Unions to show cause why the order made by him, dated 16th May 1935, refusing to register the Inland Steam Navigation Workers' Union should not be set aside and the Union registered. The matter in due course came before a Judge sitting on the original side of this Court. Then a question was raised as to whether the proper procedure had been adopted by the petitioner as representing the Trade Union the registration of which has been refused by the Registrar, and the learned Judge who dealt with the matter seems to have come to the conclusion that as the word "appeal" was used in S. 11 it seemed likely that the right procedure was for the matter to come direct to this Court. Later an application was made before us for having the matter put in the list to be dealt with before this Court and for a date to be fixed for the hearing. At that time we had not had the advantage of considering in detail the provisions of S. 11 or of considering the corresponding provisions of the English enactment dealing with the registration of Trade Unions. But today in the course of the arguments as a result of some research, if I may be allowed to say so, on the part of the Court it now appears that there is considerable doubt as to whether or not the procedure that has been followed in this matter is correct. I need not repeat the terms of S. 11. The provisions have already been read by my Lord the Chief Justice and it is not necessary that I should recite them again. S. 11 is obviously based upon S. 2, sub-S. 4, English Trade Unions Act of 1913. That section provides that :

Any person aggrieved by any refusal of the Registrar to a combination as a trade union, or to give a certificate that an unregistered trade union is a trade union within the meaning of this Act, or by the withdrawal under this section of a certificate of registration, or of a certificate that an unregistered union is a trade union within the meaning of this Act, may appeal to the High Court or in Scotland to the Court of Session, within the time and in the manner and on the conditions directed by rules of Court.

In S. 11, sub-S. (1) of the Indian Act the only direction given with regard to the appeal is that "it must be within such time as may be prescribed." A period has been prescribed by the rules made under the provisions of S. 29 of the Act. As regards the manner and the conditions on which the appeal should take place instead of saying "in the manner and on the conditions directed by rules of Court" we find in sub-S. (3) of S. 11 that it is enacted that :

For the purpose of an appeal under sub-S. (1) an appellate Court shall, so far as may be, follow the same procedure and have the same powers as it follows and has when trying a suit under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

The position therefore is this: that in England appeals against a refusal to register the procedure is regulated by rules of Court. Appropriate rules were in fact made in the year 1913 and they prescribe that the procedure is to be by way of summons taken out in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. I need only refer to the first of those rules. It says :

All appeals to the High Court under S. 2 (4), Trade Unions Act, 1913, shall be brought in the Chancery Division of the High Court and shall be commenced by originating notice of motion within two months of the decision of the Registrar or within such further time as the Registrar or the Court may think fit to allow. And the rules of the Supreme Court for the time being in force shall (except if and so far as otherwise provided by these rules) apply to all proceedings on any such appeal.

It seems to me that the provisions of sub-S. 3 of S. 11 indicate that when there is an appeal to this Court it should come before a Judge sitting on the original side of the Court, who is to deal with the matter, if necessary in the same way as if he were trying a suit under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. By reason of the provisions of sub-S. 3 of S. 11 it is obvious that it is not necessary that any further rules should be prescribed either by the Local Government or by the Court other than the one rule which has been prescribed providing for the period of limitation for filing an appeal.

There is one other matter in connection with that section which I desire to refer to and it is this—One cannot help feeling that there is a curious anomaly in this section in that the result of its provisions seems to be that in the case of a small trade union established in the mofussil any refusal of registration which is after all a refusal by an official of the Government of the Province can be challenged and must be challenged in some local Court exercising original jurisdiction and not in the first instance in the High Court. The result of that is that in the case of a comparatively small and unimportant trade union in the mofussil there will be two opportunities to challenge the decision of the Registrar of Trade Unions whereas in the case of a large and important trade union having its head office in Calcutta there will apparently be only one opportunity of challenging the decision of the Registrar namely, by an appeal direct to this Court. I entirely agree with what has fallen from my Lord concerning the question of procedure, but I desire to make it quite plain that so far as I am concerned I am by no means satisfied that the right procedure has been adopted on the present occasion. If and when a similar matter arises the appellant and the legal advisers of the Registrar ought to consider very carefully as to the form of the procedure to be adopted before any proceedings in this Court are instituted. As regards the merits of this appeal I only desire to add a word or two. The functions of the Registrar in connection with the registration of trade unions are clearly indicated in S. 8 of the Act. They are all comprised within that one section:

The Registrar, on being satisfied that the Trade Union has complied with all the requirements of this Act in regard to registration shall register the Trade Union.

The corresponding section in English law is S. 13, sub-S. 2, Trade Unions Act of 1871, which provides:

The Registrar, upon being satisfied that the trade union has complied with the regulations respecting registry in force under the Act shall register such trade union and such rules.

Under the English Act the "regulations" are made by the Secretary of State. An examination of those regulations shows however that they contain very little more than is contained in the Rules made by Government under S. 29, Trade Unions Act. If there is any difference, S. 8 is if anything more stringent or rather more definite than the corresponding English provisions. It would seem that the function of the Registrar is merely to look and see whether on the face of the application which is put before him the requirements of the Act have been complied with. It is true that subsequent to the Act of 1871 in England additional provisions came into force by virtue of sub-S. 2 of S. 2 of the Act of 1913 which provides that

The Registrar of Friendly Societies shall not register any combination as a trade union unless in his opinion, having regard to the constitution of the combination, the principal objects of the combination are statutory objects.

I think the language of S. 8 is in the form in which we find it in order to make it quite clear that the Registrar has not only to consider the provisions of Ss. 5, 6 and part of S. 7 or sub-S. 2 of the section, but has also to consider the implications of S. 2 (b) of the Act and, in addition, the provisions of S. 15. Putting all these things together it comes to this: that the Registrar has to satisfy himself that the declared objects of the Trade Union or the alleged Trade Union are such that the Trade Union can be registered. That is only another way of saying that he should satisfy himself as to the "objects," and as to the destination and use of the general funds of the Society. It seems to me that the Registrar can do very little more than satisfy himself that the technical requirements of the Act have been complied with. As regards the objects he can only look to the ostensible objects of the Trade Union. If he finds that the procedure in connection with the application is in order and if on the face of the application form which makes reference to the Rules of the Trade Unions he finds that the objects are apparently lawful, legitimate and intra vires the Trade Union, and if he further finds that the funds are only to be used in furtherance of those objects, then he has no option but to register the Trade Union, no matter what happens to it subsequently if, it, in fact, proceeds counter to law or seeks to carry out its lawful objects in an unlawful way. In the present case I doubt very much whether it was within the power of the Registrar to consider at all the question whether the applicants were really another Trade Union which had been proscribed and which was seeking the registration under a different name. But even assuming that it was competent for the Registrar to go into that matter in connection with the objects of the Trade Union it seems clear that in the present case he ought to have given to the applicants an opportunity to explain away, if they could, the statement which occurred in the letter of the 22nd March 1935.

I am of opinion that without prejudice to the question as to whether the right procedure has been adopted or not, this matter should go back to the Registrar with a direction that he should decide the question as to whether this Trade Union should be registered or not solely upon the basis of the provisions of S. 8, Trade Unions Act, 1926, and not otherwise.

Judgment.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit for recovery of arrears of rent on the basis of an estate partition. The suit was decreed in part in the trial Court. The appeal to the lower appellate Court was allowed and the suit was dismissed on the ground that no notices were served on the defendants at the time of the partition as required by S. 81, Cl. 3, Estates Partition Act. It appears that on an application for information the plaintiff was informed that the notices issued under S. 81 had been destroyed and that neither at the trial Court nor at the appellate Court did he produce certified copies of the order sheet showing that notices had actually been served. The trial Court held that the search petition showing that notices had been destroyed raised a presumption of the service of notices which was not rebutted nor denied. I am inclined to think that he was correct in this inasmuch as the presumption is that the proceedings were regularly taken and that the partition would not have been carried out unless the regular notices had been served. However, since the learned Judge in the Court of appeal below was not prepared to make this presumption, the plaintiff offered to produce a certified copy of the order sheet showing that notices had been served. The learned Judge refused to allow the plaintiff time for this purpose. In this, I think, his discretion has not been wisely exercised, for the plaintiff may have been under the impression that the presumption would arise, that the due formalities had been observed and that no further proof of the service of notice would be required in the absence of any evidence that the notice had not been served. Certified copies of the partition orders have now been produced and I think that in the circumstances, I ought to admit them at this stage. They show that in fact the notices were duly served upon the defendants.

The only point of law that is raised in this Court is that inasmuch as the different defendants held different jamas under the plaintiff and his predecessors, the partition officer had no jurisdiction to pass the order allotting to the defendants this single jama under the plaintiff in lieu of the several jamas which they had held under the proprietors of the estate. The learned trial Court referred to the case of 29 C W N 221 (1) and held that in this rent suit he was not in a position to give relief to the defendants as regards the amalgamation of their jamas. In that case it was held that the orders passed by the Deputy Collector while acting under S. 81, Estates Partition Act, exercising the powers of a quasi judicial officer cannot be challenged by way of defence to a suit for rent in the absence of the other parties to the partition. In this case the other proprietors who were parties to the partition are not parties and in these circumstances the order allotting this jama to the plaintiff in the partition proceedings cannot be challenged. As held in that case, it could only be challenged by a suit or proceeding in which all the parties to the partition were parties.

1. Chandra Chatterjee v. Kali Charan, 1925 Cal 437=86 I C 414=29 C W N 221.

There were two other points raised in the Court of appeal below and left undecided. One of these points referred to the claim for enhancement and the amount of enhancement allowed by the trial Court on behalf of the appellants. The other point was a point raised in the cross-appeal on behalf of the respondents that the trial Court was wrong in holding that his claim up to 1336 was barred under R. 2, O. 2, Civil P. C. The parties now agree to give up their claims on these two points in favour of each other. There is accordingly no necessity of referring the case back for the decision of these points. The trial Court's orders on these points will be left undisturbed. The result is that the plaintiff is entitled to the rent which he claims to the extent allowed in the trial Court and the decree of that Court is restored. In view of the fact that this appeal has been necessitated by the failure of the plaintiff to file the certified copies in due time, I make no order as to costs in this appeal.

Appeal No. 575 of 1934, Decided on 27th November 1935, from appellate order of Dist. Judge, Dacca, D/- 1st October 1934.

Rules 6, 8, 9 and 38 framed under S. 101 of Bengal Village Self-Government Act, bar the jurisdiction of a Civil Court to try a question whether a particular person was a qualified voter or not and consequently whether his election was void on the ground of his not being a qualified voter. The Circle Officer is the authority or special tribunal constituted to decide the question of a person's eligibility to vote. The authorities constituted by the Bengal Self-Government Act are the final authorities in the matter of conducting elections after deciding the eligibility of voters, on objections raised before them or without objection, and the provisions contained in the Act bar the jurisdiction of a civil Court to try the question of eligibility or otherwise of a candidate for election: 1935 Cal 10, Rel. on. [P 65 C 1]

Abul Hossein—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit for setting aside an election held under the Bengal Village Self-Government Act, 1919, and the rules thereunder, in which the defendant was elected as a member, on the ground that he was not eligible to stand as a candidate for election. It may be mentioned that the case now stated in the plaint was not before the election authorities by way of protest against the candidature of the defendant for election; the objection relating to his eligibility was raised for the first time in the suit. The trial Court came to the decision, on an exhaustive review of the provisions of the law and on reference to the decisions of this Court, bearing upon the subject under consideration, that the suit was not maintainable. According to the Munsiff in the trial Court, the legislature has set up a special tribunal to decide the points sought to be raised in the suit, and the suit could not therefore be entertained by a civil Court; it was pointed that the plaintiff had indulged in the luxury of litigation without having taken proper steps before authorities constituted by the Bengal Village Self-Government Act, in proper time. On appeal, the decision of the trial Court was reversed by the learned District Judge of Dacca, who has directed that the plaintiff's suit be heard on the merits. The defendant has appealed to this Court.

It appears to us to be clear that the decision of the District Judge cannot be supported, specially in view of a recent decision of this Court in 38 C W N 838 (1), in which provisions contained in the Bengal Local Self-Government Act, and the election rules framed thereunder, which bear close resemblance to the provisions contained in the Bengal Village Self-Government Act, with which we are concerned in the case before us, were fully considered by Nasim Ali, J. We are in entire agreement with that decision. In our judgment, Rr. 6, 8, 9 and 38 framed under S. 101. Bengal Village Self-Government Act, barred the jurisdiction of the civil Court to try a question whether a particular person was a qualified voter or not, and consequently whether his election was void on the ground of his not being a qualified voter; as the Circle Officer was the authority or the special tribunal constituted to decide the question of the defendant's eligibility as a voter, a question which was not even raised before the authority constituted by law. Furthermore, as it has been said, there are occasions when expressions used by the legislature in subsequent enactments or amendments of law can be used, for the purpose of interpreting earlier enactments, and in giving effect to the intention of the legislature, express or implied, so far as particular provisions of the law were concerned. Judged from this latter standpoint, the intention of the legislature, as definitely expressed now by an amendment of the law, was clear, that the authorities constituted by the Bengal Village Self-Government Act, were the final authorities in the matter of conducting elections after deciding the eligibility of voters, on objections raised before them, or without objection, as in the case before us; and that its intention was that the provisions contained in the enactment bar the jurisdiction of the civil Court to try the question of eligibility or otherwise of a candidate for election.

In view of the conclusion, we have arrived at, mentioned above, the appeal must be allowed, and we direct accordingly. The decision of the Court of appeal below is set aside: and the suit in which the appeal has arisen is dismissed with costs to the defendant throughout, including the costs in this Court. The hearing fee in this appeal is assessed at 2 gold mohurs.

Criminal Revn. Nos. 1110 to 1112 of 1935, Decided on 11th December 1935.

(a) Bengal Excise Act (5 of 1919), Ss. 74 and 81—Accused tried under Bengal Excise

Act—Magistrate is empowered under S. 5, Identification of Prisoners Act, to direct accused to be measured and photographed for purposes of investigation.

The provisions contained in Ss. 74 and 81, Bengal Excise Act, make the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code applicable to investigations by Excise Officers. The Bengal Excise Act does not lay down a complete procedure for investigation of offences under the Act and the provisions of Ch. 9 of the Act, relating to the procedure in the matter of detection, investigation and other matters including trial of offences, in which Ss. 74 and 81 find place, make it clear that it is mainly the procedure laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code that has to be followed in investigations into offences under the Bengal Excise Act. [P 66 C 2]

A Magistrate is, therefore, empowered under S. 5, Identification of Prisoners Act, to order a person to be measured and photographed for the purpose of any investigation or proceeding under the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(b) Identification of Prisoners Act (33 of 1920), S. 2—"Police Officer" includes Excise Officer in conduct of investigation, exercising powers conferred by Code of Criminal Procedure.

The definition of "Police Officer" contained in S. 2, Identification of Prisoners Act, would include an Excise Officer who in the conduct of an investigation of an offence exercises the power conferred by the Code of Criminal Procedure: 1934 Cal 580, Foll. [P 66 C 2]

(c) Identification of Prisoners Act (33 of 1920), S. 5—Order directing measurements and photograph of accused to be taken—Magistrate clearly stating that measurements and photographs are necessary for investigation—Failure to state reasons specifically does not make order illegal.

Where an order by a Magistrate under S. 5, Identification of Prisoners Act, directing a person to be measured and photographed for purposes of investigation, clearly states that the Magistrate is satisfied that for the investigation of the case the photographs and the measurements of the accused are necessary, the mere circumstance that no reasons are specifically stated by the Magistrate in his order does not make the order illegal. [P 66 C 2; P 67 C 1]

(d) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 439, 498—Sessions Judge directing accused to show cause why their bail should not be enhanced solely because accused challenged Magistrate's order under S. 5, Identification of Prisoners Act, directing measurements and photographs of accused to be taken—Order is not proper—Question should be left to be dealt with by Magistrate.

An order by a Sessions Judge directing accused tried under the Bengal Excise Act to show cause why their bail should not be enhanced, solely on the ground that the accused challenged the order by the trying Magistrate under S. 5, Identification of Prisoners Act, directing measurements and photographs of accused to be taken, is not proper. The question whether there is any valid reason for enhancement of bail should be left to the Magistrate who might very well deal with the matter on materials placed before him. [P 67 C 1]

S. N. Banerjee, Nirmal Ch. Chakrabarty, C. C. Biswas and Paritosh Sarkar—for Petitioner.

A. K. Bose and Anil Chandra Ray Chaudhury—for the Crown.

Order.—The facts and circumstances of the case giving rise to the applications on which these Rules were issued may be briefly stated: An investigation in which the complicity of the petitioners in the matter of offences contemplated by S. 46, Bengal Excise Act, has been started by the Excise authorities, and the petitioners were during the course of such investigation arrested. On furnishing bail to the satisfaction of the Magistrate before whom the petitioners were placed after their arrest, they were released from custody. At a time when they were on bail an Inspector of Excise applied to the Magistrate for permission to take measurements and photographs of the petitioners, and it was mentioned in the application that measurements and photographs were required for the purpose of the investigation. The application for taking measurements and photographs was made under S. 5, Identification of Prisoners Act, and the Magistrate in his order recorded on 1st November 1935 stated that he was satisfied that for purposes of investigation of the case photographs and measurements were necessary; and direction was given to the petitioners to allow them to be taken. As against the aforesaid order of the Magistrate, the petitioners moved the learned Sessions Judge of the 24 Perganas, with the result that the Judge held that the Magistrate was competent to pass the order. The Sessions Judge in the order passed by him on 9th November 1935 stated also that the petitioner had secured reduction of their bail by undertaking to assist the authorities. The Judge directed the petitioners to show cause why their bail should not be enhanced. The Rules granted by this Court are directed against the orders passed by the Sessions Judge.

The main points raised in support of the Rule were that the investigation of the Excise Authorities not being one under the Code of Criminal Procedure, S. 5, Identification of Prisoners Act, could not possibly apply; the Excise authorities had no power to apply for taking measurements and photographs, and the Magistrate had no authority to grant such application, as was done by him on 1st November 1935. The questions must, in our opinion, be answered against the petitioners in view of the clear provisions contained in S. 74 and S. 81, Bengal Excise Act, which make the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure applicable to investigations by Excise Officers. The Bengal Excise Act does not lay down a complete procedure for investigation of offences under the Act; and the provisions of Ch. 9 of the Act relating to the procedure in the matter of detection, investigation and other matters including trial of offences, in which Ss. 74 and 81 referred to above find place, leave no doubt that it was mainly the procedure laid down in the Code of Criminal Procedure that has to be followed in investigation into offences under the Bengal Excise Act. In the above view of the case, there can be no question as to the applicability of S. 5, Identification of Prisoners Act, under which a Magistrate is empowered to order a person to be measured and photographed for the purpose of any investigation or proceeding under the Code of Criminal Procedure. The definition of "Police Officer" contained in S. 2, Identification of Prisoners Act, must be read now in the light of the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in 61 Cal 607 (1), in which it has been laid down that an excise officer, who in the conduct of an investigation of an offence against the excise, exercises the powers conferred by the Code of Criminal Procedure is a police officer. The decision of the Full Bench cannot be whittled down by saying that it is to be confined to the question whether an excise officer in charge of an investigation was a police officer within the meaning and for the purposes of S. 25, Evidence Act, only, and for no other purpose.

The further contention urged in support of the Rule issued by this Court related to this: that the Magistrate's order did not indicate that he was satisfied on any materials placed before him, that measurements and photographs, as contemplated by S. 5, Identification of Prisoners Act, were necessary for the purposes of investigation by Excise authorities, and the direction in that behalf containing the order was erroneous and unsustainable. In our judgment there is no substance involved in this contention, as the order clearly states that the Magistrate was satisfied that for the investigation of the case photographs and measurements of the accused were necessary; the circumstance that no reasons were specifically stated by the Magistrate in his order does not make the order illegal. On the conclusions we have arrived at, as indicated above, the order passed by the learned Sessions Judge on 9th November 1935, affirming the Magistrate's order of 1st November 1935, must be upheld. The direction of the Sessions Judge that the petitioners are to show cause why their bail should not be enhanced, does not commend itself to us, as it proceeds solely on the basis that the petitioners had challenged the order of the Magistrate passed on 1st November 1935. In our judgment, the question whether there is any valid reason for enhancing the bail granted to the petitioners should be left to the Magistrate, who might very well deal with the matter of enhancement of bail, on materials placed before him, by the Excise Authorities, if they are so advised. In the result, the Rules are disposed of in the manner indicated above. The order of the Sessions Judge affirming those of the Magistrate are upheld. The Judge's orders directing the petitioners to show cause why their bail should not be enhanced is modified in the manner mentioned above.

Appeals Nos. 147 and 148 of 1935, Decided on 11th December 1935, from appellate orders of Dist. Judge, Hooghly, D/- 9th January 1935.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47—Certain persons obtaining possession of property on relinquishment by female limited owner expressly agreeing to pay decretal debts due against her—They are bound to pay decretal debt—Decree-holder can proceed by way of application under S. 47—Separate suit to enforce contract is not necessary—Decree-holder, although stranger to agreement, can enforce it.

A stranger to a contract which is to his benefit is entitled to enforce the agreement to his benefit. [P 68 C 2]

Where certain persons obtain possession of certain properties on relinquishment by a female limited owner, expressly agreeing to pay certain decretal debt due against her, they are, upon the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, bound to pay the decretal debt in execution of the decree. There is no necessity on the part of the decree-holder to take recourse to a separate suit to establish the contractual liability in view of the scope of S. 47, Civil P. C. They can proceed by way of an application under S. 47. [P 68 C 1]

Judgment.—These appeals have arisen out of applications under S. 47, Civil P. C., made in proceedings in execution of decrees. The decrees sought to be executed were passed in suits for rent; and the question raised by the persons against whom the decrees were sought to be executed, appellants in this Court, was that they were not liable under the decrees put into execution; that the decrees could not in law be allowed to be executed against them. The facts necessary for the purpose of a decision of this question arising for consideration in these appeals, may be very shortly stated. The decrees for rent, were passed against the three daughters of one Radhajiban Mustafi, whose estate is now in the hands of the appellants as the ultimate reversioners of Radhajiban. Of the three daughters of Radhajiban, Bhababhabini survived her sisters, and she divested herself of her estate in favour of the reversioners. It would appear that the reversioners had divided the estate of Radhajiban as amongst themselves with the assent of the sole surviving daughter of Radhajiban, Bhababhabini. The properties attached and sought to be sold in the proceedings in execution giving rise to these appeals, were by virtue of the arrangement come to by the reversioners amongst themselves claimed by the appellants as their separate property, against which the execution of the decrees obtained against the three daughters of Radhajiban could not be allowed to proceed.

The arrangement as to division of properties between the reversioners was evidenced by two documents, Exs. A and B; in the case in paras. 12, 13 and 14 of the document Ex. B, arrangement in regard to the payment of decretal dues and other dues for and against the parties to the document, the reversioners, subsisting before the arrangement was made. The appellants in this Court, who raised objection to the execution of the decrees against them, undertook liabilities which included liability in respect of the decretal debt which was sought to be realised in the execution proceeding with which we are concerned. The appellants it would appear to be clear from the contents of the documents Exs. A and B agreed in unmistakable language to treat the properties in their hands as part of Radhajiban's estate. On the clear stipulations contained in documents Exs. A and B the appellants could not be allowed to say that the properties sought to be proceeded against in execution, were separate or self-acquired properties and were therefore exempt from being proceeded against in execution of decrees for rent due, so far as properties which were admittedly left by Radhajiban, and were in the hands of Radhajiban's daughters, at the time when the decrees were passed.

It was urged in support of the appeals that even though the documents Exs. A and B had the effect of fixing liability on the appellants, the decree-holders, as strangers to the contract evidenced by those documents, could not get the benefit from such a contract in proceedings in execution of decrees. That there is no necessity for having recourse to a separate suit for enforcing the contract, in the matter of satisfaction of the decretal debt, goes without saying; and the argument in support of the position that there is necessity for a suit for establishment of contractual liability does not bear serious examination, in view of the scope of S. 47, Civil P. C. The right of strangers to a contract has to be determined in the case before us with reference to the state of facts on which the right of the decree-holders to proceed against the properties in the hands of the appellants is based. The appellants obtained possession of the properties by virtue of relinquishment by a female limited owner during her lifetime, upon the express condition that they should pay her debts. Upon general principles of justice, equity and good conscience, the appellants were bound to pay the decretal debt in regard to which execution was levied in the case before us [see in this connection 23 Cal 454 (1)], and in our judgment there can be no doubt, and it can be taken to be well settled on principle and authorities, that a stranger to a contract which is to his benefit is entitled to enforce the agreement to his benefit, apart from the position that the party concerned accepted liability in the matter of satisfaction of debt due to the stranger (see 62 C L J 55 (2), and the cases referred to therein). In the case before us, the appellants had by virtue of the clear stipulations contained in the documents Exs. A and B accepted liability so far as the decretal debts in question were concerned.

In the above view of the case before us, we affirm the decision arrived at by the District Judge in the Court of appeal below, that the proceedings in execution, giving rise to these appeals, should be allowed to proceed, as competent. The appeals are dismissed with costs. The hearing fee in these appeals is assessed at three gold mohurs. In view of the decision we have arrived at in these appeals, it is not necessary to decide the points arising on the cross-objections preferred by the respondents in this Court. The cross-objections are allowed to be withdrawn, without any order as to costs in the same.

Appeal No. 323 of 1933, Decided on 28th November 1935, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Midnapore, D/- 19th September 1932.

Compromise—Legal practitioner—Suit instituted by A and B compromised by B in absence of A without having authority from A—B acting on advice of pleader—Solenamah filed by pleader—Vakalatnamah in pleader's favour empowering him to compromise case—A held not bound by compromise—Pleader held not to have been acting on basis of power given to him.

A suit instituted by A and B and a minor was compromised by B in absence of A and without any authority from A to compromise the suit on his behalf. It was found that B was asked by the pleader appearing for all the plaintiffs, to consider the terms proposed by the other side and to accept them as in his opinion they were beneficial, and that on acceptance of the terms by B, the draft was prepared and the solenamah was filed by the pleader, as he thought that A would have no objection. The vakalatnamah which A and B had executed in the pleader's favour empowered him to compromise the case:

Held: that A was not bound by the compromise simply because his pleader signed and filed the solenamah. Although the vakalatnamah had given the pleader power to compromise, he was not purporting to act on the basis of that power; he was merely acting "as a messenger between the two clients." A would have been bound by the compromise if he had given B power to compromise on his behalf: 1935 P C 119, Applied. [P 70 C 1, 2]

Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of plaintiff 1 and arises out of a suit (Title Suit No. 232 of 1931) instituted by him and plaintiff 2, a minor, to set aside a compromise decree passed in Title Suit No. 176 of 1930. The last mentioned suit was brought by plaintiff 1, plaintiff 2 and their uncle, pro forma defendant 6, to establish their title to and recovery of possession, from the principal defendants of the lands described in Schedule Ka annexed to the plaint. The relevant facts are these: One Ram Krishna Samanta, grandfather of plaintiffs 1 and 2, and father of pro forma defendant 6, lent money to defendants 3 to 5 and the predecessor in interest of defendants 1 and 2. He took as security the properties described in Schedule Ka and Kha. Ram Krishna obtained a mortgage decree and in execution of the said decree caused the mortgaged properties to be put up to sale and himself purchased the same at the Court sale in the year 1919. It is the plaintiffs' case that Ram Krishna took physical possession of the properties described in Schedule Kha, and remained in actual possession, but he took only symbolical possession of the property of Ka Schedule, which continued to remain in the possession of his judgment-debtors, it being their dwelling house. The plaintiffs' further case is that the landlords obtained a collusive rent decree, put up the defaulting tenure to sale, and one Keshab Naik purchased the same. Keshab is said to be the benamidar of the principal defendants. On these allegations Ram Krishna instituted the aforesaid Title Suit No. 176 of 1930 against the principal defendants. In that suit he prayed for recovery of possession of the properties described in Schedule Ka only, the properties described in Schedule Kha not being the subject-matter of the said suit. During the pendency of the said suit Ram Krishna died and his heirs, plaintiffs 1 and 2, and pro forma defendant 6, were duly substituted as plaintiffs in his place. Pro forma defendant 6 used to look after the said Title Suit No. 176 of 1930 on behalf of all the plaintiffs. It is in evidence that at a late stage of the suit, i.e. on 19th June 1931, the principal defendants of the suit approached plaintiff 1 and pro forma defendant 6 and proposed terms of compromise to them direct.

The terms proposed were that the plaintiffs and pro forma defendant 6 were to give up their claim to the Ka Schedule property, that the principal defendants agreed to leave the plaintiffs and pro forma defendant 6 in undisturbed possession of the Kha Schedule properties and that if the principal defendant paid to the plaintiffs and pro forma defendant 6 a certain sum of money within a certain time, the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendant 6 were to convey to the principal defendants the properties of Schedule Kha except a pucca house. At that time plaintiff 1 demanded Rs. 2,500 as the price to which the principal defendants did not agree, and the proposal fell through. The suit was fixed for hearing on 22nd June 1931. On that day pro forma defendant 6 came to Court with witnesses and was on the witness box. With the permission of the Court, he was got down from the witness box and terms were proposed to him. Plaintiff 1, Manmatha, was not present in Court on that date, and pro forma defendant 6 had no authority given to him by plaintiff 1 to compromise on his behalf. The vakalatnama which plaintiff 1 and pro forma defendant 6 had executed in favour of their pleader, Babu Srenath Dass, empowered the latter to compromise the case. The deposition of Srinath Babu is material. He says that the pro forma defendant 6 was brought down from the witness box with the permission of the Court and he requested him to accept the terms proposed by the other side as beneficial. The terms were that the plaintiffs (of Suit No. 176 of 1930) were to give up their claim to the Kha Schedule properties, that the defendants would not disturb their possession in respect of the Kha Schedule properties, and that if the defendants paid to the said plaintiffs Rs. 2,200 within the month of Magh 1338, the plaintiffs would convey to the defendants the Kha Schedule properties except a pucca house. The pucca house was however as is the finding of the lower appellate Court, erroneously included in the properties which the plaintiffs were to convey to the defendants on receipt of the said sum of money, Rs. 2200. The evidence of Srenath Babu, the pleader is definite.

The terms were proposed to pro forma defendant 6 and he (Srenath Babu) made recommendations to him (the pro forma defendant 6.) When the said pro forma defendant 6 accepted the terms the draft was prepared and the Solenamah was filed by Srenath Babu, as he thought that plaintiff 1 had no objection. In this state of the evidence I am of opinion that plaintiff 1 is not bound by the compromise, simply because his pleader signed and filed the Solenamah. The principle formulated by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 39 C W N 1185 (1) to my mind applies to this case. The pro forma defendant 6 was present in Court; he was asked by the pleader to consider the terms and to accept them as in his opinion they were beneficial. Although the vakalatnama had given him power to compromise, Srenath Babu was not purporting to act on the basis of his said power. His evidence makes that clear. He referred to his client, pro forma defendant 6, who was present in Court. He was merely acting more as a "messenger between the two clients", as Lord Atkin puts it in 39 C W N 1185 (1). In these circumstances, plaintiff 1 can only be held bound by the compromise if, and only if, he had given the pro forma defendant 6 power to compromise on his behalf. The lower appellate Court was therefore not right in holding that plaintiff 1 was bound by the compromise simply because the vakalatnama authorised Srenath Babu to compromise. In this view I hold that the compromise decree must be set aside against plaintiff 1 also.

There is, however, another point which I merely notice in passing. If the defendants have to rely on Srenath Babu's vakalatnama, there is a difficulty. The vakalatnama empowered Srenath Babu to compromise the suit in which he appeared. The terms in the solenamah about the conveyance of the Kha Schedule properties by the plaintiffs to the defendants are clearly beyond the scope of Title Suit No. 176 of 1930. If that be so, I have grave doubts if the vakalatnama was sufficient to empower Srenath Babu to compromise Title Suit No. 176 of 1930 on the terms recited above without reference to his clients. However I need not pursue this point further, for I allow the appeal on the ground mentioned above. The result is that the compromise decree passed in Title Suit No. 176 of 1930 is set aside in its entirety, and the said suit is revived with liberty to the plaintiffs in that suit to proceed on with it from the stage at which it was left just before the consent decree was passed. I set aside the consent decree in its entirety, i. e. against pro forma defendant 6 also, having regard to the fact that a different contract would result if it be held that he is to convey his undivided share of the lands of Schedule Kha for a proportionate price. The appellant will have her costs against the defendants throughout. The cross-objection is dismissed but without costs.

The service of notice under S. 16, Bengal Cess Act, is not merely a matter of procedure but is part of the law with reference to which valuation or re-valuation as contemplated by law can be made by the revenue authorities and liability imposed in the matter of payment of cesses; and non-compliance with the law by failure to serve notice under S. 16 makes the assessment of cesses invalid under law. The service of notice is made imperative by law and where it is not served, the person assessed is entitled to a declaration that the cess re-valuation is ultra vires, illegal and not binding on him. The note to S. 24, Cess Act, and R. 66 in the Cess Manual cannot be held to be ultra vires and in-operative, as having been made by the Board of Revenue without jurisdiction. They are not in any way inconsistent with the definition of "cultivating raiyat" as contained in S. 4 of the Act, and revaluation under the Cess Act made on the basis of the Note to S. 24 and R. 66 of the Cess Manual is not illegal.

Judgment.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff-respondent for a declaration that certain re-valuation proceedings in connexion with assessment of cess under the provisions contained in the Cess Act (Bengal Act 9 of 1880) were illegal, ultra vires and not binding on the plaintiff. The question relevant for the purpose of this appeal raised before the Courts below, and which was argued in support of the appeal was whether the re-valuation for imposition of cess made in respect of Jessore portion of Touzi No. 132 of the Jessore Collectorate, under S. 21, Cess Act, was ultra vires, illegal and not binding against the plaintiff, for non-service of notice under S. 16, Cess Act, upon the plaintiff, the plaintiff, not having been otherwise cognizant of the order calling for return as prescribed by law, before the making of valuation under S. 21 of the Act.

found on evidence before the Courts that there was no proof of any notice served on the plaintiff as contemplated by S. 21, Cess Act, and that the plaintiff was not otherwise cognizant of the same before the estate in question was valued for cess purposes, under S. 21, Cess Act. On the findings referred to above, the decision of the Courts below was that the assessment of cesses on revaluation was illegal and not binding on the plaintiff. It was urged in support of the appeal that the service of notice under S. 16, Cess Act, was merely a matter of procedure; non-service of such notice could not in any way vitiate the assessment proceedings; the jurisdiction of the revenue authorities in the matter of revaluation in the case was acquired by the proclamation to make return by the parties concerned under S. 14, Cess Act, the non-service of notice under S. 16 of the Act could not render the proceedings invalid. There is no question that the publication of a proclamation gives jurisdiction to the Collector in the matter of assessment of cesses on proper valuation of lands; but the subsequent procedure contemplated by the Cess Act, for the purpose of making valuation as contained in S. 16, Cess Act, could not be ignored, in fixing liability, so far as payment of cess was concerned. The elaborate provisions contained in Ss. 16, 17 and 18 leave no room for doubt that following the procedure mentioned therein was as much binding on the revenue authorities seeking to assess and impose liability as the party who were required to lodge returns on service of notice on them, as provided by S. 16, Cess Act. There was penalty imposed for omitting to make return (S. 18); and the provisions that follow, contained in Ss. 19 and 20 make it abundantly clear how the failure to make returns after service of notice affects the right of the parties to collect rent in respect of the property sought to be assessed or re-assessed to cesses under the Cess Act. It is also significant that it is only on not furnishing return after service of notice under S. 16 that the Collector is empowered to make his own valuation. In our judgment the provisions contained in the Cess Act to which reference has been made above make it abundantly clear that service of notice under S. 16, Cess Act, was not merely a matter of procedure, but was a part of the law with reference to which valuation or revaluation as contemplated by law could be made by the revenue authorities, and liability imposed in the matter of payment of cesses; and non-compliance with the law by failure to serve notice made the assessment of cesses invalid under the law. The service of notice is made imperative by law, for the purpose of valuation of lands under the Cess Act, and that must be the case, in view of the position that the State would not impose any liability on a subject without giving him an opportunity to be heard. If there is any ambiguity in the statute, although in our opinion there is none, in the matter of the effect of non-service of notice under S. 16, Cess Act, it was the duty of the State to use language of precision when it was imposing liabilities upon its subjects; the benefit of the doubt is the right of the subject. The reasonable construction of the provisions of the Cess Act to which reference has been made above, lead to the conclusion that notice under S. 16 of the Act was imperative, before assessment of cess could be made by the revenue authorities on valuation of lands; and notice not having been served, as provided by law, the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration that the cess revaluation in respect of the Jessore portion of Touzi No. 132 was ultra vires, illegal and not binding against him. In the result the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

(S. A. Nos. 1261 and 1262 of 1933)

These two appeals have arisen out of suits instituted by the plaintiff appellant in this Court, for declaration that a cess revaluation in respect of properties mentioned in the plaints was illegal, ultra vires and not binding on the plaintiff. The question in controversy in the appeals relates to the assertion made by the plaintiff in the suits that the revaluation in question was made on the basis of a Note to S. 24, Cess Act, Bengal Act 9 of 1880, and R. 66 of the Cess Manual, which the Board of Revenue had no authority under the law to frame, and which were inconsistent with the definition of "cultivating raiyat" as contained in the Cess Act. The Courts below give their decision on the question mentioned above against the plaintiffs in the suits, in which these appeals have arisen. The question to be considered is whether Note to S. 24, Cess Act, and R. 66 made by the Board of Revenue were in consonance with the provisions of S. 106 of the Act. There can be no question that it was within the competency of the Board of Revenue to make rules and otherwise provide for the proper execution of the Cess Act, in respect of valuation of the assessment and of the levy of cesses. The question then was whether there was anything contained in the Note to S. 24 and in R. 66 of the Cess Manual, inconsistent with or repugnant to the definition of a "cultivating raiyat" as contained in S. 4, Cess Act, inasmuch as so long as the Note and the rule in question are not repugnant to the provisions of the Act, they cannot be held to be ultra vires or in-operative. As has been repeatedly pointed out by this Court, a raiyat may be a tenureholder within the meaning of the Cess Act, and thus in order to claim the privilege of a cultivating raiyat under the Cess Act, a person must be an actual cultivator of the soil, and the total rent payable by him for all his holdings must not exceed Rs. 100 per annum. A raiyat may be a tenure holder within the meaning of the Cess Act; and the distinction between a holder of a tenure and a cultivating raiyat, and not between a holder of a tenure and a raiyat, must be recognized: See 15 C L J 428 (1), 47 C L J 545 (2). In our judgment therefore, the Note to S. 24, Cess Act and R. 66 in the Cess Manual, cannot be held to be ultra vires and inoperative, as made by the Board of Revenue without jurisdiction.

They are not in any way inconsistent with the definition of "cultivating raiyat" as contained in S. 4, Cess Act, and the Courts below have rightly held that revaluation under the Cess Act could not be held to be illegal on the ground that it was made on the basis of Note to S. 24, Cess Act and R. 66 of the Cess Manual framed by the Board of Revenue, which were both in force at the time when the re-valuation in question was made. On the conclusion arrived at by us, as mentioned above, the decree of the Courts against which these appeals were directed are upheld, and the appeals are dismissed with costs.

Death Ref. No. 4 and Appeals Nos. 160 and 161 of 1935, Decided on 10th January 1936.

(a) Criminal Trial—Evidence — Admissibility of—Court should lean in favour of accused and exclude evidence of doubtful or remote relevance.

When considering the question of admissibility, the Court should lean always in favour of the accused, and exclude all evidence tendered by the prosecution which is of doubtful or remote relevance. [P 79 C 1]

(b) Criminal Trial — Trial by Jury—Non-directions and misdirections — Judge not warning jury that statement attributed to individual accused, is not evidence against other, in event of jury finding that individual guilty—Judge stating case for prosecution and argument in support of it without pointing parts of it, not supported by evidence—Judge referring to statements regarding which there is no evidence and to contents of documents which are inadmissible and irrelevant—All these amount to non-directions and misdirections.

Where the Judge in his charge to jury, omits to remind the jury that the statement attributed to individual accused is not evidence against the other accused in the event of the jury finding that individual guilty and the Judge repeatedly states the case for prosecution and the arguments in support of it without clearly pointing to the jury, those facts of it which are not supported by evidence or which depend merely upon glosses upon evidence; and states that one of the accused is suffering from venereal disease, when there is no evidence to that effect; and while referring to certain anonymous petitions tells the jury that evidence given on oath is of much greater value than statements made by unknown persons in the anonymous petition when there is nothing to show that the statements were made, instead of telling them that the evidence which was improperly admitted in evidence, is of no value and directing to reject it as irrelevant, and where he refers to the contents of documents which are inadmissible and irrelevant, all these amount to misdirections and non-directions. [P 79 C 1, 2]

(c) Criminal Trial — Trial by jury — Misdirection—Accused in criminal trial are under no obligation to prove their innocence or adduce evidence in their defence—Remarks of Judge in charge to jury that accused have failed to give explanation of facts adduced in evidence against them amounts to misdirection — He should, at least, give accused opportunity of explanation.

The onus of proof in criminal cases never shifts to the accused and they are under no obligation to prove innocence or adduce evidence in their defence or to make any statement. [P 79 C 2]

Where therefore the Judge in his charge to the jury, repeatedly draws the jury's attention to the fact that the accused have failed to give any explanation of facts adduced in evidence against them, his remarks amount to misdirection. In any case if the Judge intends to make such remarks, it is his duty first to give the accused an opportunity of explanation by drawing their attention specifically to the evidence upon which the Judge relies: Woolmington v. The Director of Public Prosecutions, (1935) A C 462, Foll. [P 79 C 2]

(d) Criminal Trial — Appeal — Evidence—Appreciation—Decision of case turning upon question as to what inference is to be drawn from well established facts about which there is no doubt—High Court is entitled to draw necessary inference.

Where, the decision in a case does not really turn upon questions about the veracity of witnesses or upon the finding of doubtful facts but upon the question what inference is to be drawn from well established facts about the existence of which there is not and cannot be any reasonable doubt, the High Court, is at least, if not better qualified, than the jury to draw the necessary inference. [P 80 C 1]

(e) Criminal Trial — Sentence — Delay of over four months in preparation of paper book is unreasonable and requires explanation—Accused under sentence of death for about ten months as result of delay and long vacation—High Court will take the fact into consideration along with other circumstances in altering sentence.

Where in an appeal and a reference from a sentence of death, there is a delay of four months in getting the paper book ready such delay in a capital sentence case is unreasonable and requires explanation. [P 80 C 2]

Where as the result of the delay and the intervention of the long vacation, the appellants have remained under sentence of death for about ten months, the High Court will take the fact into consideration along with all the facts and circumstances of the case in not confirming the sentence of death but reducing it to one for transportation for life. [P 80 C 2]

(f) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 374, 418 and 423—Accused sentenced to death can appeal on matter of fact as well as of law—High Court can come to its own conclusion as to guilt or innocence of accused independently of verdict of jury and opinion of trial Judge—It should, however, attach greatest possible weight to verdict of jury, if answering reasonable test.

Accused sentenced to death have under S. 374 read with S. 418, in the High Court a right of appeal on matter of fact as well as of law. [P 83 C 2]

In disposing of a reference under S. 374, and appeals by persons sentenced to death, the Judges of the High Court are entitled to come to their own independent conclusions as to the guilt or innocence of accused independently of the verdict of the jury, or of the opinion of the Judge. But although they are not bound by the verdict of the jury, they must attach greatest possible weight to the verdict of the jury, if it answers a reasonable test. [P 83 C 2]

It cannot be said that in dealing with a reference under S. 374 and appeal by accused only two courses are open to the High Court, i. e., to acquit the accused or to order a re-trial. [P 84 C 1]

In disposing of a reference under S. 374 and the appeals by the accused, the Judges of the High Court are bound to satisfy by going through the evidence whether the accused have been rightly convicted, but in doing so they must attach considerable weight to the verdict of the jury. If after examining the evidence which is admissible in law they find even without any opportunity of hearing witnesses and seeing their demeanour, that certain facts emerge from the evidence as proved beyond reasonable doubt and the decision in the case depends upon inference to be drawn from these proved facts, they are not bound to order retrial. When however the evidence cannot be properly weighed by the Court without hearing witnesses and seeing their demeanour in the witness box and they are not in a position to say whether the facts from which inferences are to be drawn are true or false, re-trial should be ordered: 2 C W N 49; 1928 Cal 430; 1931 Cal 178 and 1933 Cal 426, Rel. on. [P 84 C 1]

(g) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 120-A and 302—Conspiracy to commit murder—Express proof of conspiracy is not necessary—Agreement to carry out unlawful object may be inferred from acts and conduct—Evidence must show common plan as to exclude reasonable possibility of acts having been done separately and connected only by coincidence.

In case of a charge of a conspiracy to commit a murder, it is not necessary that there should be express proof of conspiracy. It is not necessary to prove that two or more persons came together actually agreed in terms to have the common design and to pursue it by common means and so to carry it into execution. [P 84 C 1]

There may be no witnesses to say that in their presence the conspirators agreed to carry out an unlawful object. From the acts and conduct, agreement can be inferred. If it is proved that they pursued by the acts the same object often by the same means, one performing one part of the act and the other another part of the same act so as to complete it with a view to the attainment of the object which they were pursuing, the Court is at liberty to draw the inference that they conspired together to effect that object. The question whether certain acts were done in pursuance of a conspiracy or were done separately without any pre-arranged plan depends upon the evidence in each case. The evidence must show a common plan so as to exclude a reasonable possibility of the acts of the conspirators having been done separately and connected only by coincidence: R. v. Murphy (1837) 8 C & P 297, Foll. [P 84 C 1, 2]

(h) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Proof of case against accused must depend on positive evidence of guilt given by Crown and not on absence of explanation by accused—Accused involved by evidence in state of considerable suspicion—He must for his own safety prove facts reconciling suspicious circumstances with his innocence.

Although it is true that the proof of a case against the prisoner must depend for its support not upon the absence or want of any explanation on the part of the prisoner himself but from the positive alternative evidence of his guilt that is given by the Crown, it is not an unreasonable thing and it daily occurs in investigations both civil and criminal that if there is a certain appearance made against a party if he is involved by the evidence in a state of considerable suspicion he is called upon for his own sake and his own safety to state and to bring forward the circumstances whatever they may be which might reconcile such suspicious circumstances with perfect innocence: Regina v. Frost, 4 St Tr N S 85, Foll. [P 84 C 2]

N. K. Basu, Probodh Chandra Chatterjee, Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee, Debabrata Mookerjee, Bireswar Chatterjee, Sukumar Dey, Santosh Nath Sen, and S. C. Chaudhuri—for Accused.

Advocate-General, Anil Chandra Rai Chaudhuri and Srish Chandra Chaudhuri—for the Crown.

Lort-Williams, J.—This case is probably unique in the annals of crime. On 4th December 1933, Amarendra Chandra Pandey died in Calcutta. It is alleged that he died of plague, the germs of which had been injected into his arm by some person, who has not yet been discovered, on Howrah station on the 26th November. The two appellants Benoyendra Chandra Pande and Taranath Bhattacharjee along with Durga Ratan Dhar and Sivapada Bhattacharjee and others unknown were charged with conspiring to murder Amarendra in pursuance of which conspiracy Amarendra was murdered in the manner alleged. Benoyendra was charged also with abetment of murder and Sivapada was charged also with offences under Ss. 201 and 202, I. P. C. Benoyendra and Taranath were found guilty by a unanimous verdict of the offences with which they were charged and were convicted and sentenced to death. Durga Ratan Dhar and Sivapada Bhattacharjee were found not guilty and acquitted. Benoyendra and Taranath have appealed on the ground of misdirection and illegal admission of evidence. We have to consider these two appeals and a reference under S. 374, Criminal P. C. Benoyendra and Amarendra were half-brothers and members of the Pakur Raj family and jointly inherited their father's estate in 1929. At that time Benoyendra was 27 and Amarendra 16 years old. They were also joint reversionary heirs of their aunt Rani Surjabati. Benoyendra became the Karta of the family on his father's death, and pursued a course of life which, rightly or wrongly, offended and outraged the family, including Surjabati and Amarendra. They considered that he was extravagant, and objected to his relations with a dancing girl named Balikabala, and to his failure to provide money adequate for the suitable upkeep and education of Amarendra.

This friction between Benoyendra and the rest of the family gradually increased, especially with Amarendra, who was advised by Surjabati and his relatives Rabindra Nath Pandey and Baidya Nath Pandey. Its existence has been denied by Benoyendra, but it is fully confirmed by documentary evidence of undoubted authenticity. In 1931 Amarendra attained his majority, and in 1932 he began to take definite steps to assert his rights in the joint estate, and in open opposition to Benoyendra. On the 12th May he executed a several power of attorney in favour of persons who could not be controlled by Benoyendra, though he was subsequently induced by Benoyendra's threats and promises to cancel it on the 6th July. These facts and the growing friction between the brothers are confirmed in a series of letters which passed between them, in which also for the first time the question of partition was openly mooted. During the Puja vacation of 1932, Amarendra was staying with Surjabati at Deoghar. One day Benoyendra came there accompanied by a compounder. He and Amarendra went for a walk together, after which Benoyendra and the compounder departed. A few days after Amarendra began to be ill and his illness was diagnosed by Dr. Sourendra Nath Mukherjee as being due to tetanus infection, which he treated with injections of anti-tetanus serum. A telegram was sent to Benoyendra at Pakur to bring the family physician. He brought instead the appellant, Taranath, a doctor from Calcutta, and wanted Dr. Sourendra to keep Dr. Taranath as his assistant. Dr. Sourendra refused because he got the impression that Dr. Taranath was trying to induce him to abandon the serum treatment in favour of injections of morphia.

Subsequently, Benoyendra appeared again, this time with Dr. Dhar, who persuaded Dr. Sourendra reluctantly to give a further injection of serum he had brought from Calcutta, and later still Benoyendra came again with both Dr. Dhar and Dr. Sivapada who prescribed medicines for the patient. These however were not given to him because his relatives were by this time suspicious about both Benoyendra and the doctors who were brought by him. Subsequently, Amarendra developed an abscess at the place where Dr. Dhar's injection had been given, and a sinus which was eventually opened by Dr. L. M. Banerjee in Calcutta. The Crown regarded all these happenings at Deoghar as overt acts of the conspiracy to murder Amarendra. The learned Sessions Judge quite properly excluded evidence of statements alleged to have been made by Amarendra about what happened when he and Benoyendra went for a walk together. Bearing in mind that morphia was admitted to be a correct treatment for tetanus if used as ancillary to serum and for the purpose only of reducing the accompanying convulsions and that there was evidence of the existence of a bleb upon Amarendra's foot which he had pricked with a pin, and that both Dr. Dhar and Dr. Sivapada have been acquitted, I consider that it is safer to disregard the Deoghar incidents altogether in considering the question of the guilt or innocence of the appellants. This illness of Amarendra left him with a permanently damaged heart, and he did not otherwise recover his health until April 1933.

In November 1932 Benoyendra began to take steps to obtain the withdrawal from the Allahabad and other Banks of certain cash deposits belonging to the joint estate and amounting to Rs. 13,000. This he achieved by obtaining in June 1933 in the joint names of himself and Amarendra a succession certificate empowering Benoyendra and Amarendra jointly and severally to collect the debts. Subsequently Amarendra learnt about this withdrawal and began to take more active steps to protect his interests, and consulted pleaders with the object of calling Benoyendra to account, and bringing about a partition of the joint estate either amicably or by means of a suit. In October 1933, a sum of Rs. 17,000 was paid into Pakur Court in respect of a compromise decree in favour of the joint estate, and Benoyendra made strenuous efforts to withdraw it. This came to the knowledge of Amarendra who, upon the advice and with the assistance of Rabindra, filed a petition of objection on 17th November, with the result that an order for withdrawal was refused, and Benoyendra failed to get this money until sometime after Amarendra's death. Thereupon Benoyendra returned to Calcutta and attempted to persuade Surjabati to send for Amarendra. Upon her refusal he sent a bogus telegram to Amarendra in the name of Surjabati on 18th November, with the result that Amarendra came to Calcutta on the 19th. The strained relations between the brothers had now reached breaking point, and all the family and especially Amarendra were thoroughly suspicious of Benoyendra and feared that he would stop at nothing to injure Amarendra. The brothers met and discussed at length the question of partition which Amarendra in opposition to Benoyendra, wished to be settled at Pakur.

While in Calcutta Amarendra went to the Purna Theatre with his relative Jyotirmayee and her party. Benoyendra was seen hovering about the theatre and its precincts in the company of another man described as short, dark-complexioned and wearing khaddar. Surjabati and Amarendra decided to leave Calcutta on 26th November and Benoyendra learnt about this the night before. On that night he was seen at Howrah Station in the company of a short, dark-complexioned man in khaddar. The next day he called at Surjabati's house, ascertained the exact time of her departure, and announced his intention of coming to see the party off. Surjabati went to the station accompanied by Amarendra, his sister Banabala and his deceased half-sister's daughter Anima, and they found Benoyendra waiting for them at the station entrance. The party passed through the booking-staff on their way to the platform. Amarendra headed the procession and Benoyendra brought up the rear. On the way Amarendra was jostled by someone coming from the opposite direction whom he afterwards described as a black man in khaddar who was not a gentleman.

Immediately after, Amarendra felt a prick in his right arm and exclaimed "someone has pricked me." Benoyendra made light of the matter saying that it was nothing, but Amarendra rolled up his sleeve and showed the mark of the prick to his relatives including Benoyendra and Kamala Prasad Pande, and his friend Asoke Prokash Mitra. Kamala Prasad especially was suspicious and feared that the incident was due to some foul play. All the members of the family had been surprised at Benoyendra's unexpected courtesy in coming to see them off, as such behaviour was unusual for him. Kamala begged Amarendra not to go by the train, but to stay in Calcutta and have his blood examined, but Benoyendra was annoyed and rebuked him and said that they were making a mountain out of a mole-hill and urged Amarendra to go. In the train the anxiety of the party grew, and after arriving at Pakur and after receiving an urgent letter from Kamala and upon the advice of Rabindranath, Amarendra decided to return to Calcutta with Rabindra, where they arrived on the 29th. There he was examined by Dr. Nalini Ranjan Sen Gupta who found the mark of a prick on his arm like the mark of hypodermic needle. On the 30th Dr. Nalini advised an immediate blood culture and this was made by Dr. Santosh Kumar Gupta. On 4th December Amarendra died. After a thorough and exhaustive testing of the blood culture on white rats and by means of other tests it was definitely established that Amarendra's blood was infected with germs of bubonic plague and this was reported to the public health authorities.

At the trial a mass of evidence was given by medical experts, who were cross-examined very thoroughly and at great length with the object of establishing the probability or possibility that the diagnosis that Amarendra died of plague was wrong, or that the blood culture had been confused with the culture of some other person's blood, or had been either accidentally or deliberately contaminated, or that Amarendra had contracted plague either from his half-sister Kananbala who is alleged to have died of mumps on 10th September 1933, or otherwise naturally from a flea-bite or some other source.

I do not propose to discuss this evidence again, but I have considered all of it very carefully and I am satisfied that the Crown succeeded in proving beyond the possibility of reasonable doubt that Amarendra died of plague, the germs of which were injected into his arm on Howrah Station as alleged, by some person at present unknown. Immediately after Amarendra's death some of his relatives began to discuss with Kalidas Gupta, a pleader, well known to the family and living at Pakur, the question of instituting a police enquiry. These discussions went on throughout December and in January, and it was ascertained that Benoyendra had been a boon companion of Taranath to whom he had been introduced by Balikabala, and that all three had been in close friendship and association for more than two years, and that Taranath was a doctor and a trained bacteriologist. Eventually a petition was presented to the Deputy Commissioner of Police at Calcutta by Kamala Prosad Pandey on 22nd January 1934 and Sub-Inspector Sarat Chandra Mitra began to make a confidential inquiry.

Upon information given by Kalidas, Benoyendra was arrested on 16th February while on his way by train to Bombay. The case was formally instituted on the 17th and Taranath was arrested on the 18th. Kalidas proceeded to Bombay on business and there got in touch with a guide named Ratan Salaria who was able to give much valuable information about visits paid by Benoyendra to Bombay both alone and in the company of Taranath. The investigation proceeded at Bombay and Calcutta and the following surprising facts were elucidated. On 12th May 1932, the day upon which Amarendra executed the several power of attorney already mentioned, the stamp for which had been purchased the previous day, Taranath sent an express prepaid telegram to the authorities of the Haffkine Institute at Bombay asking them to send virulent plague culture for laboratory work. At this time Benoyendra was staying at a hotel in Calcutta, and on that day Balikabala accompanied by an officer of the Pakur estate arrived at the hotel. Although Taranath went to the length of adding after his name the letters D. T. M. (Diploma of Tropical Medicine) to which he was not entitled, the authorities of the Haffkine Institute refused to supply the culture, unless Taranath first obtained the permission of the Surgeon-General of Bengal.

Later in May, Taranath approached Dr. Ukil of Calcutta, and on the faith of Taranath's statement that he had discovered a cure for plague and wished to test it with plague culture, he induced Dr. Ukil to allow him to work in his laboratory under his supervision. Plague culture was obtained from Dr. Naidu of the Haffkine Institute, but Taranath was not allowed to handle it. Attempts were made to subculture the strain supplied, but there was no growth and the strain was destroyed. Taranath tried to induce Dr. Ukil to indent for culture a second time, but he refused. Eventually in 1933, Taranath obtained from Dr. Ukil a letter of introduction addressed to the officer-in-charge of the Haffkine Institute with the request that Dr. Taranath as a bacteriologist might be granted facilities of making experiments in connection with the curative value of a drug which he had discovered and which he considered to be effective in cases of plague.

On 30th April 1933, Benoyendra went to Bombay and entered his address in the Orient Hotel registered as of Tagore Castle Lane Calcutta, which was not his address, but Taranath's. He engaged Ratan Salaria as his guide, and told him that he had come to Bombay with the object of obtaining facilities for testing a curative drug for plague on behalf of a brother doctor. He asked for a Times of India Directory in order to ascertain the names of the doctors attached to the Haffkine Institute. The next day he saw Dr. Naidu and gave him Taranath's letter of introduction and said that he was his friend and had been sent in advance to find out whether Dr. Naidu would grant the desired facilities. Dr. Naidu told him that his friend must first write to the Director of the Haffkine Institute and obtain his permission, otherwise he could not help him. The same evening Benoyendra left for Calcutta.

On 1st July, Benoyendra, went again to Bombay and stopped at the Sea View Hotel. Again he gave the Tagore Castle Lane address and engaged the same guide. On arrival he made strenuous efforts, including offers of money, to obtain plague culture from Dr. Nagarajan and Dr. Sathe—two veterinary surgeons attached to the Haffkine Institute, but failed. He however obtained from Dr. Nagarajan the information that he could get plague culture at the Arthur Road Infectious Diseases Hospital. Thereupon he saw Dr. Patel, the Superintendent of that Hospital, and asked him to allow his doctor friend to work in his laboratory on his alleged cure. Eventually Dr. Patel was persuaded to accede to this request, and he instructed his assistant, Dr. Mehta that a Bengali doctor was coming to do some work on plague bacilli and to give him facilities. At Benoyendra's request Dr. Mehta obtained Dr. Patel's permission to indent for one tube of live plague culture from the Haffkine Institute pending the arrival of Dr. Taranath. Taranath arrived on 7th July and stayed at the same hotel with Benoyendra, who eventually paid the bill. Benoyendra and Taranath together purchased rats in the market.

Dr. Patel introduced Taranath to Dr. Mehta who prepared some subcultures, and Taranath tested the cultures upon the rats with the result that they died of plague. At times Taranath was assisted by Dr. Mehta, but he was not always present during the experiments. Taranath was allowed to work freely in the laboratory and had the use of all the necessary appliances. He also brought with him a small bag containing instruments. On the evening of 12th July, when an experiment on one of the rats was still incomplete, Taranath told Dr. Mehta that he had urgent work in Calcutta and must leave immediately. He asked him to convey his thanks to Dr. Patel and said that he would return later on, but he never returned nor did he correspond with either Dr. Patel or Dr. Mehta. Benoyendra and Taranath left Bombay together that night for Calcutta. While in Bombay Benoyendra made strenuous endeavours to get Amarendra's life insured for Rs. 51,000 with a condition that the policy should not be contested after Amarendra's death. This unusual condition was not accepted and the insurance was not effected. Long statements by Benoyendra and Taranath were read at the trial and amounted substantially to a denial of guilt and of the truth of the inferences which the Crown sought to draw from the facts given in evidence. Taranath's explanation of the Bombay incidents was that he thought that he had discovered a cure for plague and wanted to test its efficacy. He asked Benoyendra to take the letter of introduction to Bombay and make the necessary enquiries because Benoyendra happened to be going on business of his own. Benoyendra's explanation was that he had to go to Bombay on business connected with the film industry in which he was interested, and that he had made enquiries for Taranath simply as an act of friendship.

Dr. Mehta saw no signs of any cure or medicine being applied by Taranath to the rats during the experiments. Apart from statements made by Benoyendra and Taranath, there is not a vestige of evidence to show that Taranath either had or thought he had at any time discovered a cure for plague, or wished to test it, or that Benoyendra had any other purpose in going to Bombay than either to procure plague culture, or to obtain for Taranath facilities which would enable to procure it. The practicability of removing culture from the Arthur Road Hospital, carrying it from Bombay to Calcutta and keeping it alive from July to December, was established beyond doubt by the medical evidence. Upon arrest Taranath told Sub-Inspector Mitra that he had never been to Bombay with Benoyendra, that he had no idea of the culture of plague bacilli, that he had never been to Bombay in his life, and that he had never approached any doctor for any letter of introduction for Bombay. He admitted that he had known Benoyendra for 3 or 4 years. Later, while on bail he went to the police and altered this statement, and admitted that he had been to Bombay, but not with Benoyendra. At the trial he denied that he had known Benoyendra prior to September or October 1932.

Benoyendra admitted that he had been to Bombay to arrange for film work, but denied that Taranath had ever been with him to Bombay. Further he said that he had never heard anything about Amarendra having been pricked at Howrah Station. While on bail, upon being asked by Gouri Sen, who is connected with the Medical Supply Concern where Taranath was employed as a bacteriologist, "Well, and how are you in this murder?" Taranath replied "What little I have done, those who have done more have not been arrested." Apart from the denials which I have already mentioned, Benoyendra alleged in his defence that the whole case was false and was due to a conspiracy to get rid of him which was concocted by his relatives with the aid of Kalidas Gupta. Of this alleged conspiracy there is not a vestige of evidence. The learned Advocate for the appellants have complained of the wrongful admission of evidence and misdirection and non-direction by the learned Sessions Judge, and of his failure adequately to examine the appellants under the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C. There is some justification for these criticisms.

A good deal of evidence both oral and documentary was admitted which was of doubtful relevance and which it would have been wiser to exclude. When considering the question of admissibility, the Court should lean always in favour of the accused, and exclude all evidence tendered by the prosecution which is of doubtful or remote relevance. Some evidence also was admitted which was clearly inadmissible and irrelevant. For example Ex. 20, being a letter from Rabindra to Kalidas, Ex. 67 being a letter from Baidyanath to Amarendra, and the contents of certain anonymous petitions found upon Benoyendra when arrested, being Exs. 73, 76, 77 and 78. The admission of the contents of Ex. 76 was somewhat serious error because it contained a reference to statements made by Amarendra about the cause of his tetanus infection, which evidence had quite properly been excluded by the learned Judge at another stage of the trial.

Of oral evidence wrongly admitted, there was the statement by Kamala Prosad on p. 70, Vol. 1 of the paper book, that he had his suspicions about Benoyendra because he had heard from Amarendra something about the cause of his tetanus. Also the statement by Jatindra Das Gupta on p. 421 that another witness, Tota Singh had told him that "Bhaya" meant Taranath. Tota Singh in his evidence denied this. Of instances of misdirection and non-direction the learned Judge omitted to remind the jury that statements attributed to individual accused, such as those attributed to Sivapada on pp. 38, 113 and 488, would not be evidence against the other accused in the event of the jury finding that individual not guilty. Also he repeatedly stated the case for the prosecution and the arguments advanced in support of it, without clearly pointing out to the jury those parts of it which were not supported by evidence, or depended merely upon glosses upon evidence. Further on p. 703 he stated to the jury that they had already heard in evidence that Benoyendra was suffering from venereal disease. This undoubtedly was liable to prejudice the accused. There was no such evidence, because Ex. 75 which was Benoyendra's Blood Examination Report, was, quite properly, not tendered in evidence, being irrelevant and inadmissible. Further with regard to the anonymous petitions which I have mentioned already, the learned Judge referred, on pp. 708 and 712, to their contents, and told the jury that evidence given on oath was of much greater value than statements made by unknown persons in anonymous petitions, when there was nothing to show that the statements were made whereas he ought to have told them that this evidence, which had been improperly admitted, was of no value, and directed them to reject it as irrelevant. Similarly, he referred to the contents of other documents which I have held to be inadmissible and irrelevant, such as Ex. 67 on p. 712. Further, on p. 746, he referred to Balikabala as the common keep of Benoyendra and Taranath, of which there was no evidence, and on pp. 748 and 750 he said that Amarendra's body had been cremated speedily, thanks to Benoyendra's bribe to the Registrar at the burning ghat, of which there was no real evidence.

With regard to the Judge's alleged failure to examine the accused generally at the end of the case for the prosecution the learned advocates have pointed out that he repeatedly drew the jury's attention to the fact that the accused had failed to give any explanation of facts adduced in evidence against them. In my opinion, this criticism is justified. Bearing in mind that the onus of proof in criminal cases never shifts to the accused, and that they are under no obligation to prove their innocence or adduce evidence in their defence or to make any statement, the learned Judge's remarks amounted to misdirection. Upon this point the law has recently been re-stated clearly and emphatically by Viscount Sankey, L. C. in 1935 A C 462 (1). And in any case, if the learned Judge intended to make such remarks, it was undoubtedly his duty first to give the accused an opportunity of explanation by drawing their attention specifically to the evidence upon which the learned Judge relied. On the whole however I have come to the conclusion that none of these errors are more than comparatively minor blemishes on what was otherwise a careful and very able charge, and a masterly exposition of intricate evidence, at the end of a long and difficult trial. Nevertheless, if I thought that these errors had seriously prejudiced the accused, or that their omission would possibly have led to a different result, or that they had caused any failure of justice it would have been necessary to order a new trial. The decision in this case, however does not really turn upon questions about the veracity of witnesses or upon the finding of doubtful facts, but upon the question what inference is to be drawn from well-established facts about the existence of which there is not and cannot be any reasonable doubt. This Court is at least as well, if not better, qualified than the jury to draw the necessary inference.

For the purpose of this decision I have eliminated from consideration all evidence which was inadmissible or of doubtful relevance. I have also disregarded the evidence of Gouri Sen about the truth of which there may be some doubt, and of Benoyendra's alleged attempts to interfere with possible witnesses after the death of Amarendra. Taking into consideration only the incidents at Bombay and at Howrah Station, and the medical and documentary evidence, the questions to be decided are, what inferences are to be drawn from these facts, and whether more than one inference is reasonably probable. After very careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that the only possibly reasonable inference is, that the two appellants conspired together to murder Amarendra, and that for this purpose they provided some person at present unknown with plague culture which was obtained by them from Bombay as alleged, and that that person, upon their instigation, murdered Amarendra by injecting the germs of plague into his arm at Howrah Station as a direct result of which he died. I am satisfied beyond any reasonable doubt from the evidence given by the medical experts and the health authorities, that the plague culture could not possibly have been obtained elsewhere than at Bombay and in the manner alleged. It is clear from the evidence that Benoyendra and Taranath had the means of obtaining plague culture and that Benoyendra had the motive to use it in the manner alleged. There is evidence that no other likely or possible person could have had either the means or the motive, and there is no evidence that anyone else had either means or motive.

The motive for this crime is clear and abundant and requires no elaboration. It is proved by the documentary evidence alone, apart from the statements of witnesses whose evidence may possibly have been coloured by bias or suspicion. The result is that each of these appeals must be dismissed. The murder was committed more than two years ago. The appellants were arrested in February 1934, were committed for trial in May, and were on trial until February 1935. The appeals and the reference were received in the office of this Court on 25th February, but the paper book was not ready until 2nd July, a delay of over four months. In a capital sentence case this delay is unreasonable and requires explanation. The result of this delay and the intervention of the long vacation had been that the appellants have remained under sentence of death for approximately ten months. In consideration of these facts, and all the facts and circumstances of this case, which depends solely upon circumstantial evidence, and in the hope that this course may lead to the discovery and apprehension of the actual perpetrator of this atrocious crime, we do not confirm the sentence of death, but sentence each of the appellants instead to transportation for life.

Nasim Ali, J.—I agree. Mr. Basu appearing on behalf of the accused Benoyendra has contended before us that we have no power to affirm the conviction of the accused, if the verdict of the jury on which the conviction is based is found by us to be erroneous owing to misdirections of the Judge. The line of reasoning adopted by Mr. Basu is as follows: By proviso to S. 376, Criminal P.C., sentence of death cannot be confirmed by this Court until the appeal of the accused has been disposed of. By S. 418 (1), of the Code, where the trial is by jury, appeal lies on a matter of law only. In disposing of appeals in such cases the powers of the appellate Court are limited by S. 423 of the Code (1). If there is no error of law the appeal fails. If there is an error of law the appeal succeeds. Admission of inadmissible evidence, misdirections or non-directions on material points are errors of law. Sub-s. 2 of S. 423, authorises the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a jury if it is erroneous owing to a misdirection of the Judge. As soon as the verdict is found to be erroneous owing to misdirection of the Judge this Court is bound to set aside the verdict as well as the conviction and sentence. After the conviction and the sentence are set aside nothing remains to be confirmed under S. 376 (a) of the Code. Two courses are thereafter open to this Court (a) to acquit the accused or (b) to order a re-trial. This Court can go into facts for either of those two purposes. It cannot go into facts and substitute its own verdict in place of the verdict of the jury which has been already set aside. The word "erroneous" in sub-s. (2) of S. 423 does not mean wrong in facts but wrong in the process by which it has been arrived at. The expression "in fact has occasioned a failure of justice" in S. 537 (d) of the Code does not imply failure of justice in reality, i.e. on merits. It implies prejudice or some substantial wrong to the accused. S. 167 of the Evidence Act must be read subject to the general principle laid down (1894) A C 57 (2), that the right to be tried by a jury is a cherished right and cannot be taken away by the Court of appeal.

In support of this argument reliance was placed by the learned Advocate in the following cases, 21 Cal 955 (3), 25 Cal 230 (4), 4 C W N 576 (5), 14 C W N 493 (6), 39 All 348 (7), 46 Cal 895 (8). In 21 Cal 955 (3) there was no appeal on facts. The word "erroneous" in S. 423 was taken to mean wrong not on facts but wrong in the process by which it was arrived at. The reason given for this interpretation was that the word must be read in connection with the words that follow. In this case the principle in (1894) A C 57 (2) was applied and no reference was made to S. 167, Evidence Act. (1894) A C 57 (2) proceeded on the principle that right to be tried by jury is a cherished right and if an accused be deprived of that right, substantial wrong is done to the accused and there is miscarriage of justice. The verdict of the jury was set aside and the accused was acquitted. In 25 Cal 230 (4) the verdict of the jury was found to be vitiated by misdirections. This Court set aside the verdict and ordered a re-trial in view of the decision in Waffadar's case (3). In this case also there was no appeal on facts. In 4 C W N 576 (5) the principle in Makin's case (2) was applied. In this case there was no appeal on facts. The misdirections of the Judge were found to have misled the jury upon a material point. The Court of appeal was not in a position to say what effect the misdirection might or might not have on the minds of the jurymen. Under these circumstances it was held that the prisoners were prejudiced and there had been failure of justice. The conviction was set aside and a retrial was ordered. In 14 C W N 493 (6) the principle in Sadhu Sheikh's case (5) was followed. There was no appeal on facts. S. 167, Evidence Act, did not apply to it as no inadmissible evidence was placed before the jury. In this case re-trial was ordered in the case of some of the accused. In 39 All 348 (7) the appeal was against an order of acquittal. The Allahabad High Court followed the principle laid down in 21 Cal 955 (3), set aside the conviction and ordered a re-trial.

In 46 Cal 895 (8) there was no appeal on facts. The verdict of the jury was based on some inadmissible evidence. S. 167, Evidence Act, was not applied as the trial was by jury and the appeal lay on a matter of law only. In this case however it has been observed that the true rule is that the Court of appeal should not confirm the conviction of the appellant or regard the legal evidence as sufficient to justify the decision unless it is satisfied that the verdict of the jury would have been the same if no evidence had been wrongly admitted and that the same principle should be applied to the wrongful admission of evidence as to misdirections of law. In this case the Court was not in a position to predict that the verdict of the jury would not have been the same if no evidence had been wrongly admitted. The appellant was discharged in this case, as re-trial was held to be a matter of discretion. The learned Advocate-General appearing for the Crown invited our attention in this connection to the following cases: 19 Bom 749 (9), 25 Cal 711 (10), 26 Mad 1 (11), 26 C W N 558 (12), 40 C L J 313 (13), 58 Cal 96 (14), 59 Cal 1361 (15) and 1933 Bom 153 (16). In 1933 Bom 153 (16) the Bombay High Court dissented from the decision in 21 Cal 955 (3). In this case the verdict of the jury was vitiated by some inadmissible evidence. The learned Judges however applied the provisions of S. 167, Evidence Act, and affirmed the conviction and sentences though the appeal lay as a matter of law only. The reasons given were: (1) no authority was cited in 21 Cal 955 (3) in support of the interpretation of the word "erroneous" in S. 423 of the Code. (2) In view of the provision of S. 167, Evidence Act, and Ss. 537 and 423, Cl. (d), Criminal P. C., the principle in (1894) A C 57 (2) was not applicable in India. The learned Judges applied the test laid down in 5 W R 80 (17), viz., whether if the case had been tried by a Judge and assessors the Court would set aside the verdict.

It was pointed out that a re-trial should be ordered where the evidence is of such a character as to render it difficult to pronounce upon its value without hearing witnesses, but where the evidence is one sided and practically undisputed and the result depends upon the inference from that evidence the matter should be determined by the Court of appeal and no re-trial should be ordered. In 25 Cal 711 (10), this Court dissented from the decision in 21 Cal 955 (3). The reasons given are (1) that the principle enunciated in (1894) A C 57 (2) is not applicable in this country as the policy of this country is different, (2) that nowhere the law lays down that when the verdict is set aside the Court must necessarily direct a new trial. In this case the appeal lay on a matter of law only. In 26 Mad 1 (11) the test in 5 W R 80 (17) was applied. It is pointed out that trial by jury is a comparatively recent innovation in India and even now all the offences are not so tried. The principle in (1894) A C 57 (2) should not be applied to a country where the history and essential characteristics of the law of trial by jury are very different. It has been observed in this case that S. 418 simply means that if there is an error of law the appeal will lie, and if there is no such error no appeal will lie and that the section does not prohibit the Court in a case where an appeal lies on a question of law from deciding questions of fact which other sections of the Code require the Court to decide in order to do justice to the case. In this case it is also pointed out that the words "in fact" in S. 537, indicate that in order to determine whether there has been a failure of justice in fact we must look into the facts to see what they are. 21 Cal 955 (3) and 25 Cal 230 (4) were dissented from by the learned Judges.

In 26 C W N 558 (12) there was an appeal on a matter of law only. Though there had been misdirections, this Court refused to set aside the verdict and dismissed the appeal as it came to the conclusion after examining the evidence, that the misdirection in fact did not occasion a failure of justice. In 40 C L J 313 (13) this Court did not interfere with the verdict of the jury though it was based on some inadmissible evidence in view of the provision of S. 167, Evidence Act, as apart from the inadmissible evidence there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision. In 58 Cal 96 (14) this Court has laid down that even if the verdict of the jury is erroneous owing to misdirection in a proper case this Court should deal with the whole case under the power and duty conferred upon it by law. This was an appeal against an order of acquittal. In 59 Cal 1361 (15) it has been laid down by this Court that before we can interfere with the verdict of the jury we must be reasonably satisfied that not only the Judge misdirected the jury but that his misdirection has caused them to come to a conclusion which is in fact wrong. In deciding 1933 Bom 153 (6) the Bombay High Court followed the principle laid down in the case reported in 19 Bom 749 (9). In this case though the appeal lay on a matter of law only Patkar J., made the following observations:

In a case of trial by jury the appellate Court has power in the event of any misdirection or admission of inadmissible evidence either to convict or to acquit the accused according as the evidence is or is not sufficient for conviction. Where the facts have to be determined and the evidence is of such a character that it renders it difficult to pronounce any opinion as to its character without hearing witnesses, re-trial may be ordered.

It may be noticed here that in the Code of 1872 (S. 283) the words used were has occasioned a failure of justice either by affecting the due conduct of the prosecution or by prejudicing the prisoner in his defence.

In the Code of 1882 the latter words were omitted and the section simply read "has occasioned a failure of justice." After the decision in 21 Cal 955 (3) and 25 Cal 230 (4) the words "in fact" were inserted and the explanation and an illustration were added in 1898. In 26 Mad 1 (11) Benson, J., observed :

The words 'in fact' were introduced into the Code in 1898 apparently in order to emphasise the duty of the Court to go into merits before interfering in consequence of a misdirection or other error.

It is not disputed by Mr. Bose that in an appeal against an order of acquittal this Court can go into facts and convict the accused though the verdict may be erroneous owing to a misdirection of the Judge. Mr. Bose also concedes that in appeals against the conviction this Court after setting aside the verdict on the ground of misdirection has power to go into facts and acquit the accused. The learned Advocate-General contended that this Court has power under S. 423 to dismiss the appeal (even if verdict is erroneous in the process by which it has been arrived at) if this Court find that the conviction is right on the merits. From the reported cases it appears that there is a divergence of judicial opinion on the question whether in cases where the appeal lies on a matter of law only the appellate Court has power in the event of any misdirection by the Judge or admission of inadmissible evidence to deal with the whole case on merits and to dispose of the case finally. The later decisions of this Court show that this Court has such power. In cases however where the appellants have been sentenced to death they have in this Court an appeal on matter of fact as well as of law. S. 374, read with 418 (2), supports this view. In disposing of a reference under S. 374 and the appeals by the persons sentenced to death we are therefore obliged to come to our own independent conclusions as to the guilt or innocence of the accused independently of the verdict of the jury or of the opinion of the Judge. In these cases the questions of misdirection are of less importance. But though we are not bound by the verdict of the jury we must attach greatest possible weight to the verdict of the jury if it answer a reasonable test. [See 2 C W N 49 (18), 32 C W N 345 (19), 34 C W N 1154 (20), and 37 C W N 595 (21).] Much reliance was placed by Mr. Bose on a decision of this Court of the year 1927 in 31 C W N 881 (22), in which the following observations were made:

The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer has argued that the entire case is open to us under S. 374, Criminal P. C. No doubt that is so ; but that assumes that whatever has happened before the case comes to this Court has been done in strict accordance with the provision of the law, viz., that there had been a proper trial before a Judge and jury. But we are unable to say that there has been a proper trial in the case, the only course that is open to us is to set aside the conviction and sentence and to direct a re-trial.

This was a very peculiar case. In this case the Judge told the jury that there was no case considering the matter from any point of view other than the point of view presented by the prosecution and that the only course open to them was to bring in a verdict of guilty. Under these circumstances this Court held that there has been no proper trial. It may be noticed that in this case also it has been observed that in a reference under S. 374 the entire case is open to us. In disposing of a reference under S. 374 of the Code and the appeals by the accused, we are therefore bound to satisfy ourselves by going through the evidence whether the accused have been rightly convicted, but in doing so we must attach considerable weight to the verdict of the jury. If after examining the evidence which is admissible in law we find even without any opportunity of hearing witnesses and seeing their demeanour, that certain facts emerge from the evidence as proved beyond reasonable doubt and the decision in the case depends upon inference to be drawn from these proved facts, we are not bound to order a retrial. When however the evidence cannot be properly weighed by the Court without hearing witnesses and seeing their demeanour in the witness box and we are not in a position to say whether the facts from which inferences are to be drawn are true or false, retrial should be ordered. I am therefore unable to accept the broad proposition that in dealing with reference under S. 374 and the appeal by the accused only two courses are open to us, viz. either to acquit the accused or to order a re-trial.

Now the charge against the accused is that between May 1932 and December 1933 at Bhawanipore, Calcutta, Howrah and Deoghar, Pakur, Bombay and other places they along with others were parties to a conspiracy to commit murder of Amarendra and in pursuance of the said conspiracy Amarendra was in fact murdered by the introduction, on 26th November 1933 of virulent plague bacilli in his body which resulted in his death on 4th December 1933. It is not necessary that there should be express proof of conspiracy. It is not necessary to prove that two or more persons came together, actually agreed in terms to have the common design and to pursue it by common means and so carry it into execution. There may be no witnesses to say that in their presence the conspirators agreed to carry out an unlawful object. From the acts and conduct agreement can be inferred. If it is proved that they pursued, by the acts, the same object often by the same means, one performing one part of the act and the other another part of the same act so as to complete it with a view to the attainment of the object which they were pursuing, you are at liberty to draw the inference that they conspired together to effect that object: (1837) 8 C & P 297 (23). The question whether certain acts were done in pursuance of a conspiracy or were done separately without any pre-arranged plan depends upon the evidence in each case. The evidence must show a common plan so as to exclude a reasonable possibility of the acts of the conspirators having been done separately and connected only by coincidence. (His Lordship then considered the evidence and proceeded). There are therefore no circumstances to show that his attempts to get plague culture in 1932 and his activities at the Arthur Road hospital in 1933 were in connection with his experiments on any plague cure. It is true that:

The proof of a case against the prisoner must depend for its support not upon the absence or part of any explanation on the part of the prisoner himself but from the positive alternative evidence of his guilt that is given by the Crown. It is not however an unreasonable thing and it daily occurs in investigation both civil and criminal that if there is a certain appearance made against a party if he is involved by the evidence in a state of considerable suspicion he is called upon for his own sake and his own safety to state and to bring forward the circumstances whatever they may be which might reconcile such suspicious circumstances with perfect innocence, (1839) 4 St Tr N S 85, 443 (24).

From the facts and circumstances of the case the only reasonable inference is Taranath went to Bombay for the purpose of securing plague culture. Now Benoy in his statement says that he had been to Bombay in connection with his film business. It has been already stated that he arrived at Bombay on 30th April 1933 and left Bombay on the next day when he was told by Dr. Naidu to ask Taranath to write to the Director of Haffkine Institute for permission to make his experiments in the laboratory of the Institute. On his arrival at Bombay on 30th April 1933 he took Ratan Salaria as his guide. Ratan Salaria in his examination says that Benoy told him that his business in Bombay was to obtain facilities for Taranath's plague cure. He further says that Benoy did not say a word to him about any film Company or asked him to guide him to any film Company. It was never suggested to Ratan Salaria in the course of his cross-examination that his first visit to Bombay was in connection with any film business or that he ever visited any film Company. On his second visit to Bombay he also told Ratan Salaria that the object of his visit was the same as on the last occasion. This time he tried to get plague culture surreptitiously from the Haffkine Institute through Dr. Nagrajan and Dr. Sathe. He no doubt denies this, but no reason was shown why these two witnesses from Bombay would give false evidence against Benoy. There is nothing to show that Taranath asked Benoy to see these two doctors.

On the other hand Taranath says that he asked him to try Arthur Road Hospital for facilities for his experiments there. There was no suggestion to Ratan Salaria that Benoy's second visit was in connection with some film business. Much reliance was placed by the learned advocate for Benoyendra on Ex. 33. This is a letter which was written by Benoy to Amar on 20th July 1933. In this letter Benoy stated that his trip to Bombay was in connection with the production of a film and the costs were paid by a Company to a rupee, and that there were letters, cheques and bills in connection with the matter. No evidence was adduced by Benoy to substantiate these statements in Ex. 33. There is nothing to show that such evidence was not available at the time of the trial. In the course of the trial Benoy did not suggest the name of any company or anything from which the prosecution could get any details of this business. Prosecution therefore was not in a position to bring any evidence to show that his story about film business was false. Benoy was spending money from the joint fund and in order to meet any objections from Amarendra he was giving a false explanation in Ex. 33 about his expenses at Bombay.

It may be noticed here that after the death of Amarendra, Benoyendra made attempts to tamper with the evidence. Benoy does not explain why he was going to Bombay with money on 18th

February 1934. The reason is obvious. He was going to Bombay because he knew that the best evidence about his complicity in the crime would come from Bombay. There are no materials or circumstances for a reasonable hypothesis that Benoyendra's visit to Bombay was in connection with any film business or any business other than the procurement of plague culture. The report (Ex. 26) of Dr. Santosh Kumar Gupta (P. W. 33), his evidence in Court and the evidence of Dr. Naidu (P. W. 68) prove that Amarendra died of plague. It was argued on behalf of the appellants that the report of Dr. Gupta should not be relied upon as he did not apply the agglutination test. The evidence of Dr. Naidu is that it is extremely difficult, almost impossible to get a homogeneous and even suspension without spontaneous clumping and that specific anti plague serum agglutinates precede tuberculosis reduntum and also some members of the Pasteurella group. There is therefore no substance in this contention. It had been already stated that on 26th November 1933, while Amarendra was proceeding across the Howrah Station Hall after passing through the no-exit gate, he shouted out that he had been pricked by somebody with a pin. On 29th November Dr. Nalini found the mark of a prick on the right deltoid, something like the mark of a hypodermic needle. Dr. Nalini refused to accept the defence suggestion that the mark which he saw was the mark of a flea or insect-bite. The evidence in this case excludes the defence suggestion that Amarendra was bitten by a rat-flea at the Howrah Station. I am satisfied from the evidence in this case that plague bacilli were injected into Amar's system by some man at the Howrah Station and that his death was caused by the injection of the sensus. Now what was the source of this plague culture? The evidence in this case shows:

(1) That the Haffkine Institute at Bombay is the only place in India where plague research and researches on cultured Sera and Vaccine are being carried on since 1896 (P. W. 68). (2) That the said Institute supplied cultures to Government Institutions and research Institutions, if approved by proper authority (P. W. 68). (3) That the said Institute does not supply plague culture to private bodies or persons (P. W. 68). (4) That in 1932 the Haffkin Institute sent some plague culture to Dr. Ukil of Calcutta but the culture and the sub-culture were destroyed in 1932 when the sub-culture failed (Exs. 15, 15/1, Ex. 16 and the evidence of P. W. 41 and P. W. 43); (5) that in January or February 1933 four tubes of plague culture were supplied by the Haffkin Institute to the School of Tropical Medicine in Calcutta (P. W. 69); (6) that the Arthur Road Hospital at Bombay is the only place in Bombay where plague cases are treated and culture is made in that hospital only for the Haffkin Institute (P. W. 47); (7) that the said hospital does not supply plague cultures to any other person or Institute except the Haffkin (P. W. 47); (8) that at Kanbun Valley researches are going on with regard to several aspects of plague (P. W. 68); and (9) that there are plague hospitals in Poona, Hyderabad and Secunderabad (P. W. 68).

Now the evidence does not show that plague cultures are made or are available at Kanbun Valley or the plague hospitals in Poona, Hyderabad and Secunderabad. The evidence of P. W. 69 shows that out of the four sealed tubes of plague culture indented by the Tropical School in Calcutta, up to 2nd October 1934, three continued to be in the same condition as they were when they were received from Bombay. The accused Tara Nath could not get plague culture in Calcutta, in 1932 and 1933 and had to look to Bombay for the same. In July 1933 Benoyendra told Dr. Nagarajan (P. W. 46) that he could not get plague culture in the Calcutta School of Tropical Medicine. The Tropical School in Calcutta does not make plague cultures or stock them. Plague cultures are generally indented for that school from the Haffkin Institute for purposes of experiment. The inference therefore is legitimate that the other tube in the Tropical School was used for experiments in the school before 6th April 1933. Captain Pasricha (P. W. 69) also said that in no other place in Calcutta plague cultures are made or stocked. The culture which was the cause of Amar's death was not therefore procured from Calcutta. The attempts of Dr. Tara Nath in 1932 and that of Benoyendra in 1933 to obtain plague culture from Haffkin Institute failed. The evidence in this case does not suggest that it could have been obtained from the said Institute. In July 1933 Benoyendra while at Bombay got the information from Dr. Nagarajan that plague cultures were available in Arthur Road Hospital at Bombay. Tara Nath on his arrival at Bombay got access to plague cultures which were alive. The evidence further shows that Tara Nath had means to remove some plague culture without the knowledge of the hospital authorities and carry the same to Calcutta.

There is evidence also to the effect that plague culture if purloined in July 1933 could be kept alive up to 26th November 1933. There is also evidence that from 1926 up to September 1934 only one doctor, i. e., Tara Nath from Bengal had gone from Calcutta and Bengal to Arthur Road Hospital. The only reasonable inference is that the culture which was injected into Amar's body was brought from the Arthur Road Hospital at Bombay. The evidence does not show that the man who injected plague culture into Amar's body had any opportunity of stealing culture from the said hospital. He must have therefore got it from some body else. Benoyendra was on bad terms with Amarendra. The evidence does not show that any one else had any motive for murdering Amarendra. Benoyendra and Tara Nath were close friends and associates. The activities of Benoyendra and Tara Nath at Bombay in July 1933 can be explained only on the reasonable hypothesis that they were acting in close concert to steal plague culture from Arthur Road Hospital. In pursuance of the preparation made by Benoyendra, Tara Nath on his arrival at Bombay obtained facilities for stealing plague bacilli from the said hospital. They could be carried to Calcutta and kept alive till 26th November 1933. The germ which was responsible for Amarendra's death was obtained from Arthur Road Hospital and the evidence shows that excepting Tara Nath no body else had any opportunity for purloining it from that hospital. The only legitimate inference therefore is that the plague culture which was the cause of Amarendra's death was procured from Arthur Road Hospital in pursuance of a conspiracy to murder Amarendra and was supplied to a person at present unknown who injected it into Amar's system and Amarendra was murdered in fact by the injection of that sepsis at the Howrah Station on 26th November 1933 and that Benoyendra and Tara Nath were parties to that conspiracy.

(c) Contract—Construction—Ratification—Necessary ingredients—Act must have been done for and in name of principal—There must be proof of full knowledge of what those acts were or that principal intended to take upon himself responsibility for such acts whatever they were.

To constitute a binding adoption of acts a priori unauthorized, these conditions must exist: (1) the acts must have been done for and in the name of the supposed principal and (2) there must be a full knowledge of what those acts were, or such an unqualified adoption that the inference may properly be drawn that the principal intended to take upon himself the responsibility for such acts, whatever they were.

Where the supposed ratification relates to acts as to which there is no pretence of any a priori authority, where it is not a question merely of excess of authority, full knowledge of the facts and unequivocal adoption after such knowledge must be proved, or in the alternative, the circumstances of the alleged ratification must be such as to warrant the clear inference that the principal was adopting the supposed agent's acts whatever they were or however culpable they were. Ratification relates back to the time of inception of the transaction and has a complete retroactive efficacy. [P 92 C 1, 2]

(d) Appeal—Powers of appellate Court—Issue simple one—Appellate Court will not discard appreciation of evidence by trial Court—Trial Court not properly considering effect of documentary evidence—Appellate Court may draw conclusions of its own.

Where, the issue is a simple one, the appellate Court should not very lightly discard the appreciation of evidence made by the trial Court which had the opportunity of seeing witnesses, hearing them and watching their demeanour.

Where, however, the weight of the admitted documents in evidence or of the documents in the evidence which have been proved, is so great that the appellate Court is constrained to differ from the estimate of the evidence by the trial Judge who belittles the effect of documentary evidence, the appellate Court may draw conclusions of its own. D. N. Mitter, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of a contract to sell. The plaintiff is the purchaser in whose favour the contract has been entered into by defendant 1. The suit has been dismissed by the Subordinate Judge. Hence the present appeal by the plaintiff. The case of the plaintiff is that defendant 1, Kedar Nath Bose, who is now the owner of a portion of the house known as Raja Bahadur's Haveli purported to sell the portion which is still left with him for a sum of Rs. 7,000. The case is that the contract to sell was entered into between the present plaintiff and the son of Kedar Nath Bose, Kali Das who has been described throughout these proceedings as Felu whom Kedar Nath Bose empowered to deal in the matter of the sale. The plaintiff in pursuance of certain correspondence to which reference will be made hereafter sends his kinsman and nephew Rash Behary Roy to the residence of defendant 1 at Calcutta, and according to the direction of defendant 1, he (Rash Behary) on 30th January 1930, corresponding to the 16th

Magh 1336 B.S. having settled with Felu to purchase for Rs. 7,000, the price proposed by defendant 1, sent a wire to the plaintiff for sending the earnest money. Accordingly a sum of Rs. 100, was sent to Harendra, son of the plaintiff, on 31st January 1930 by telegraphic money order and Harendra and Rash Behary paid that sum of Rs. 100, to Felu as earnest money as directed by defendant 1, and Felu accepted the same. It is stated that defendant 1 is legally bound by the acceptance of his son who was given, if not an express at least an implied, power to deal with the matter of sale and accept any offer that would be made. The plaint then narrates certain circumstances on which the plaintiff submits that Kedar ratified the acts done by his son even if there was no express or implied authority by Kedar in the matter of sale. He has accordingly prayed for a decree for specific performance of the contract of 30th January 1930 directing the defendants to execute a Kobala of out and out sale in favour of the plaintiff free from incumbrances and to get it registered within the time to be fixed by the Court. There is an alternative prayer, namely, that in case the defendants failed to execute the Kobala within the time fixed by the Court, the Court would proceed to execute and register such a Kobala in favour of the plaintiff in that behalf. The suit impleaded not only defendant 1, the vendor, but also defendants 2 and 3 as it is said that they are purchasers subsequent to the contract, their purchase having been effected on 14th March 1930. It is stated in the plaint that the purchase of defendants 2 and 3 was with notice of the earlier contract in favour of the plaintiff. In consequence of defendants 2 and 3 having been impleaded the plaintiff has asked for a further declaration that the Kobala of 14th March 1930 corresponding to the 30th Falgoon 1336 B.S. executed by defendant 1 in the name of defendant 3 one Romola Datt Chowdhurani, wife of defendant 2, was not binding on the plaintiff and for a further declaration that no title had accrued to defendants 2 and 3 on the basis of the same. Defendant 4 is said to have been a lessee under defendants 2 and 3. But the suit as against him has been dismissed as will appear from an order in the order sheet.

was no completed contract on 30th January 1930 or on a subsequent date prior to the conveyance in favour of defendant 3 and that whatever talk there was between the plaintiff and defendant 1 or his son that talk did not pass beyond the stage of negotiation and could not constitute contract specifically enforceable and (2) that defendants 2 and 3 are purchasers without notice. It may be said in this connexion that these defendants have also set forth in their written defence a contract with an agent of defendant 1, namely Surendra Nath Bose who figures very largely in this case, entered into on 1st February 1930, alleging that the sale on 14th March was in pursuance of the contract of 1st February 1930 and even if it be held that there was a ratification of the agreement by Felu (son of defendant 1) on 7th February 1930, defendant 3's purchase should prevail in view of the earlier contract of 1st February 1930.

The Subordinate Judge has given effect to these defences and has dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has consequently preferred the present appeal and Mr. Atul Chandra Gupta for the appellant has contended before us that the Subordinate Judge should have held that the contract set up by the plaintiff dated 30th January was a valid contract with defendant 1 by which he agreed to sell the properties now in question. It is contended that he should have further held that Felu, the son of Kedar, was empowered by Kedar to accept any offer that Felu could get and that he did really accept the offer by receiving Rs. 100 by way of earnest money. It has been further argued that apart from the question of Felu's authority to accept the offer and to receive the earnest money the Subordinate Judge should have held that Kedar ratified the acceptance of the offer of the plaintiff by Felu. It has been further contended that in so far as the defendants' case with regard to the contract executed by the Am-mukhtear of the plaintiff, Surendra Nath Basu dated 1st February 1930 is concerned, the agreement entered into on that date was really an ante-dated agreement for defeating the rights of the plaintiff. In order to consider the soundness or otherwise of these contentions on which Mr. Atul Chandra Gupta proposes to rest the appeal on behalf of his client it is necessary to refer to the oral and documentary evidence which has been given in this case on behalf of both the parties. In support of the contention of the appellant that there has been a valid contract between them, the plaintiff and defendant 1 on 30th January 1930, our attention has been drawn to two letters, namely, Ex. 1 dated 24th January 1930 and Ex. 3 dated 26th January 1930, which have been printed at pp. 7 and 8 of the second part of the paper-book respectively. It appears that on 24th January 1930, the present plaintiff wrote to defendant 1 to the following effect. It is only necessary to quote the material portion. The plaintiff writes thus:

The news for the present is that I hear that you would sell your house in Raja Bahadur's Haveli at Barisal and that some one would come here on 14th Magh and settle the terms thereof (i. e. 14th Magh corresponding to 28th January 1930). I spoke to my maternal uncle, Khitish Chandra Roy about this matter I am ready to purchase that house. I hope that the terms of sale may not be settled without informing me. On arrival at Barisal I may be enquired for at the house of my father-in-law, Biseswar Ghose. Or if you or Felu come to Barisal, please put up at our house. ———

This letter was received by defendant 1 on 26th January at about 6-30 p. m. or 7 p. m. and in answer to that Ex. 3 the postcard was written by Kedar Nath Bose which contains certain important statements :

Glad to receive your letter. I am going to attend the Kumbha Mela at Allahabad by to-night's train. Yes, I shall sell such portion of the Raja Bahadur's house that I now have. I have got an offer up to Rs. 6,500. I intend to have Rs. 7,000. If you are willing to have it, write to Felu to this address. There is no certainty as to when I shall return. As a matter of fact, nothing short of Rs. 6,500, the offer I have already got, will do ; be it whatever in excess. Two or three persons have offered that price. ———

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that this was an offer by Kedar Nath Bose to sell Raja Bahadur's Haveli or rather such portion of it as has not been sold, for a sum of Rs. 7,000. On the other hand it has been contended on behalf of the respondents that this was not an offer at all within the meaning of S. 2, Contract Act, but that was merely an invitation to an offer. We do not think that we should accede to this contention raised on behalf of the respondents for S. 2 (a) states this :

When one person signifies to another his willingness to do or to abstain from doing anything, with a view to obtaining the assent of that other to such act or abstinence, he is said to make a proposal.

Kedar, defendant 1, was by this letter signifying his willingness to sell a portion of the Raja Bahadur's Haveli now in question for a sum of Rs. 7,000, and he was communicating his willingness to sell for Rs. 7,000 to the present plaintiff by this letter. We have therefore no hesitation in repelling the contention made both by the learned advocates for defendants 1, 2 and 3. This was really an offer or rather a proposal within the meaning of S. 2, Contract Act. It appears from the evidence that in pursuance of this letter which was received in Barisal on 28th January 1930 in the morning at about 7-30 A. M. which must have been delivered to the plaintiff say by 9 A. M. The plaintiff sends his son one Harendra and a relation Rash Behari, as has been mentioned in the plaint, to see Felu, the son of Kedar Nath Bose, defendant 1. The evidence is that Felu expressed his intention to accept the offer of Rs. 7,000 for the house and asked that earnest money should be paid. Evidence does not show that he named any sum for the earnest money.

But the evidence of Rash Behari is that he asked for a sum of Rs. 100 which came by telegraphic money order and this sum was paid to Felu. The Subordinate Judge has hesitated to believe this part of the case because no receipt for Rs. 100 had been produced. No doubt the non-production of any receipt is a weak part of the plaintiff's case, but an explanation has been given by the son as well as by Rash Behari that they did not out of a sense of delicacy ask for any receipt as both the plaintiff and defendant 1 are relations, and it is very likely that Harendra was merely handing over the earnest money of the small amount of Rs. 100 without asking for a receipt as he was not sufficiently experienced in worldly affairs. As such he did not perhaps choose to ask for any receipt from a relation of his. It has been said, and in our opinion rightly said, that the case of want of consideration for the non-production of the receipt of Rs. 100 has been unduly stressed. In support of this payment we have the evidence of Rash Behari. We have evidence also of the two pleaders Lal Mohan Chakravarty and Charu Chandra Roy who state that Surendra Nath Bose, the agent of defendant 1, admitted before them the receipt of the earnest money of Rs. 100. I might just refer in this connexion to the evidence of these two witnesses which is printed at pp. 164 and 169 of the first part of the paper-book respectively. Charu Chunder Roy says this :

Surendra Nath Bose told me when the measurements took place that the price had been settled at Rs. 7,000. Surendra Bose told me near the shop of Srish Roy that Rs. 100 had been paid as earnest money!

Lal Mohan Chakravarty says this on the point :

Surendra Bose told Charu Babu that he would find the description of the property and the boundaries from Srish Babu's Kobala and asked Charu Babu to state in the draft that Rs. 7,000 had been fixed as the consideration and that out of that sum Rs. 100 had been received as earnest money.

Having regard to the evidence of these two pleaders to the fact that there was some payment of money by the plaintiff's son to defendant 1, we think we should not be justified in rejecting the oral evidence on the question that the sum had been paid more particularly as it appears from the telegraphic money order that a sum of Rs. 100 had been sent by the plaintiff and received by the plaintiff's son in Calcutta. It has been suggested on behalf of the respondents that the telegraphic money order to Rash Behari at Calcutta was sent for the purpose of creating evidence of the payment of the sums for use at a later date. The reason suggested for such a course is that when on the 14th Magh, corresponding to the 28th January, the plaintiff found that a contract was going to be entered into on the 1st February with defendants 2 and 3 and everything had been settled with reference to the contract of defendant 3 and defendant 2 this telegraphic money order was sent in order to create evidence in order to avail of the sum when occasion demanded. It is next contended on behalf of the appellant on this part of the case that the learned Subordinate Judge ought to have read the facts of this case in the light of the subsequent conduct of the parties some of which are evidenced by some of the letters proved in this case. With regard to Felu's authority it is said that some of the letters which passed between the plaintiff and Kedar Nath Bose, throw considerable light and support the case made in the plaint. We are referred in this connexion to the letter of 7th February 1930, which has been marked as Ex. 8, and printed at p. 29 of the second part of the paper-book, written by Kedar Nath Bose to the plaintiff. This letter is admitted to have been written by defendant 1. Some of the passages in this letter have to be quoted in extenso, for they have been referred to for the purpose of showing that by this letter of 7-2-1930 there was ratification of the acts of Felu and that the letter is the evidence of the fact that Felu was given an implied authority to deal with the matter of sale. I will only quote the material portion. The letter runs thus :

Glad to receive your letter. I have returned from Kumbha only these 3 days since. I don't know what conversations there were with you. But when Sriman Felu has given his word, then action will be taken accordingly. The papers relating to that house are with my officer at home. Letter has been written to him to come with these papers. There is also a power of attorney in his name. He will be able to get it (Kobala) registered

Towards the end and in the last paragraph it is stated thus :

It is impossible for Sriman Felu to go to Barisal and get the document registered, because he is the cashier of a Bank and can on no account get leave. If you think it necessary to have it registered by me it will have to be registered at Calcutta. It involves an extra expenditure of Rs. 10 only. Consideration money will have to be paid to me here. No efforts will be spared to complete the transaction at an early date.

This letter or at any rate the passage which has just been quoted lends support to the case made by the plaintiff that Kedar gave authority to his son Felu to deal with the matter of contract of sale in question. At any rate this letter acknowledges the existence of such a contract. This letter also shows as has been contended for on behalf of the appellant that there has been in any event ratification of the act of Felu by defendant 1. Dealing first with the question of implied authority it appears clear from this letter that Felu was given authority to complete the transaction in connection with the sale of Raja Bahadur's Haveli. The words "but when Sriman Felu has given his word then action will be taken accordingly", can lead to but one inference that by the previous letter Ex. 3, the post card written by Kedar to the plaintiff, authority was given impliedly to Felu to deal with the contract or any offer in respect of the sale now in question. Having regard to what we have found, namely, that this letter of the 26th February Ex. 8, was followed by the coming up of Rash Behari to Calcutta with the son of the plaintiff Harendra, and by his conversation with Felu about the earnest money of Rs. 100, we have no doubt in our mind that it was a valid and binding contract between the plaintiff and defendant 1's agent or son Felu with reference to the sale in question for a sum of Rs. 7,000.

The payment has been proved by the evidence to which reference has already been made including the evidence of the two pleaders of Barisal. The burden of proving this was undoubtedly on the plaintiff and he has discharged that burden by such evidence as he has given which we consider prima facie proof. It was open to the defendant to rebut the prima facie proof by production of the best evidence in the case. It might have been proved by the production of the Jama Kharach papers of defendant 1 that there was absence of any entry of the payment of Rs. 100. Notwithstanding the existence of these Jama Kharach books they were not produced; and an unfavourable inference has to be drawn in respect of this payment against defendant 1 having regard to the admissions made by his agent Surendra. It remains to consider with regard to the question of the contract an argument which has been advanced by Dr. Sen Gupta who has appeared for defendant 1 and which is founded on the provisions of S. 7 of the Contract Act. It is said that there has been no acceptance of the offer by defendant 1 seeing that the acceptance by the plaintiff was not made in the way indicated in the letter of defendant 1, Ex. 3, dated 26th January 1930. It is said by this letter that the only manner in which the acceptance of the offer could be made was by writing to Felu at the Calcutta address of defendant 1 and by no other means; and we are referred to S. 7, the material portion of which runs as follows:

In order to convert a proposal into a promise the acceptance must (1) be absolute and unqualified, (2) be expressed in some usual and reasonable manner, unless the proposal prescribes the manner in which it is to be accepted

The rest of the section is not material for our present purposes. We have to read this letter in a reasonable and in a sensible manner. When it is said in this letter that the intending purchaser will have to write to Felu it certainly did not exclude the case where the intending purchaser instead of writing to Felu put himself into communication with Felu and that is exactly what the intending purchaser in the present case did. We do not therefore think that there has been any contravention of S. 7, Contract Act, in this case so as to render the contract not binding upon defendant 1. Assuming for the purpose of the argument that there was no implied authority in Felu to complete the transaction of sale or to accept any offer, which is made by the intending purchaser of Raja Bahadur's Haveli, we have no doubt on the correspondence, which we will presently set forth that there has been a ratification of the acts of Felu by defendant 1 and we have no doubt also, nor can there be any doubt, that defendant 1 has adopted the acts of Felu in this behalf as his own. This brings us to refer to the correspondence evidenced by the postcard, Ex. 8, dated 7th February 1930, where Kedar is writing to the present plaintiff this:

Glad to receive your letter. I have returned from Kumbha only these three days since. I don't know what conversations there were with you. But when Sriman Felu has given his word, then action will be taken accordingly. The papers relating to that house are with my officer at home. Letter has been written to him to come with these papers. There is a power of attorney in his name. He will be able to get it (Kobala) registered.

Then follows another passage which has already been quoted and which concludes by saying: "No effort will be spared to complete the transaction at an early date." In our view by this letter Kedar was adopting the acts of his son and was ratifying his acts in this behalf. It has however been argued on behalf of the respondents that there can be no ratification unless the person ratifying had full knowledge of the facts and our attention has been drawn to the provisions of Ss. 197 and 198, Contract Act. S. 197 runs as follows:

Ratification may be expressed or may be implied in the conduct of the person on whose behalf the acts are done.

Section 198 is to the following effect: No valid ratification can be made by a person whose knowledge of the facts of the case is materially defective.

It has been sought to be argued that when this letter of 7th February 1930 was written Felu was not in Calcutta and that therefore Kedar was writing this, having regard to what was represented to him in a letter written by the plaintiff Surendra Nath Roy of which this letter of 7th February 1930 is a reply. It is difficult to accede to this contention that Felu was not in Calcutta at that time. The last paragraph of the letter which states that "it is impossible for Sriman Felu to go to Barisal" negatives the alleged fact that Felu was out of Calcutta. Besides, Felu works in a certain bank and the best evidence as to his absence from Calcutta on 7th February 1930 would have been the production of the bank attendance book. But even assuming that Felu was absent and that defendant 1 acted on what was represented to him in the letter, it appears clear that Kedar did not enquire into the matter as he should have done and in such circumstances it would be nonetheless a ratification of his acts and he should be taken to have knowledge of all the circumstances because he himself did not care to enquire. The rule of law in this behalf has been very lucidly stated in the decision which has been cited at the Bar in (1897) 1 Ch 213 (1). In the judgment of Lord Russell at p. 246 of the report the following relevant passage occurs:

To constitute a binding adoption of acts a priori unauthorized, these conditions must exist: (1) the acts must have been done for and in the name of the supposed principal and (2) there must be full knowledge of what those acts were, or such an unqualified adoption that the inference may properly be drawn that the principal intended to take upon himself the responsibility for such acts, whatever they were.

Then again at p. 247 of the report the learned Lord Chief Justice observes thus:

Where the supposed ratification relates to acts as to which there is no pretence of any priori authority, as in this case, where it is not a question merely of excess of authority, full knowledge of the facts and unequivocal adoption after such knowledge must be proved, or, in the alternative, the circumstances of the alleged ratification must be such as to warrant the clear inference that the principal was adopting the supposed agent's act whatever they were or however culpable they were.

It appears to us clear from a perusal of the letter of 7th February 1930, that Kedar was adopting in full the acts of Felu when he said that when Felu has given his word then action will be taken accordingly. He even went so far as to say that there would be no delay in completing the transaction which had been entered into by the son and that there would be no difficulty regarding the registration of the same. Then again ratification relates back to the time of the inception of the transaction and has a complete retroactive efficacy: (see Story on Agency, Edn. 9, p. 244); that Kedar knew all the circumstances would appear from another letter dated 16th February 1930 which has been marked as Ex. (16) in the case and which is printed at p. 31 of the second part of the paper-book. It is true that this letter has not been admitted by him but according to the Subordinate Judge it was written by Kedar. We have examined the letter, the postcard in original and have compared it with the writing of Kedar in the other admitted letters and indeed Kedar has been forced to admit in cross-examination that the writing in the postcard resembles his hand-writing. The significant passage in this letter which proves ratification is this:

I hear that my son has given word to somebody. He is not here at present. He will come within a day or two. If he has given any final word, then I shall have to be bound by that. I do not concern myself with any affairs of the estate, nor I consider it necessary. I simply take my morning and evening meals and move about here and there. I can speak to him if you let me know the amount you are ready to pay, but then I shall not be able to do anything against his wishes.

This letter was addressed to another intending purchaser, one pleader who has given his evidence in this case, named Uma Kanta Kanjabilla. There has been some discussion as to the accuracy of the translation of this letter with reference to the expression "final word" in line about 25 of p. 31 of the second part of the paper-book. We have had the original read to us and we have no doubt that Kedar was speaking there in a legal language when he said: "If he has given any final word, then I shall have to be bound by that." Strenuous endeavour has been made both by Dr. Basak who appears on behalf of defendants 2 and 3 and Dr. Sen Gupta who appears for defendant 1 in persuading us to hold that the expressions "final word," "action will be taken accordingly" and the further expression "I shall have to be bound by that" are not words of legal obligation but are words expressive of moral obligation. But no question of moral obligation arises when Kedar was speaking about a contract for sale of a house in answer to an inquiry by Uma Kanta, an intending purchaser with regard to the completion of a legal transaction. In order to substantiate this contention on behalf of the defendants and in order to convert these words into moral obligation something else would have to be read into them which is not permissible. For these reasons we are of opinion that there has been a complete ratification of the acts of Felu by Kedar Nath Basu, defendant 1, and on this ground the contract must be sustained. It brings us now to consider the earlier contract of 1st February 1930 which has been set up on behalf of defendants 2 and 3. (His Lordship then discussed the evidence and proceeded). We are not surely unmindful of what has been repeatedly said by the Privy Council that where the issue is a simple one the appellate Court should not very lightly discard the appreciation of evidence made by the trial Court which had the opportunity of seeing the witnesses, hearing them and watching their demeanour, but in the present case the weight of the admitted documents in evidence, or the documents in evidence which have been proved, is so great that we are constrained to differ from the estimate of the evidence by the Subordinate Judge who has really belittled the effect of the documentary evidence and we have no hesitation in coming to the following conclusions in this case: (1) that Felu was given an implied authority by defendant 1 to enter into a contract in reference to the sale in respect of which the suit for specific performance had been instituted; (2) assuming in the alternative that he had no such authority, there has been ample ratification by defendant 1 of his contract by his letter of 7th February 1930; (3) that the payment of Rs. 100 was made by the plaintiff's son to Felu as alleged and that Felu accepted the money according to the directions of defendant 1 (4) that the alleged contract of 1st February 1930 was not really entered into on that date but at a much subsequent date after Surendra Bose had come to Calcutta and that the subsequent conduct of defendant 1 bears traces of the influence and very considerable influence of his agent.

On these conclusions we think that the decision of the Subordinate Judge must be set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit must also be set aside and the plaintiff must be given a decree in terms of the prayers which he has set forth in the plaint which is to be found printed at p. 32 of the first part of the paper book. The plaintiff will have costs both of this Court and also of the Court below. The costs are to be recovered from defendant 1 and defendants 2 and 3, in equal proportions. The plaintiff must bring into Court below the sum of Rs. 6,900 within a month from this date which event happening, the Court below will proceed to pass the decree in accordance with prayers Ka, Gha, Uma and Cha of the plaint. In the event of such payment being made the Court below shall proceed to execute a Kobala in favour of the plaintiff and have it registered within two weeks from the date of payment of the money and in that event also defendants 2 and 3 will be able to take out the whole amount of Rs. 6,900 as it has been conceded on behalf of defendant 1 that defendants 2 and 3 have paid the purchase money. The appeal is allowed with costs and the cross-objection is dismissed. No order is made as to costs of the cross-objection. Let the record be sent down as early as possible.

Judgment.—The plaintiff who is appellant before me, instituted a suit to recover four anna share of the rent from defendant 1, Makim Sardar, who is respondent 1 before me. His case is that the remaining defendants Chandra Kumar Gan and others who are respondents 2 to 6 are the landlords of the remaining twelve anna share. The plaintiff came to Court with the case that he, Barada Prosad Gan, Chandra Kumar Gan and Jogendra Kumar Gan inducted defendant 1 as tenant on the land and that thereafter defendant 1 executed in favour of himself, the aforesaid Barada, Chandra Kumar and Jogendra a Kabuliat on 21st September 1909. Chandra Kumar and Jogendra are pro forma defendants in this suit and are respondents 2 and 3 in this appeal. Barada has no interest in the property, and it is admitted that his interest in the property has passed to the pro forma defendants. The defence that was taken was as follows: The defendant 1, said that the plaintiff was the benamidar of one Sarada Prosad Gan, whose son is Jatindra Gan, who now represents the interest of Sarada, that the defendant paid a portion of the rent claimed in the suit to the authorised agent of the plaintiff and the pro forma defendants, and that the remaining portion of the rent claimed in this suit to Jatindra who is the real owner according to this defendant. In this state of the pleadings a preliminary issue was raised as to whether defendant 1 could urge in this suit that Dinabandhu, the plaintiff, is not the real owner, and is the benamidar of Sarada and thereafter of Jatindra. Other issues were also raised one of them being: Is the defendant's plea of payment true? The learned Munsif decided all the issues in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the suit. In deciding the preliminary issue he held that defendant 1 could not raise the question in this case as to whether the plaintiff was the benamidar or the real owner in respect of the four anna share of the property claimed by him. The learned Munsif did not consider the question of benami.

He gives his reasons for not going into the said question. He says that in the Kabuliat as well as in the previous Amalnama by which the principal defendant was inducted on the land, the name of the plaintiff and not the name of his brother Sarada appeared, that is to say, defendant 1 had been inducted on the land by the plaintiff and therefore he held that he is estopped from questioning the plaintiff's right to receive rent. An appeal was taken to the learned District Judge. The learned District Judge has not considered the question as to whether the plaintiff inducted defendant 1 on the land as his tenant. He says that simply because a kabuliat has been executed in favour of the plaintiff, the defendant cannot be held to be estopped from denying the plaintiff's title and setting up the case that the plaintiff is the benamidar of Jatindra Gan to whom he paid a part of the rent claimed in the suit. The learned District Judge incidentally refers to the case of 31 Mad 461 (1), and holds that the principle of estoppel as formulated in S. 116, Evidence Act, can have no possible application when the defendant comes to Court with the case that the plaintiff suing him is the benamidar of a third party. I have to examine the correctness of the said decision. Having taken the said view the learned District Judge directed the learned Munsif to decide the two points on taking further evidence, viz., whether any payment was really made by defendant 1 to Jatindra or his Gomasta, and (2) whether Jatindra Gan was the real owner and the plaintiff a benamidar. In my judgment the learned District Judge was not right in remitting the two aforesaid points for decision by the Munsif, without recording a finding as to whether defendant 1 has been inducted on the land as tenant by the plaintiff. On that point the learned Munsif has recorded a finding and if the finding of the learned Munsif is correct, I am clearly of opinion that the learned District Judge was wrong in remitting the aforesaid two points for further consideration. If however the learned Munsif is wrong in his finding that the plaintiff inducted defendant 1 on the land, of course the learned Judge was right in asking the learned Munsif to record a finding on the two points aforesaid.

In any view of the case whatever may be the finding on the aforesaid questions, a further defence of defendant 1, viz., that he had paid a portion of the rent claimed to an authorized agent of the plaintiff and his co-sharers is to be considered. That point was considered by the learned Munsif who gave an adverse decision against the defendant. The said point was also not considered by the District Judge.

In support of the learned Judge's view on the question of estoppel, Mr. Mukherji for the respondent has placed before me a number of decisions of this Court and also of the Madras High Court. The principal decisions on which he relies are as follows: 16 W R 186 (2), 20 W R 352 (3), 31 Mad 461 (1), 26 Mad L J 597 (4) and 55 Cal 1013 (5). In my judgment none of the cases except the two cases of the Madras High Court support the contention that even if a tenant has been inducted upon the land by the plaintiff, the tenant is not estopped from raising the question that the plaintiff is a benamidar of some one to whom he has paid the rent. In my view the matter is well settled, that if a tenant is inducted on the land by a person, the tenant cannot question the title of that person who has so inducted him upon the land. This position was stated in clear terms in 8 Cal 238 (6) and 11 Cal 519 (7). The cases where a tenant can be allowed to raise a question as to the title of the landlord are also noticed in the said judgments. The principle is laid down in clear terms in 24 C L J 103 (8). At p. 11 Sir Asutosh Mukerjee puts the matter in this form. Enjoyment by permission is the foundation of the rule that a tenant shall not be permitted to dispute the title of his landlord. Two conditions, then, are essential to the existence of the estoppel, first possession, secondly, permission; when these conditions are present, the estoppel arises, and the estoppel prevails so long as such possession continues. That this was unquestionably the law in this country before the Evidence Act was passed is clear from a long line of decisions. The doctrine was expressly formulated in 1863 Marshall 377 (9); 8 Bom

We have further the weighty opinion of Sir Subramanya Ayyar, C. J., expressed in 28 Mad 526 (15), that the law has not in this respect, been altered by the Evidence Act and that now, as before, a tenant who had been let into possession was estopped from denying the landlord's title without first surrendering possession: see also 34 Bom 329 (16).

Subrawardy, J., in 41 C L J 341 (17) held that a tenant is not estopped from questioning the derivative title of the plaintiff who is suing him, the title being derived from a person who had inducted the tenant upon the land. The matter has been settled by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of 19 C W N 1207 (18), where the view of their Lordships is expressed thus:

Section 116, Evidence Act, is perfectly clear on the point and rests on the principle well established by many English cases: a tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title however defective it may be so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord.

This is also the view which has been enunciated in 55 Cal 1013 (5), by Mukerjee, J. He says that a tenant is estopped from questioning the title of his landlord who had inducted him upon the land, during the continuance of the tenancy, but the doctrine of estoppel does not extend after the discontinuance of the tenancy, that is to say, it is open to the tenant to question the title of the landlord who had inducted him, if the tenancy is terminated and possession surrendered; and the tenancy may be terminated in any of the ways noticed in the said judgment, that is to say, where it has been determined either by having run its prescribed course or by act of parties as for instance, by reason of notice to quit served, or forfeiture, or by an act of law, that is to say, the tenant is dispossessed by a person claiming and having a title paramount. The cases cited by Mr. Mukherji for respondent, namely, 16 W R 186 (2) and 20 W R 352 (3), do not support him. The case in 20 W R 352 (3) is same as the case in 16 W R 186 (2), at a later stage. In those two cases the defendant had executed a kabuliat in favour of one Mt. Anusul Burkut who granted a Patni to the plaintiff, and on the basis of this Patni the plaintiff claimed sixteen anna rent from the defendant. The defence was that Mt. Anusul was the benamidar of her husband Golam Hossain and that on the death of the husband Golam Hossein, Anusul inherited one anna share only, the other shares being inherited by her co-widow and other heirs of Golam Hossein. The lower Courts held that the defendant was bound by the kabuliat and could not challenge the title of Mt. Anusul and urge that she was a Benamidar of her husband. There was no allegation in that case that Mt. Anusul had inducted the defendant on the land. All that is laid down in that case is that in India, the English doctrine of estoppel by deed ought not to be applied. This position is made clear in the judgment of Paul, J.; the passage is to be found at p. 189 of 16 W R 186 (2), and is made clearer by Phear, J., when the case came up again before the High Court. The judgment is reported in 20 W R 352 (3). I shall quote a relevant passage from Paul, J.'s judgment and which is as follows :

The question was a simple question to try upon the evidence, but instead of doing so, the Judge disposed of the substantial case put forward by the defendant by adjudicating in the plaintiff's favour upon the question of estoppel raised by him, and applying the technical doctrine of estoppel obtaining under the English law; the Judge considered that he could not look behind the kabuliat which was admitted by the defendant, inasmuch as a tenant could not deny his landlord's title. My learned colleague has pointed how this mode of treatment amounts to a begging of the whole question, I do not propose to discuss here the doctrine of estoppel, but as this subject is so often used in arguments and in grounds of appeal before this Court, I wish to make a few remarks with reference to it. In England where the usage denoted by benami transaction is wholly unknown, it is supposed and therefore assumed that all deeds and conveyances truly represent the title of parties set forth in them. Deeds are called solemn instruments. They are executed after considerable deliberation and under the guidance and with the advice of able legal advisers. In England, and in fact wherever the English law prevails and English institutions exist, it is right to suppose that what is stated in deeds and other similar documents represents the true state of things, and consequently parties should not be allowed afterwards to question the truth of what has been deliberately stated. But in this country it being well known that documents are neither so drawn nor executed as in England, and it being equally well known that persons make statements wholly regardless of the truth for present and ulterior purposes, it would be unsafe and unjust to hold parties strictly to statements made by them in deeds and other documents and to apply the technical doctrine of estoppel in the manner in which that doctrine is applied in cases governed by English law.

This passage to my mind makes it clear that the learned Judges of this Court in the case of 16 W R 186 (2), were only considering the application of the English doctrine of estoppel by deed to this country and all they laid down is that having regard to the dissimilarity of conditions prevailing in India, the English doctrine of estoppel by deed ought not to be extended to India. The learned Judges remitted the case to the lower appellate Court for decision on its merits, viz., whether Mt. Anusul Burkut was the benamidar of her husband, and if she was what was the extent of her share. In case she was a benamidar, the plaintiff by his Putni Potta would only get the share of rent which Anusul inherited from her husband who was dead at the time of the suit. On remand the learned District Judge recorded a finding that Mt. Anusul was the benamidar of her husband and her share was one anna because she had a co-widow. The matter again came on appeal before this Court. The point that was considered in this case was whether Mt. Anusul Burkut was the benamidar of her husband and what was her share. The last question depended on the question as to who were the other heirs. In their judgment their Lordships said that the appeal was argued as a regular appeal. At p. 353 of 20 W R 352 (3), Phear, J., said :

The case then came up to the High Court by way of special appeal, and it was there held that the trial in the lower appellate Court had been incomplete and unsatisfactory. Paul, J., pointed out very clearly that the English doctrine of estoppel had been imperfectly apprehended in the Courts below, and altogether wrongly applied. If it had been admitted or proved that the defendant was let into possession of the leased property by Anusul Burkut, then, probably in this country, as well as in England, the principle would come into play that a man shall not, during his possession of premises leased to him, be allowed to dispute the title of the person who put him into possession. No doubt in this case the kabuliat, as being a document signed by the defendant, furnishes strong evidence against him of any material facts stated in it. But it is we think almost impossible, and certainly it would be very inequitable, that there should be anything in this country of the nature of the old English doctrine of estoppel by deed.

I have italicised the relevant passages in this judgment. The learned Judges who had to deal with the same case at a second stage explained the judgment of Boyley, and Paul, JJ., in 16 W R 186 (2). As I have pointed out above, the cases since then have uniformly laid down that the doctrine of estoppel operates where the tenant has been let into possession by the person whose title the tenant questions. In the two cases of the Madras High Court, which have been referred to me, it has been held that S. 116, Evidence Act, prevents a tenant to question the title of the real owner, but does not prevent him from raising the question when the person who had inducted him on the land is the benamidar of the other. I do not quite follow this decision. If A puts B into possession, it is well settled that B cannot question the title of A. If B is allowed to plead and prove that A is a benamidar, then B is allowed to question the title of A, because after all a benamidar, represents the shell and not the substance of ownership. If B says that A is a benamidar, he says that A has no beneficial interest in the property. For this reason, I do not feel impressed with the judgments of the Madras High Court. I do hold that the doctrine of estoppel operates in such a case also. It also prevents the tenant from urging that the man who has let him into possession is a benamidar.

In this view of the matter, I do hold that the learned Judge was not right in making an order which he made without determining the question on the evidence on the record as to whether defendant 1 had been inducted upon the land by the plaintiff. There is a recital in the kabuliat, and there is other evidence on the record. Those pieces of evidence must be considered by the learned District

Judge and he must come to a finding that the defendant 1 had been let into possession by the plaintiff he would not allow the defendant to challenge the title of the plaintiff and prove that he is the benamidar of Sarada and Jotindra. If he comes to the conclusion that the defendant had not been let into possession by the plaintiff, it will be open to defendant 1 to raise the question of benami, and in that case the two issues framed by the learned District Judge for the decision by the learned Munsif will have to be gone into by the learned Munsif, on the evidence on the record as well as on the evidence which the parties may choose to adduce. In any event, whatever may be the finding of the learned District Judge on the aforesaid point the further defence of defendant 1 that he had made payments to an authorized Gomosta of the plaintiff must be gone into.

I accordingly set aside the order of the learned District Judge and remand the case to him in order that the appeal before him may be disposed of in the light of the observations which I made above. The costs of this appeal will abide the result, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Judgment.—The plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed by the learned Additional District Judge of 24 Parganas on the ground that the Munsiff of Baraset, in whose Court it was instituted had no territorial jurisdiction to entertain it, has preferred this appeal. Her claim is for prompt dower money from her husband. The plaint, as originally filed on 24th August 1931, gave the place of residence of the defendant as Bishanpura in the district of Balia. By an amendment dated 1st December 1931, the defendant's present place of residence was stated to be Shibpur in the district of Howrah. After reciting her claim, in para. 3 of the plaint, as originally filed, the plaintiff stated that she was residing in Bijpore within the jurisdiction of the Baraset Court, and it is on this fact alone she stated that that Court had jurisdiction to entertain her suit. By an amendment allowed by the Court certain additions were made in para. 3 of the plaint. The substance of these additions is that the defendant came to Bijpore where the plaintiff was residing with her father, and on a demand being made for the prompt dower the defendant promised at Bijpore to pay up shortly, but he thereafter failed to keep his promise even after repeated demands. The plaintiff accordingly has stated in her plaint, as finally amended, that the Baraset Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit as the plaintiff resides within the jurisdiction and also because of the said promise by the defendant. Both the Courts below have held that the plaintiff's story that the defendant went to Bijpore and made a promise there to pay up is false. This finding is binding on me in second appeal and accordingly one of the grounds on which the plaintiff attempted to give jurisdiction to the Baraset Court can no longer be invoked by her.

There remains the other ground, namely whether the Baraset Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit on the ground that the plaintiff is residing permanently within its jurisdiction. Mr. Akram has urged before me that he comes under S. 20, Cl. (c), Civil P. C., as a part of the cause of action must be taken to have arisen at Bijpore, as that place must be taken as the place of performance that is, the money due to the plaintiff ought to have been paid there. There cannot be any doubt that a suit on a contract can be instituted in the Court which has territorial jurisdiction over the place where the contract has to be performed. This is accepted law in India since the decision of Holloway, J. in 3 Mad H C R 384 (1), where the said learned Judge after going into the matter in great detail made the following observations :

The place at which the obligation is to be performed is its seat and the place of jurisdiction.

The matter was also examined exhaustively by Markby, J., from the jurist's point of view in 22 W R 79 (2), who also came to the same conclusion. Mr. Akram's next contention is that the place of performance must be taken to be Bijpore, the place where the plaintiff is residing, on the principle that when the creditor is residing in the realm the debtor must follow the creditor and pay him, unless there is a different contract between them. For supporting his argument he has cited two cases only, namely, 48 All 310 (3) and 54 I A 265 (4). This argument has to be considered carefully. The facts established are the following: (i) the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant was celebrated at Bishanpura in the district of Balia, in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh; (ii) that the dower, whatever its amount may be was settled at the time and place of marriage; (iii) that the defendant is at present residing within the jurisdiction of the Howrah Court; (iv) that there was no express promise to pay the prompt dower at Bishanpura or at any other place, nor can a promise to pay at a particular place be inferred from the circumstances and (v) that the plaintiff at the date of the suit was residing at Bijpore which is within the jurisdiction of the Baraset Court. There cannot be any doubt according to the principles of English law that under these circumstances the obligation of the debtor is to seek out the creditor and pay him, that is to say, the place of residence of the plaintiff is to be taken as the place of performance. In the case of "The Elder" Bowen, L. J., observed thus :

The general rule is that where no place of payment is specified either expressly, or by implication, the debtor must seek his creditor. In 8 Ex 689 (5), it was held that a covenant for payment of rent when no particular place of payment is mentioned is analogous to a covenant to pay a sum of money in gross on a day certain, in which case it is incumbent upon the covenantor to seek out the person to be paid and pay or tender him the money. In the judgment, in that case, the conclusion to the same effect, arrived at, on the authorities, by Parke, B., in 2 M & W 223 (6), is relied upon. Most of the cases are collected in 13 C B N S 286 (7), which is very instructive on the subject.

The only limitation to this principle of English law is that the creditor must reside within the realm. 53 I A 58 (8). The question is whether this principle is applicable in India. So far as I am aware the Courts of this country from early times have considered the said principle to be so applicable and there are decisions or observations of Judges of nearly all the High Courts. Bihari, J., recognised the applicability of the said rule in Bengal: 22 W R 79 (2) at 85. Tyabji, J., recognised its applicability in Bombay: 30 Bom 167 (9) at pp. 170-171. Mukerji, J., applied it in 48 All 310 (3). White, C. J. and Miller, J., would have applied it in Madras, but for Cl. (3) of Explan. III to S. 16, Civil P. C. of 1882. That explanation reads as follows :

In suits arising out of contract the cause of action arises within the meaning of the section at any of the following places, namely: (i) the place where the contract is made; (ii) the place where the contract was to be performed, or the performance thereof completed; (iii) the place, where, in performance of the contract any money to which the suit relates was expressly or impliedly payable.

It was held in that case that Cl. (3) of the explanation meant that the money was payable according to the terms of the contract, which are expressed or can be inferred on a construction of the language or from the circumstances, and the presumption of law that the payment is to be made at the creditor's residence on which the cases proceed, in the absence of a contract, cannot be invoked. Explan. 3 has, however, been omitted from the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. The observations of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. in a later case which came up in Bombay, however, tend to show that S. 49, Contract Act is exhaustive and has modified the aforesaid rule of English Common Law: 7 Bom L R 993 (10). In 54 I A 265 (4), Lord Sumner, however, threw great doubts on the observations of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. and pointed out that in the case, where there is no place of performance fixed by agreement, and the debtor does not apply to the creditor to fix a reasonable place for performance, there would be no place for performance at all and the debtor would be enabled to better his position by himself being in default, that is by omitting to apply to the creditor for fixing the place of performance, where if he had so applied the reasonable certainty is that the place of performance would have been fixed at the creditor's place of residence. Lord Sumner finally said at p. 271 of the report that :

In this state of the authorities (he noticed Tyabji, J.'s judgment in 30 Bom 167 (9)) it is not possible to accede to the present contention that S. 49, Contract Act, gets rid of inferences, that should justly be drawn from the terms of the contract itself and the necessities of the case, involving in the obligation to pay the creditor the further obligation of finding the creditor so as to pay him.

As I understand, the judgment of Lord Sumner has disapproved of the observations of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in 7 Bom L R 993 (10) and has approved of Tyabji J.'s observations at pp. 170-171 in 30 Bom 167 (9). Lord Sumner's judgment was considered by the Bombay High Court in the case of 57 Bom 306 (11) where Rangnekar, J., has put the same interpretation on it as I am putting upon it. In my judgment the point I have to consider has been settled by the judgment pronounced in 54 I A 265 (4) and I am bound to give effect to Mr. Akram's contention. I hold that the Baraset Court has jurisdiction to entertain the plaintiff's suit. The learned Munsiff considered the merits of the plaintiff's case and had held that her claim for prompt dower had been satisfied before the institution of the suit, but the lower appellate Court has not considered it. For that purpose there must be a remand. The appeal is accordingly allowed, the decree of the lower appellate Court is hereby set aside and the case remanded to that Court for a decision on the merits. As the plaintiff has succeeded on the point of jurisdiction which was the only point fought out here and in the lower appellate Court, she must have her costs of the lower appellate Court (except pleader's fees) as also costs of this Court. Further costs to abide the final result of the suit. The prayer for leave to appeal under S. 15, Letters Patent, is refused.

Landlord and Tenant—Tenancy—Nature of—Tenancy for residential purposes—Origin of tenancy unknown—In absence of series of transfers and their recognition by landlord Court should not infer that tenancy was in its origin of permanent character.

In a suit by the landlords for a declaration that the defendants were ticca tenants, the only things which were proved by the tenants and in respect of which there was no explanation on the part of the landlords were that the tenancy was for residential purposes, that its origin was unknown, that the rent had not been varied at any time, and that there had been one or possibly two transfers:

Held: that these circumstances did not lead to the inference that the tenancy was in its origin of a permanent character. [P 101 C 2]

Judgment.—In this case the defendants-appellants are admittedly the tenants of the plaintiffs-respondents in respect of a plot of land in the town of Faridpore. The defendants attempted to raise pucca buildings on the lands in suit whereupon the plaintiffs instituted the suit on 16th January 1931 for a declaration that the defendants were ticca tenants on the lands, they had no right to construct pucca buildings and for an injunction to restrain them from continuing the building operations and for a mandatory injunction for removal of the structures already raised before the suit. The substantial defence of the defendants was that the tenancy was a permanent one. In the Court of first instance they succeeded and the learned Munsif held that the tenancy was a permanent one. He accordingly made a decree in part, making a declaration in the plaintiffs' favour that they had title to the suit lands but inasmuch as he found that the tenancy was a permanent one the prayer for mandatory and perpetual injunction was disallowed. The plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge of Faridpore which was heard by the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, of that place.

The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the evidence led by the defendants is not sufficient to support the claim to a permanent tenancy. It is admitted that the land had been let out for residential purposes before the Transfer of Property Act came into force and that its origin is unknown. It has been proved that on one occasion it passed by succession and that it was twice sold and the transferees were recognized as tenants. There are no pucca old structures on the land except that there are two privies with pucca plinths and there is a tank in existence. It may also be taken to be established that the rent has remained unvaried, namely Rs. 5 a month, and that the land values have risen in the town of Faridpore and are still rising, the evidence being that the land values having gone high some time in the year 1910. These are the facts which have been proved by the defendants; on the part of the landlords these facts have been proved, namely that in the deeds of transfer—one has been proved only in the case—there is no assertion by the transferor that his tenancy was a permanent one; secondly that although the land values in the town of Faridpore have gone up since the year 1910 there was a large body of co-sharer landlords amongst whom there was no agreement whatsoever, so much so, that even rent was not realized since the year 1901, that only in the year 1913 or so, as a result of a partition and other transactions, the number of co-sharers was reduced, and since the year 1913 when the co-sharers were reasonable in number the claim to a permanency by the defendant's ancestor and by the defendants had all along been resisted. It has not been proved also that the tank was excavated by the tenants. This evidence adduced on behalf of the landlords has been accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge, that is to say the learned Subordinate Judge has given an adequate explanation relating to their inaction in raising the rent up to the year 1913. They have also proved that whenever attempts were made by the defendants or their predecessors since the year 1913 to claim a permanent right in the land those attempts had been resisted and their claim denied.

The evidence led by the landlords as to the effect of the recognition of one of the transferees also, in my judgment, affords a sufficient explanation because when there was no assertion in the sale-deed by the transferor to a permanent right in the land a recognition of the transferee under those circumstances would not be of much evidentiary value for the purpose of supporting a claim to permanency. I still go further and hold that unless there be a series of transfers of a tenancy for residential purposes of which the origin is unknown and a series of recognitions, the Court would not be right in inferring that the tenancy was in its origin of a permanent character. If there be one transfer or one or two transfers only and a recognition by the landlords of the transferee that fact may be attributable to other circumstances than to the fact that the landlord recognized the transferee feeling that he was under the obligation to recognise him on the footing that the tenancy was a permanent tenancy. There would be far little scope for drawing an inference in favour of the tenants where there are only one or two transfers only and where in the deeds of transfer no assertion is made by the tenant that his tenancy is of a permanent nature. Having regard to this evidence the only things which have been proved by the tenants and in respect of which there is no explanation on behalf of the landlords are these: (1) that the tenancy was for residential purposes; (2) that its origin is unknown; (3) that the rent has not been varied at any time; and (4) that there have been one or possibly two transfers. These circumstances in my judgment do not lead to the inference that the tenancy was in its origin of a permanent character. For these reasons, I uphold the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the defendants have failed to prove that their tenancy is of a permanent nature. That being so, I hold that the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge in this case is the correct decree and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. The application for leave to appeal is rejected.

Narain Chandra Biswas and others—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Appeals Nos. 424 and 425 of 1935, Decided on 11th December 1935.

(a) Criminal Trial—Confession—Confessional and exculpatory statements should be taken into consideration along with other evidence.

The confessional statements and exculpatory statements of accused have to be taken into consideration along with the other evidence in the case. [P 103 C 2]

(b) Criminal Trial—Appeal—New plea—Contention that certain statements are inadmissible by reason of their being not statements as contemplated by S. 164, Criminal P. C., raised for first time before High Court will not be entertained.

The High Court will not give effect to a contention that certain statements by the accused are not admissible in evidence by reason of their not being statements as contemplated by S. 164, Criminal P. C., when such contention is raised for the first time before it. [P 103 C 2]

(c) Criminal Trial—Conspiracy—Accomplice—Conspiracy having for its object subversion of British rule in India by armed revolt—Persons, merely having knowledge of crime and merely acting as tools of leaders of conspiracy but not taking part in perpetration of crime should not be regarded as accomplices—Court should ascertain what credit is to be attached to such witnesses — Rule applicable to accomplices should not be applied to their case.

For establishing a charge of conspiracy having for its object the subversion of British rule in India by armed revolt, evidence has to be taken of persons who may have knowledge of secret organisations but who have not taken part in the perpetration of a crime, persons to whom overt acts can be attributed. It would not be right to regard a person who is cognisant of a crime or who has made no attempt to prevent it or who did not disclose its commission as an accomplice and to apply to his case the same rule as applies to accomplices. The function of the Court is to ascertain what is the degree of credit to be attached to the evidence coming from witness of the above description, regard being had to all the circumstances and facts of the case and not to class such witnesses as accomplices or practically accomplices.

Evidence of witnesses who are aware of the conspiracy and of the objects of the same, and who were merely tools in the hands of the leaders of the conspiracy for certain time, and had nothing to do with the control and possession of firearms, the main charge against the accused person, should not be viewed with absolute suspicion.

(d) Criminal Trial—Accomplice—Witness not concerned with crime—His participation, limited to knowledge that crime is to be committed—He cannot be regarded accomplice—Person to be accomplice must participate in crime committed by accused.

Where a witness is not concerned with the commission of the crime for which the accused is charged, he cannot be said to be an accomplice in the crime; as it is well settled that all accessories before the fact, if they participate in the preparation for the crime are accomplices, but if their participation is limited to the knowledge that crime is to be committed, they are not accomplices. Whether a person is or is not an accomplice therefore depends upon the facts in each particular case considered in connexion with the nature of the crime; and persons to be accomplices must participate in the commission of the same crime as the accused persons in a trial are charged. All persons coming technically within the category of accomplices cannot be treated as on precisely the same footing.

S. K. Bose, Manmatha Nath Das, Priyanath Bhattacharji and Sudhangsu Bh. Sen—for Appellants.

Khundkar and Nirmal Kumar Das Gupta—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellants, seven in number, were tried by a special Magistrate at Rangpur, appointed by the Local Government, under S. 24, Bengal Act 12 of 1932, for commission of offences under the Indian Arms Act, and under S. 120-B, I. P. C., and on conviction, sentenced to various terms of rigorous imprisonment. All the appellants were charged with offences of the following description. That they between June 1933, and December 1934 at Gaibandha agreed with one another and with others, to have in their possession or under their control revolvers, pistols and guns in contravention of S. 14 and S. 15, Arms Act, and thereby committed offence punishable under S. 19 (f), S. 19-A, Arms Act, read with S. 120-B, I. P. C. The appellants Nagendra Mohan Mustafi and Paresh Chandra Choudhury were charged separately for possession and control of a revolver, Ex. 11 in the case, in a manner indicating an intention that such control and possession might not be known to any public servant, and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 20, Arms Act. Nagendra Mohan Mustafi and Paresh Chandra Choudhury were each of them sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 7 years under S. 120-B, I. P. C., read with S. 19 (f), S. 19-A, Arms Act, and 5 years' rigorous imprisonment under S. 20, Arms Act, the sentences running concurrently. Jogesh Chandra Das was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 7 years under S. 120-B, I. P. C. read with S. 19 (f), S. 19-A Arms Act. Narain Chandra Biswas and Satyendra Nath Chaki were sentenced to 6 years rigorous imprisonment each under S. 120-B Penal Code read with S. 19 (f), S. 19-A, Arms Act. Bejoy Kumar Nandi and Binoy Kumar Tarafdar were each of them sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 5 years, under S. 120-B I. P. C., read with S. 19 (f), S. 19-A, Arms Act.

The case against the accused persons placed on their trial was that they belonged to the Yugantar Party—a revolutionary organisation having for its object the subversion of British rule in India by armed revolt, that they along with others conspired to procure arms like revolvers, pistols and guns, that they used to meet at places to settle their line of action. The case for the prosecution was that in order to purchase arms, money used to be raised by thefts and subscriptions by members of the party; and evidence was led to establish that members were advised to steal ornaments from their own houses; that these ornaments when melted the sale-proceeds of the gold were used for purchase of revolutionary literature and revolvers. Evidence of overt acts was given to establish how Nagendra Mohan Mustafi purchased books in Calcutta and sent them to Gaibandha; it was also sought to be proved by evidence, that Nagen had possession and control of the revolver (Ex. 2); he made it over to Paresh; it was then kept in a vacant house. There was also evidence led by the prosecution to show that Jogesh and Benoy went to Naogaon with a revolver and a pistol (Exs. 3 and 4) and that Durga Burman was sent to Naogaon to bring back the revolver and the pistol (Exs. 3 and 4) from one Probhas Pramanik; the revolver and the pistol were brought to Gaibandha according to arrangement made. The evidence for the prosecution sought to connect all or some or any of the individual accused with the acts of the conspirators mentioned above, the object of the conspiracy being, as mentioned already, the overthrow of the British rule in India by armed revolution.

The evidence in the case consisted of : (1) the evidence of witnesses mentioned in the judgment of the Magistrate, as "accomplice witnesses" or witnesses in the position of accomplices. (2) The evidence afforded by what has been described by the Magistrate as confessions of three of the accused persons, Nagen, Jogesh and Paresh, which were retracted and the other two statements of Satyendra and Benoy self-exculpatory in nature. (3) The evidence of independent witnesses. All this evidence related to the association of all or some of the accused persons at four secret meetings, their agreement to collect money by thefts or otherwise, purchase of revolutionary literature, and for acquisition of arms. The confessional statements recorded by a Magistrate under S. 164, Criminal P. C., though retracted, support the conviction of the accused persons who made them. As to their voluntariness there is no manner of doubt; and taken along with the other evidence in the case, they establish the guilt of the accused persons. The self-exculpatory statements made by Satyendra and Benoy lend support to the evidence for the prosecution, so far as they go, against the accused persons other than those two who made those statements to save themselves. The three confessional statements by Nagen, Jogesh and Paresh, contain some discrepancy and divergency; but there is ample evidence to support one or other of the accounts given in detail by the confessing accused. The confessional statements as also the exculpatory statements have to be taken into consideration along with the other evidence in the case; and, in our opinion, they lend support to the other evidence in the case. The case before us is not one in which a confession by an accused person is evidence in the case independent of other evidence; the confessional statements are only pieces of evidence which, taken along with other evidence, support the case for the prosecution; and we have considered the statements under S. 164, Criminal P. C., confessional or exculpatory in nature, from that standpoint. It was contended before us that the confessional statements were not admissible in evidence at all.

The grounds taken in the petition of appeal to this Court were that the confessional statements were not admissible in evidence inasmuch as they were not voluntary and not recorded according to law. These grounds are wholly unsustainable, as we have, on the materials before us, no doubt about their voluntariness and as to their having been recorded in the manner prescribed by law. It was urged before us however that the statements as recorded were not such as could be held to be admissible in evidence having been recorded under S. 164, Criminal P. C. Although great stress was laid on this point no materials were brought to our notice on which it could possibly be held that the statements in question were not recorded in the course of an investigation under Ch. 14 of the Code; and we are unable to give effect to the contention sought to be raised before us for the first time, relating to the inadmissibility of the same in evidence for the reason that they were not statements as contemplated by S. 164, Criminal P. C. In our judgment no question could arise as to their admissibility in evidence, and they were rightly taken into consideration by the Court below, along with the other evidence in the case. The confessional statements support the case for the prosecution, as to existence of conspiracy as to overt acts of the members of the conspiracy, of the possession of fire arms for the purpose of attainment of the aims and objects of the conspiracy. The confessional statements made by Nagen, Jogesh and Paresh support the conviction of the persons who made them; they support, in spite of some divergencies as between the different confessions, the other evidence led by the prosecution for establishing the offence charged against all the persons placed on their trial. The statements of Satyendra and Benoy, it may be noticed here, though exculpatory in nature, lend support to the case against the accused.

The next class of evidence in the case comes from a large number of witnesses who have been mentioned in the judgment of the Magistrate as accomplices or persons in the position of accomplices. At the outset it may be stated that for establishing a charge of conspiracy of the nature we are concerned with in the case before us, evidence has to be taken into consideration of persons who may have knowledge of secret organizations, but who have not taken part in the perpetration of a crime, persons to whom no overt acts, so far as the main charge was concerned, could be attributed. As it has been said, it would not be right to regard a person who happens to be cognisant of a crime, or who has made no attempt to prevent it, or who did not disclose its commission as accomplice, and to apply to his case the same rule as applies to evidence of accomplices. Most of the witnesses who have been classed as accomplices by the Magistrate in this case were connected with the offence charged against the accused in this way only, that some of them read books which the accused were circulating in furtherance of their object; the witnesses were for a time in sympathy with the idea of revolutionary activities; but no overt acts could be attributed to them generally so far as possession of firearms, which was the main charge in the case, excepting this, that some of them contributed to the fund raised for purchase of firearms and revolutionary literature. In a case of the present description therefore the function of the Court was to ascertain what was the degree of credit to be attached to the evidence coming from witnesses of the above description, regard being had to all the facts and circumstances of the case, and not to class witnesses as accomplices or practically accomplices, as it is sometimes done: see 38 C W N 777 (1).

It may further be noticed that where a witness is not concerned with the commission of the crime for which the accused is charged, he cannot be said to be an accomplice in the crime, as it is well settled that all accessories before the fact, if they participate in the preparation for the crime are accomplices, but if their participation is limited to the knowledge that crime is to be committed, they are not accomplices. Whether therefore a person is or is not an accomplice depends upon the facts in each particular case considered in connexion with the nature of the crime; and persons to be accomplices must participate in the commission of the same crime as the accused persons in a trial are charged. All persons coming technically within the category of accomplices cannot also be treated as on precisely the same footing. In the light of the above rules which are well settled, and on careful consideration of the evidence of witnesses described in the case before us by the trying Magistrate as accomplices, we are not in a position to hold that they were accomplices whose evidence required corroboration on all material particulars from what is called independent evidence. In our judgment the evidence of witnesses who were aware of the conspiracy, and of the objects of the same, and who were merely tools in the hands of the leaders of the conspiracy for a certain time, and had nothing to do with the control and possession of firearms, the main charge against the accused persons, cannot be viewed with such suspicion as has been suggested. The evidence given by these witnesses contain in some instances improbabilities in some matters of detail, and discrepancies also; but all the same that evidence appears to us, on a close examination, to be reliable on the whole, and cannot be discarded for any valid reason. The evidence coming from at least 15 witnesses, who have been described as accomplices, prove the existence of a conspiracy, prove the holding of meetings by the members of the conspiracy for furtherance of their aims and objects, and establish the position that there were overt acts done by the individual members of the conspiracy, which included thefts for the purpose of collection of funds for the purchase of revolutionary literature and firearms.

In addition to the evidence of witnesses described as accomplices or more or less accomplices, there is the evidence of witnesses mentioned as independent witnesses—examined on the side of the prosecution to corroborate the evidence of the former. The evidence coming from these witnesses appears to us to be wholly trustworthy and reliable, and that evidence establishes facts and circumstances which support the main body of evidence coming from witnesses who cannot, in our judgment, as indicated already, be placed in the category of accomplices so far as the offences charged against the accused persons were concerned, for the reasons stated. The evidence before the Court, as it stands, coming from the different classes of witnesses—witnesses who were aware of the conspiracy of which the accused were members, and who could only be said to have participated in some of the acts of the conspirators up to a certain point of time only, and who on that account could not be held to be at a disadvantage so far as reliability and competency as witnesses to prove the existence of the conspiracy, the aims and objects of the members of the conspiracy and the overt acts so far as those members were concerned, including the control of possession of firearms which was the subject of the charges against the accused persons—the evidence on the record, which we have examined for ourselves, taken as a whole, establish the existence of a revolutionary organization having its object the subversion of the British Rule by armed revolution.

The association of the seven accused persons with others as members of a criminal conspiracy for the purpose of spreading revolutionary ideas, the raising of funds by any means possible—by subscription among members, and by thefts etc., for purchase of revolutionary literature and firearms, the holding of meetings by members of the conspiracy at different times for spreading and advancing the aims and objects of the conspiracy, and for deciding upon overt acts of the conspiracy, the control and possession of the revolver Ex. 2 in the case, by members of the conspiracy generally, and by the accused persons individually, the possession of the revolver and pistol Exs. 3 and 4 and of the sending of these firearms to Naogaon and of the bringing back of those firearms to Gaibanda—the above are the main heads on which evidence was directed in the case before us.

That evidence has been carefully examined by the trying Magistrate; and on an examination of the same, we are unable to take any view different from those indicated by the Magistrate in his exhaustive judgment. In points of evidence relating to matters of detail, there are at places some inconsistency or discrepancy. In the case of throwing away of some books connected with the criminal conspiracy of which the accused were members, there is some apparent improbability. We are not however inclined to think that any of these inconsistencies, discrepancies or improbabilities, in minor matters of detail, affect the main case for the prosecution, which has been amply proved by reliable evidence. The cases against the individual accused persons have been dealt with by the Magistrate; and we do not think that anything could be usefully added to what has been stated by the Magistrate in his judgment. Nagen, Jogesh and Paresh were mainly concerned in the control and possession of firearms Exs. 2, 3 and 4 in the case. Benoy Tarafdar's connexion with the possession of the firearms Exs. 2, 3 and 4 has also been proved; he and Jogesh went to Naogaon with the revolver and the pistol Exs. 3 and 4. Narain Biswas's association with the ringleaders was clearly established so far as possession of firearms was concerned.

The complicity of the two accused persons, Satyendra Nath Chaki and Bijoy Kumar Nandy, has also been established so far as the offences charged against them were concerned; but it appears that they played minor parts as members of the criminal conspiracy to possess firearms for revolutionary purposes. In the case of Satyendra, the Magistrate has come to the conclusion that he was apparently in the conspiracy, and nothing more. The finding on evidence in the case of the other accused, Bejoy on evidence, is that he agreed with Nagen, Paresh, Jogesh and Satyen and others to possess revolvers, etc., in contravention of Ss. 14 and 15, Arms Act. On the evidence as it stands it appears to us that nothing more than that could be found against these two persons. In our judgment, the sentences passed on Satyendra Chaki and Bejoy Kumar Nandy should be reduced to rigorous imprisonment for four years in the case of each of them, their convictions being upheld. With the above modification of the sentences passed on the appellants Satyendra Chaki and Bejoy Kumar Nandy, the appeals are dismissed.

Appeal No. 83 of 1931, Decided on 27th November 1935, from original decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Krishnagar, D/- 21st January 1931.

(a) Hindu Law — Widow— Surrender—No deed necessary.

Surrender under Hindu law does not require a deed. [P 109 C 1]

(b) Hindu Law — Religious endowment—Shebait—Property held in common by persons in capacity of shebait—Rule regarding exclusive possession of co-sharer in joint properties applies.

The rule with regard to exclusive possession of a co-sharer in joint properties, to the exclusion of other co-sharers also applies to property which is held in common by persons in their capacity as shebait. [P 109 C 2]

(c) Adverse Possession—Co-sharer—Possession of co-sharer is not adverse unless there is ouster or assertion of hostile title.

Possession can never be considered adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title. In order to succeed on the ground of ouster the person setting up ouster is bound to show that he did set up an adverse or independent title during the period which was beyond the statutory period of 12 years. [P 109 C 2]

There can be no adverse possession by one co-sharer as against others until there is an ouster or exclusion; and the possession of a co-sharer becomes adverse to the other co-sharer from the moment there is ouster, i. e., after there is an assertion of hostile title by one co-sharer against the others and to the knowledge of the latter: Corea v. Appuhamy, (1912) A C 230; Muttunayagam v. Brito, (1918) A C 895; 1931 P C 48; 1934 Cal 644 and 1918 P C 1, Rel. on. [P 110 C 1]

(d) Adverse Possession—Co-sharer—Ouster—Mere non-payment of rents and profits for long time, does not give rise to inference of ouster—There must be indication that taking of profits amounts to denial of right of other co-sharers—Obiter.

Obiter.—Mere non-participation of rents and profits of joint property by a co-sharer for a very long period would not be sufficient to give rise to the inference of ouster. When along with non-participation of rents and profits for a considerable length of time other circumstances concur, an inference of exclusion or adverse possession under hostile title might be drawn. [P 110 C 2; P 111 C 1]

The Court must be satisfied that the taking of the profits is an indication of the denial of rights in the other co-sharers to receive them. Mere long and uninterrupted possession without more, by a co-sharer is not sufficient to constitute adverse possession: 29 Bom 300 and Culley v. Doed Taylerson (1840) A and E 1008, Ref; 1919 P C 44, Expl. [P 111 C 1]

Bireswar Bagchi and Surajit Chandra Lahiri—for Respondents.

D. N. Mitter, J.—The history of this litigation which has culminated in this appeal carries us back to the year 1242 B. S., corresponding to 1835. The suit is for a declaration of title and for recovery of possession of some six rooms as part of 12 temples of God Shiva in Navadwip. The case made in the plaint which is pretty long is that the ancestor of some of the plaintiffs, one Gurudas, was the possessor of 16 annas share of the land on which these 12 temples are built in succession to their predecessor, in their own right, and in the right acquired by adverse possession against others for long over 12 years, as shebait of Sri Sri Iswar Dwadasha Shiva Thakurs and as heirs of their ancestors. After setting forth in their plaint the numerous events that happened including devolution of rights and interests on the death of the different members of the family who are named in the genealogical tree to which we will presently refer, the plaintiffs alleged that they have been dispossessed, as a result of certain proceedings under S. 103, Ben. Ten. Act, from these six rooms by the defendants. The relationship between the parties to the suit are shown in the genealogical tree which is appended below (See next page).

It appears from the said tree that the plaintiffs and the defendants to the present suit derived their descent from their common ancestor, one Asananda Das. Both in the Court below and before us the accuracy of the genealogical tree both in respect of the several descendants of Asananda as also in respect of the dates of the death of the numerous members of the family, have been admitted. It appears from the said tree that Asananda died leaving behind him four sons, Ram Prosad Das, Har Chandra Das, Iswar Chandra Das and Deb Chandra Das. Ram Prosad died in 1808 leaving behind him his only son Guru Das who was the ancestor of plaintiffs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7. Hara Chandra Das, the second son of Asananda died in 1828 leaving behind him two sons Madhusudhan and Biswambhar. Biswambhar died childless and Madhusudhan left behind a son Raj Krishna. Raj Krishna had four sons whose names occur in the tree as Haritosh, Hari Bhusan, Hariballav and Harimoy, plaintiffs 8 to 11. Iswar, the third son of Asananda died in 1818 leaving behind him a widow Drabamoyee and a son. Satkowri died unmarried in 1822 leaving behind him his mother Drabamoyee who died in 1877. Deb Chandra Das the youngest son of Asananda, died in 1832 leaving behind him his two widows Nrityamoyee who died in 1848 and Pearimoni who died in 1849. Deb Chandra Das had a son Biresswar through his wife Pearimoni who was born blind and Biresswar died in 1861, leaving behind him his son Krishna Chandra who is the father of defendants 1 and 2 and the father-in-law of defendants 3 and 4.

It is necessary here to recount a certain circumstance which would show that defendants 1 and 2 did not inherit the 4 annas share of Deb Chandra Das because Biresswar was born blind and the 4 annas share of Deb Chandra did not therefore descend to Biresswar. There was a litigation between Biresswar and Guru Das and as a result of the Full Bench decision of this Court which is reported in 2 Beng L R 103 (1), it was held that Guru Das did succeed to the 4 annas share of Deb Chandra Das's estate. The next event of importance to which reference need be made is with reference to the 4 annas share of Iswar Chandra Das which after his death devolved on his son Satkowri and after Satkowri's death in 1882 devolved on his mother Drabamoyee and continued in Drabamoyee till the time of her death in 1877. The case made in the plaint is that Guru Das erected these 12 temples so far back as in the year 1242 on joint lands. He dedicated these temples to god Shiva. The inscription on the tablet was in his name and he possessed these debuttar properties exclusively in his own right and as a cosharer being excluded from any interest in the debuttar properties. Question has arisen whether this was a dedication of the completest kind or it was merely an incomplete debuttar in the sense that it was a secular property charged with ancestral worship. The Subordinate Judge has taken the latter view, viz., that it was an incomplete debuttar. According to him it was a nominal debuttar being really secular property charged with ancestral worship. We will have to say something on this later. To continue the history as given by the plaintiffs it was stated that Guru Das excluded all other cosharers from the very beginning. But later it was admitted that Raj Krishna was taken in Guru Das's family, and therefore the heirs of Raj Krishna, plaintiffs 8 to 11, have got some interest in the debuttar properties.

1. Kalidas Das v. Krishan Chandra Das, (1869)

The next event of importance to which reference may be made is the partition suit which was instituted on the Original Side of this Court in 1873. The decree in that suit for partition, as well as the order in that suit, which was disposed of in 1882 are printed at pp. 30 and 18 respectively of part 2 of the paper-book and have been marked as Ex. H and Ex. 30 respectively in the case. It does appear from these proceedings that the properties now in dispute were excluded from the suit for partition and that for a very good reason, for it appears that whatever the nature of the debuttar properties were, whether they were absolute debuttar or secular properties charged with worship, they could not form the subject matter of partition. In any event the properties were not included in the partition suit. The plaintiffs assert that Guru Das really acquired exclusive title in 1831 and since then on the basis of exclusive title has dedicated these properties to god Shiva, and that no one else amongst the cosharers has anything to do with debuttar properties. As has been said already latterly there was some litigation in connection with Deva Sheba which resulted in certain proceedings under S. 9, Specific Relief Act, in which the present plaintiffs succeeded. But that was followed by the Bengal Tenancy Act proceedings in which defendants succeeded with the result that the defendants were able to raise three rooms and get possession of three Shiva lingas out of the twelve. Hence the present suit. The defence which is as long as the plaintiff substantially falls under three heads. It is first contended that there has been no adverse possession for more than the statutory period of the right to hold these lands as shebaita so as to defeat or bar the defendants' right with regard to the rooms which have been erected and which form part of the Shiva Mandirs which are the subject-matter of the suit.

The second ground is that the suit is not maintainable in its present form seeing that Mallika Sundari, who is in the line of Guru Das being the wife of Durga Das's son Ashutosh, who has been described as pro forma defendant 10, has not joined as plaintiff and it is said that the present suit by some of the shebaita, who have been arranged in the category of plaintiff, is not maintainable. It has been contended further as the last ground that the plaintiffs are not entitled to mesne profits. It has been urged that in calculating mesne profits the defendants should have a set off of Rs. 500 which have been spent by the defendants for executing the repairs in the rooms in question. The Subordinate Judge, after framing numerous issues which arise on the allegations in the pleadings, has rested his decision in favour of the plaintiffs on the ground that the right of Krishan, the father of defendants 1 and 2, to the Shebaitship has been extinguished by adverse possession for more than 12 years. In other words he has held that there has been a complete ouster for a very long period of time so as to exclude the rights of Krishan and necessarily the rights of defendants 1 and 2 to the Shebaitship. He has held also that the plea as to the maintainability of the suit must fail as Mallika Sundari has relinquished her right; and as the right which she has relinquished does not purport to be more than Rs. 100 no registered document is necessary to effect a complete extinguishment of right in favour of the next reversionary heir or heirs. On the question of mesne profits he has given a decree for the sum of Rs. 1,138 on this footing that for 3 years preceding the institution of the suit the total amount of rent due to the plaintiffs but taken by Krishan or his successors was Rs. 1,264-8-0. Deducting 10 per cent as collection charges and incidental expenses Rs. 1,138 represents the amount of mesne profits due for the period to the plaintiffs.

He has apparently held that being defeated in S. 9 case, the defendants were in wrongful possession of the four rooms in question and has consequently not taken into account the sum of Rs. 500 which the defendants are alleged to have spent for the repairs of these rooms in question during the pendency of the case under S. 9, Specific Relief Act. It is against this decision that the present appeal has been brought by the defendants and the three heads of defences which have been already indicated have been raised before us and they really form the three grounds on which Mr. Debendra Nath Bagchi, who appears for the appellants, has proposed to rest this appeal. We will take first the plea that the suit is not maintainable in its present form. It appears that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is that there was no necessity for a registered deed for the purpose of effecting a surrender of the rights of a Hindu widow in her deceased husband's estate in favour of the next reversioner where the value of the rights surrendered is less than Rs. 100. Apart from that it appears that a petition was put in the suit on 19th January 1931 (which is to be found printed at p. 81 of the first part of the paper book) where Mallika Sundari states that she had relinquished the twelve temples and the property appurtenant thereto and the Shiba and Puja of the deities in question in favour of her husband's younger brother Mohitosh Das, plaintiff 1, and that he is to be in ownership and possession of the said property. She states further in the said petition that she has no objection to the plaintiff's getting a decree in full for 16 annas. Surrender under Hindu Law does not require a deed and by this petition Mallika Sundari has surrendered all her rights in her deceased husband's estate in favour of the next reversioner. There is therefore no substance in this ground based on the non-maintainability of the suit in the present form.

The real question on which the controversy has centred in the present appeal is as to whether the plaintiffs on whom undoubtedly the burden lay of showing that Krishan's right had been extinguished by adverse possession have discharged that burden effectively. Plaintiffs have given direct evidence of the exclusion of Krishan from Shebaitship shortly after the death of Drabamoyee which happened in 1877. It is no doubt the case of the plaintiff that Drabamoyee did not share in the worship and did not act as Sebait so long as she was alive after the death of her son Satkowrie in 1822. We can state at once that there is hardly any evidence which we can trust to show that Drabamoyee was excluded from Shebaitship. But there is direct evidence as to the exclusion of Krishan and his successor after the death of Drabamoyee in 1877 from Shebaitship. (His Lordship then discussed the evidence and proceeded.) From these circumstances, as also the direct evidence, we have no doubt that the only conclusion that we can come to is that there has been ouster of Krishan from the year 1878 from this shebaitship.

The rule with regard to exclusive possession of a co-sharer in joint properties to the exclusion of other co-sharers applies also to property which is held in common by persons in their capacity as shebait. The rule with regard to what constitutes an ouster of a co-sharer from joint property is well settled by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in a case which went from Ceylon. Lord Macnaughten in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee pointed out that possession is never considered adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title as was laid by Vice-Chancellor Wood in (1855) 2 K & J 79 (2). See 1912 A C 230 (3). In order to succeed on the ground of ouster the person setting up ouster was bound to show that he did set up an adverse or independent title during the period which was beyond the statutory period of twelve years. The case is reported in 1912 A C 230 (3). At p. 236 of the said report Lord Macnaughten said this:

The two learned Judges in the Court of appeal did not adopt in its entirety the suggestion of the trial Judge. They both held that Iseris entered as sole heir, and that his title has been adverse ever since he entered. They held that he entered as 'sole heir', apparently because he had it in his mind from the first to cheat his sisters. But is such a conclusion possible in law? His possession was in law the possession of the co-owners. It was not possible for him to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind. Nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster could bring about that result.

In a case from India, this case of 1912 A C 230 (3), was cited by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and their Lordships pointed out in that case :

Uninterrupted sole possession of such property, without more, must be referred to the lawful title possessed by the joint holder to use the joint estate, and cannot be regarded as an assertion of a right to hold it as separate, so as to ascertain adverse claims against other interested members. If possession may be either lawful or unlawful, in the absence of evidence it must be assumed to be the former. The fact, therefore that this village of Bhagsar has been occupied for many years by the defendants and their predecessors is insufficient to prove exclusion of the plaintiffs without further evidence.

The same view has been taken in a later case which was cited at the bar. We refer to the case of 58 I A 106 (4). After referring to the case of (1912) A C 230 (3), their Lordships say this :

In that case however what was decided by the Board was that the possession would not be adverse until ouster.

All the cases on this question of ouster or exclusion from joint property were reviewed quite recently in a decision to which I was a party in the case of 61 Cal 377 (5), where reference was made also to another case of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, namely the case of (1918) A C 895 (6). It is pointed out in this last mentioned case that the true rule which is deducible from these authorities is that there can be no adverse possession by one cosharer as against others until there is ouster or exclusion and that the possession of a cosharer becomes adverse to another cosharer from the moment when there is an ouster, i.e., after there is an assertion of a hostile title by one cosharer against the other and to the knowledge of the latter. In the case before us having regard to our finding that Krishan asserted his right in 1877-78 and failed, there can be no doubt that his right to the endowment had been extinguished by reason of ouster by the branch of Guru Das's heirs. On behalf of the respondents Mr. Bireswar Bagchi, has raised a very broad contention that non-participation of rent and profits of rent paying property or want of actual possession of properties which are being possessed by one cosharer for a very long period would constitute ouster even if there is no direct evidence of exclusion. In support of this proposition he has drawn our attention to a certain observation of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 46 I A 285 (7). The passage relied upon is to be found at p. 292 of the report. Their Lordships point out this :

The limits of the rule were defined in 11 A & E 1008 (8) as follows : Generally speaking, one tenant in common cannot maintain an ejectment against another tenant in common, because of the possession of the other and to enable the party complaining to maintain an ejectment, there must be an ouster of the party complaining. But where the claimant, tenant in common, has not been in the participation of the rents and profits for a considerable length of time, and other circumstances concur, the Judge will direct the jury to take into consideration whether they will presume that there has been an ouster, and, if the jury find an ouster, then the right of the lessor of the plaintiff to an undivided share will be decided exactly in the same way as if he had brought his ejectment for an entirety.

This case does not support the broad proposition formulated that dispossession or non-possession for a considerable length of time is sufficient to give rise to an inference of ouster. The words which have been italicised, namely, other circumstances concur are of very great materiality. It is somewhat dangerous doctrine to propose that mere non-participation of rents and profits of joint property by a cosharer for a very long period would be sufficient to give rise to the inference of ouster. It would indeed be very dangerous to lay down such a proposition as a correct proposition in law. It often happens that one member of a joint Dayabhaga family lives at Calcutta and another member works under Government at Simla Hills for a period of 30 or 40 years, the member in Calcutta being joint in property with the member in Simla Hills. It may be that circumstances do not permit the other member at Simla Hills to come to Calcutta and to live for a day in his Calcutta house and to realise rents and profits of some joint properties or to associate himself in the worship of the family deity. It is difficult to hold that mere non-participation in the profits of joint property bars the rights of the members living at Simla Hills to the advantage of the member living in Bengal. It is for that reason that their Lordships are careful enough to say that when along with non-participation of rents and profits for a considerable length of time other circumstances concur, an inference of exclusion or adverse possession under hostile title, might be drawn. Reference was made in this connection to a decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins when he was the Chief Justice of Bombay in 29 Bom 300 (9). That was a case which came before the learned Chief Justice in second appeal and the finding was that the tenant in common was continuously for a long period in possession of the joint property without any claim or demand by any person claiming under the other tenant-in-common and it was held that this is an evidence from which an actual ouster of the other tenants-in-common may be presumed. In support of this proposition Sir Lawrence Jenkins was citing the following passage from the decision in the case of 11 A & E 1008 (8) to which reference may be made. The passage is this :

No doubt exclusive receipt of profits continuously for a long period may point to an ouster, but the Court must be satisfied that such taking of profits is an indication of a denial of rights in the other co-tenant to receive them. That is a very important statement and it shows that the mere fact of exclusive receipt of profits continuously for a long period would not be sufficient to prove ouster.

The Court must be satisfied that the taking of profits is an indication of a denial of rights in the other co-tenants to receive them. Besides it is to be noticed that this decision was prior to the decision of the case of 28 C L J 437 (10). The decision in Hardit Singh's case (10) was by a committee of which Sir Lawrence Jenkins was himself a member, and the passage which is quoted above shows that long and uninterrupted possession without more by one co-sharer is not sufficient to constitute adverse possession. Having regard to our finding it is not necessary for us to determine the correctness or otherwise of the broad principle formulated by the learned advocate for the respondent. As this point was raised, some time was taken up in discussing the question in regard to the proposition so enunciated. As we have already stated, before the death of Drabamoyee the respondents made out no case of ouster, but an attempt has been made to make out a case of ouster from the period subsequent to her death. In our opinion continuous dispossession subsequent to that period does make out a case of ouster for more than the statutory period. It remains now to consider the third ground of mesne profits. It has been sought to be argued on behalf of the appellants that in computing mesne profits the Court below should have taken into account the sum of Rs. 500, which was spent by the appellant for the repairs of the rooms out of the rents collected. There is no doubt on the evidence on behalf of the appellants that the sum of Rs. 500, was spent. But there is no documentary evidence to support the case made by the defendants. One would have expected that accounts would be forthcoming to show what the actual amount spent was. It is stated by the defendants that the accounts are with their vendee. In the absence of the best piece of evidence which could have been produced in order to show what the actual amount spent was, we see no reason to dissent from the decision of the Subordinate Judge in this part of the case.

It is hardly likely that after the disposal of the suit under S. 9 the defendants would proceed to spend a large sum in the repairs of house of the rooms which they were in possession of. We think, therefore, that the decree for mesne profits for Rs. 1,264-8 less the collection charges has been rightly given by the Subordinate Judge. All the grounds in appeal fail. It remains now to consider the question of costs. It appears that the plaintiffs founded their case both on their original title by inheritance as well as on adverse possession or ouster. So far as the first part of the case is concerned they have failed. Evidence was directed also towards that part of the case and in these circumstances we think that they failed on the principal issue of title by inheritance. So the proper order to make as to costs is that the plaintiffs should get half their costs throughout.

10. Hardi tSingh v. Gurmukh Singh, 1918 P C 1 =47 I C 626=64 P R 1918=28 C L J 437 (P O).

To this extent the decree of the Subordinate Judge with regard to costs is varied.

Appeal No. 1238 of 1933, Decided on 2nd December 1935, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Hooghly, D/- 23rd March 1933.

(a) Charge—Charge created by decree—Subsequent purchaser is bound irrespective of whether he had notice or not.

Where a charge is created by a decree, no question of notice arises and a subsequent purchaser will be bound irrespective of whether such person had notice of the charge or not : 39 C W N 725, Foll. [P 113 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 52, O. 38, R. 10—Attachment before judgment in force—Another decree-holder putting to sale property in execution of his decree and purchasing it, failing to give notice according to O. 21, R. 52 to Court previously attaching property before judgment—Property again sold in execution of decree, in which it was attached before judgment—Decree-holder previously purchasing property is not entitled to damages from decree-holder in subsequent decree.

An attachment before judgment, is made in the interest of the decree-holder subsequently obtaining decree in the suit, in order to prevent the judgment-debtor from disposing of the property before the judgment and does not operate against any other creditor of the judgment-debtor. [P 113 C 2 ; P 114 C 1]

Where however a creditor putting property to sale in execution of his decree and purchasing it, while an attachment before judgment is in force, omits to give notice according to O. 21, R. 52 to the Court attaching the property before judgment, and the property is again sold in execution of the decree in that suit, the decree-holder purchasing the property and omitting to give notice under O. 21, R. 52, is not entitled to any damages against the other decree-holder, as the decree-holder by omitting to take action under O. 21, R. 52 prejudices the other decree-holder. [P 114 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 52, O. 38, R. 10—A putting to sale property of X in execution of decree and purchasing it himself—A depositing certain sum and setting off balance against decree—Deposit withdrawn by X—Property sold again in execution of decree in favour of C—Amount realised distributed rateably among B, C and D, decree-holders—Suit by A against X, B, C and D for recovery of property or for damages—B

found to have charge created on property by his decree—A found not to have served notice under O. 21, R. 52 to Court attaching property before judgment at instance of C—B and C held not liable to pay damages—X held liable to refund amount withdrawn by him—D and X held liable to pay balance of loss sustained by A.

A, a decree-holder holding an ex parte decree against X in a suit for recovery of money, put the property of judgment-debtor X to sale and purchased it himself and deposited a certain sum of money in cash, debiting the balance against the amount of the decree in his favour. The deposit was withdrawn by the judgment-debtor X. Subsequently the same property was sold in execution of other decree in favour of C, and put to sale, and the amount realized was rateably distributed among B, C and D, the creditors of the judgment-debtors. A instituted a suit against X, B, C and D, claiming either the property or damages for loss of the same. It was found that B had a charge created on the property by his decree and that A had omitted to give notice of his attachment to the Court attaching the property before judgment at instance of C :

Held : that B and C were not liable to pay any damages to A. [P 114 C 1]

Held also : that X was liable to refund the amount withdrawn by him and the loss suffered by A was to be paid in equal shares by D and X. [P 114 C 1]

Judgment.—This suit was instituted by the plaintiffs against six defendants stating that they had wrongfully deprived them of certain bricks which they had bought in a Court execution sale, that the bricks should be returned to them or in the alternative that they should be given adequate compensation for the loss of the bricks. The facts in short are these: Defendant 6 was a manufacturer of bricks. He became involved in debts and could not pay them off. Many suits were instituted against him in the year 1928. The first suit was instituted by defendants 3 and 4 on 19th April 1928 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly. That suit was decreed on 21st May for Rs. 1,830 and further that of the two kilns of bricks, the kiln No. 10 should remain subject to a first charge for the decree. The second suit was instituted by the plaintiffs on 23rd May 1928 in the Court of the Munsif of Serampore. This suit was decreed ex parte on 26th July for Rs. 830. The third suit was instituted by defendant 2 on 16th June 1928 in the third Court of the Subordinate Judge, Hooghly. On 20th June the defendant attached the two kilns of bricks before judgment. While the charge on kiln No. 10, at the instance of defendants 3 and 4 was subsisting and the attachment of the two kilns by defendant 2 was subsisting on 27th July 1928, the plaintiffs applied for execution of their decree and on 5th September 1928 the two kilns of bricks were sold by the Munsif of Serampore and the plaintiffs purchased the same for Rs. 1,000 of which they deposited Rs. 158-11-0 only in cash and debited the balance against their decree. This Rs. 158-11-0, deposited by them in Court, was withdrawn and taken away by defendant 6. Meantime defendant 2 applied in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Hooghly, for execution of his decree. The two kilns were attached and the sale proclamation was issued. The plaintiffs appeared in that Court and made an objection on the ground that they had already purchased the two kilns. This application was dismissed and the two kilns of bricks were sold in auction in the Court, of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court on 9th October 1928, and they were sold for a sum of Rs. 3,585 to defendant 1 and the money was distributed rateably to defendants 2, 3, 4 and 5 who were creditors, the plaintiffs not having applied for rateable distribution.

Then on 11th October 1928, plaintiffs instituted the present suit claiming either the bricks or damages for loss of the same. The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit held that while the other four creditors obtained decrees on sale of goods to the debtor defendant, the plaintiffs had only a promissory note whereupon they obtained an ex parte decree and the very day after they obtained a decree they applied for execution and in the sale proclamation they understated the number of bricks and purchased them at an inadequate price of Rs. 1,000 and then allowed without objection defendant 6 to take away the balance of Rupees 158-11-0 from the Court. Thereupon, the first Court held that the decree was not bona fide, but it was a collusive and fraudulent one and upon that finding the trial Court dismissed the suit. In appeal, the appellate Court held that the decree obtained by the plaintiffs was not collusive or fraudulent. Then the Court proceeded to try the different issues raised by the different defendants and rejected them all and decreed the suit for Rs. 1,000 against defendants 2, 3, 4 and 5 dismissing the suit against defendants 1 and 6.

As to the dismissal of the suit against defendant 1 who was the purchaser at the second sale both Courts held that he was a bona fide purchaser who purchased for a fair value and he is not liable to anyone. The Court of appeal does not state why the suit was dismissed against defendant 6. It is urged that in any event he should refund to the plaintiff Rs. 158-11-0 which he had withdrawn from the Court. The argument appears valid. The main argument on behalf of defendants 3 and 4 is that they, by the Court's decree of 21st May 1928, obtained the first charge on kiln No. 10 which was sold for Rs. 2,505 and out of those sale proceeds defendants 3 and 4 obtained Rs. 1,830 for their share as a first charge on that kiln. It is urged on the other side that the plaintiffs had no knowledge of the charge made by defendants 3 and 4 and therefore they are not bound by the same. But where a charge is created by a decree, no question of notice arises and a subsequent purchaser will be bound, irrespective of whether such purchaser has notice of the charge or not: see the case of 39 C W N 725 (1).

I am of opinion, this plea of defendants 3 and 4 is good and the suit must be dismissed against them with costs. In my opinion, the plaintiffs are entitled to get the sum of Rs. 1,000 which they lost by the re-sale of the bricks. The question is who should pay the damages to them. As stated above, Rs. 158-11-0 will be paid by defendant 6. It is argued on behalf of defendant 2 that the attachment before judgment which they had obtained in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Hooghly, was in force when the plaintiffs had the bricks sold in the Court of the Munsif of Serampore and therefore that sale cannot prevail against the prior attachment. This argument does not appear sound. The attachment previous to the sale was made in the interest of the decree holder in order to prevent the judgment-debtor from disposing of the property before the sale. It does not operate against any other creditor of the judgment-debtor.

It is urged however that the sale made by the plaintiffs was a surreptitious sale inasmuch as they did not comply with the provisions of O. 21, R. 52, Civil P. C., which provides :

Where the property to be attached is in the custody of any Court or public officer, the attachment shall be made by a notice to such Court or officer, requesting that such property may be held subject to the further orders of the Court from which the notice is issued.

Here, the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly had already attached the property. It was the duty of the plaintiffs to send a notice to that Court that the property would be sold subject to their decree. They did not take any action under this rule. The question is, what is the effect of the omission. The Court of appeal below has held that the omission was unintentional, that the plaintiffs did not know nor did the Nazir of the Munsif's Court know that these bricks had been previously attached by the order of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Hooghly. Assuming that they did not know, the question is whether it was due to their culpable negligence. It is to be presumed that Judges and public officers have regularly performed their duty. In this case the decree-holders had duly paid for the attachment in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. It is to be presumed that the public officer whose duty it was to attach the property had in fact done so and the plaintiffs or the Nazir of the Munsif of Serampore, if they had been properly vigilant, would have found out the matter and it was their culpable negligence which made them ignorant of the previous attachment and by omitting to take action under O. 21, R. 52, the plaintiffs have in fact prejudiced the case of the other creditors. Whether such omission makes the sale void or voidable the creditors who were prejudiced by this omission are entitled to a relief from this Court. Defendant 2, in my opinion, was prejudiced by the plaintiffs' omission to take action under O. 21 R. 52 of the Code and the plaintiffs are not entitled to get any damages from him. There remain only two defendants, namely defendants 5 and 6. As already stated, Rs. 158-11-0 will be paid by defendant 6. The balance sum of Rs. 1,000 will be paid in equal shares by defendant 5 and defendant 6. The plaintiffs will pay costs of defendants 1, 2, 3 and 4 and they will get their costs from defendants 5 and 6 throughout.

Mortgage—Suit on — Suit by prior mortgagee—Subsequent mortgagee of same property and also of other independent property made party—He is not entitled to get other property included in his own mortgage sold in execution of decree—He must have recourse to independent suit.

A subsequent mortgagee of same property and also of other independent property who is made party to a prior mortgagee's suit cannot in that suit obtain a decree for sale of the independent property. The subsequent mortgagee is made a party to the suit in order that he might have an opportunity to redeem or that he might have his mortgage money or part of it out of the surplus sale proceeds after the satisfaction of the prior mortgage. But if the subsequent mortgagee seeks to obtain sale of some other property which is included in his own mortgage, he must have recourse to an independent suit: 37 Cal 907 and 1932 Cal 126, Rel. on; 22 Cal 100 and 24 Cal 190, not Foll. [P 115 C 1, 2; P 116 C 1]

H. K. Bose—for Defendants.

Judgment.—A question has been referred to me by the learned Master which arose on the solving of the final decrees in two similar mortgage suits. The circumstances were as follows. Property comprised in a mortgage was subsequently mortgaged together with other properties to a second mortgagee. The prior mortgagee sued on his mortgage and made the subsequent mortgagee a party to his suit. A preliminary decree was made and the property, the subject-matter of the original mortgage, was sold and was insufficient to satisfy the prior mortgagee's claim. The question arises on the drawing up of the final decree whether in this decree the second mortgagee is entitled to an order for sale of the remaining property in satisfaction of his mortgage. I have had the benefit of hearing arguments from counsel for the mortgagor and the second mortgagee. For the second mortgagee, reliance is placed on the case of 22 Cal 100 (1), where Sale, J., held that it had been the practice on the original side of this Court for a long series of years and certainly since the decision of Pontifex, J., in 1879 in the case of 5 Cal 101 (2), that where no issue is raised as between the defendants and no question of priority arises, on proof of the subsequent mortgages to make a decree directing an account on the footing of each of the mortgages and fixing one period of redemption for all the defendants.

That practice the learned Judge said in 1894 is now too well settled to be disturbed. In 24 Cal 190 (3), the same learned Judge three years later made a similar order in favour of a third mortgagee and held that the remaining properties which were outside the jurisdiction might be sold at the instance of the defendant. In 1910 Pugh, J., in 37 Cal 907 (4), held that this practice on the original side was based on and in conformity with the English practice but that it did not conform to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, which had been incorporated into Order 34, Civil P. C. He held that since 1908 the original side practice was bound to conform to the practice in the mofussil and on the appellate side, where the view had always been held that the subsequent mortgagees were only made parties to the suit in order that they might have an opportunity to redeem and to receive their mortgage money out of the surplus sale proceeds after satisfaction of the first mortgage. That judgment, if I may say so with respect, is clear and well reasoned and the learned Judge on p. 911 of the report calls attention to the difficulty that might arise if there were a prior or a subsequent mortgagee or assignee of the property excluded from the plaintiff's but included in the second mortgagee's mortgage. Such a person would not be a proper party to the plaintiff's suit, yet the property could not be sold except in his presence and after decree had been made with respect to his interests.

first mortgagee's security was Calcutta property, whereas the second mortgagee had a mortgage over the Calcutta property and also over properties in the mofussil and the learned Judge held that the second mortgagee was only entitled to be paid out of the balance of any sale proceeds of the Calcutta property and could not in any event proceed in that suit against the mofussil property. This decision was obviously opposed to the decision of Sale, J., in 24 Cal 190 (3), but Pugh, J., based his decision not on this ground but on the wider ground that the provisions of S. 85, T. P. Act, had been incorporated in the Code and that the procedure on the original side of this Court which had hitherto prevailed had now become obsolete. The practice referred to and approved by Sale, J., had the obvious advantage of entitling all matters between the mortgagor and the various mortgagees to be adjusted in a single suit, but it also had the obvious disadvantage which was noted by Pugh, J., and to which I have already referred, viz., that there is no provision to safeguard the rights of other encumbrances of the property mortgaged to the second mortgagee.

The question was again dealt with in a recent decision of this Court. 59 Cal 117 (5) at p. 124, where the learned Judges, Mukherji and Guha, JJ., referred to some of the decisions, I have mentioned and reiterated that whatever might be the English practice and the practice on the original side of the Court the procedure in the mofussil was different and the second mortgagee was merely made a party to the suit in order that he might have his mortgage money or part of it out of the surplus sale proceeds after satisfaction of the first mortgage but that in order to obtain the sale of some other property included in his own mortgage he must have recourse to a separate suit. In my view the judgment of Pugh, J., is correct and the former practice of the original side approved by Sale, J., became obsolete so soon as the relevant provisions of the Transfer of Property Act were incorporated in the Civil Procedure Code. A subsequent mortgagee of independent property who is made a party to the prior mortgagee's suit cannot in that suit obtain a decree for sale of the independent property. These are my views in regard to the practice. In the particular cases before me preliminary decrees were made on 6th December 1932 and 15th December 1925 respectively. In each of these decrees an order was made for the sale not only of the property subject to the plaintiff's mortgage but also of the property mortgaged to the defendant puisne mortgagee. It is not now open to question whether those decrees were or were not in proper form. They have been made and the puisne mortgagees are entitled to have the remaining mortgaged properties sold. The final decrees for sale will be settled and passed as drawn by the learned Master.

Appeal No. 304 of 1932, Decided on 17th January 1935, from original decree of Sub-Judge, Darjeeling, D/- 15th February 1932.

(a) Hindu Law—Succession by survivorship—Letters of administration cannot be granted—Even if granted sanction for alienation is not necessary.

No letters of administration can be granted in respect of the estate of the deceased person who was a member of a joint Mitakshara family along with other co-parceners; and even if a co-parcener obtains them he need not take the sanction for alienation: 1920 Pat 343 and 12 Bom 621, Ref. [P 118 C 2]

(b) Hindu Law — Alienation — Manager—Purchase after bona fide enquiry and sale justified by legal necessity—Whole sale must be upheld even if part of consideration is not applied to legal necessities.

Where joint family property is sold by the manager of the family for legal necessity, but the whole of the price is not proved to have been applied to purposes of necessity, and the sale is challenged on that ground by the other members of the family, if the sale itself is justified by legal necessity, and the purchaser pays a fair price for the property sold, and acts in good faith and after due enquiry as to the necessity for the sale, the mere fact that part of the price is not proved to have been applied to purposes of necessity would not invalidate the sale, the purchaser not being bound to see to the application of the price. If the above conditions are satisfied the sale must be held unconditionally, whether the part not proved to have been applied to purposes of necessity is considerable or not: Case law referred.

(c) Hindu Law — Alienation — Manager—Mortgage by — Necessity for borrowing at high rate of interest must be proved—Security ample—Court can reduce interest.

Those who support a mortgage of joint family property made by the manager must prove not only that there was necessity to borrow the principal but that it was not unreasonable to borrow at some such high rate, and upon some such terms, as are provided by the mortgage. If the rate of interest is exorbitantly high, although the security is ample, the Court can properly infer that it was unnecessarily high, and can make a mortgage decree allowing a reduced rate: 1919 P C 12, Rel. on. D. N. Mitter, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant and arises out of a preliminary decree in a suit on mortgage commenced by the plaintiff. The decree is dated 15th February 1932. The suit was to enforce a mortgage executed by one Jadu Nath Sarma, who is said to be the Karta of a joint Mitakshara family, on 26th May 1922. Jadunath hypothecated by this document the immoveable properties belonging to the joint family. In order to understand the position of Jadunath with reference to the family it is necessary to state the following facts: One Bhagoo Mistri had three brothers namely Gakul, Nimchand and Fulchand. There was some sort of a partition between Gakul, Nimchand and Fulchand, and Bhagoo got in his share the properties some of which have been mortgaged by the document on which the present suit has been brought. Bhagoo died leaving behind him surviving his son Kali Charan who died on 9th February 1918. Kali Charan had a son Raghunath who died at the age of 42 but during the lifetime of Kali Charan. Kali Charan died on the date already mentioned leaving him surviving Jadu Nath and Durga Prosad, two of his grandsons by his son Raghunath. The relationship between the plaintiff and some of the pro forma defendants to the suit may be shown as follows: Chatter Singh had five sons Jewdhari, plaintiff 1 in the present suit, Deo Narayan, whose son is Bharat Singh, defendant 2, Ramdhiyan Singh whose son is Sadhusaran Singh, plaintiff 2, Ramnarayan, and Sewsagar, whose son is Ambika Singh, plaintiff 3 to the suit. The allegations of the plaintiffs in the plaint are that for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the joint family which consisted of Jadunath himself and his infant brother Durga Prosad, who was born in August 1909, a sum of rupees twelve thousand (Rs. 12000) was borrowed on 26th May 1922, by Jadu Nath as the Karta of the joint family. It may be mentioned that the mother of Durga Prasad, Musammatt Daho Kuar, was also a member of the family at the time of the execution of the mortgage. The amount advanced on the mortgage was Rs. 12,000 (rupees twelve thousand) and the mortgage is said to have been executed by Jadunath Sarma for self and as the natural guardian of Durga Prosad, the defendant appellant.

The interest claimed was Re. 1-8-0 per mensem, that is 18 per cent per annum with nine-monthly rests if the sum be not paid within the period of nine months. The due date of the mortgage was 26th May 1924. The properties mortgaged are given in Schs. A and B to the plaint. Plaintiffs stated that the amount due at the date of the suit on the bond including interest would be about Rs. 54,000 (rupees fifty-four thousand) and that the plaintiffs were giving up a sum of Rs. 9,000 (rupees nine thousand) out of the interest and claimed Rs. 45,000 (rupees forty-five thousand). Plaintiffs accordingly asked for the usual decree for sale, the mortgage being in the nature of a simple mortgage. Several defences were taken in the suit. It was stated that Jadunath was not the karta of the joint family consisting of Jadunath and Durga Prosad. It was also said that the previous debts were neither genuine nor real nor were incurred for family necessity, and that there was no justifying necessity when the mortgage was executed so as to make the alienation binding on the joint family property. A further defence was taken, namely that as Jadunath obtained letters of administration of the estate of Kalicharan, after Kalicharan's death in 1918, the mortgage was not binding on the minor as no sanction was obtained from the probate Court sanctioning the alienation in question. A very important statement is made in the written statement to the effect that a short time before the execution of this mortgage Jadunath, with the permission of the District

Delegate of Darjeeling, sold to Abdul Rahim of Calcutta a very good portion of the ancestral properties for Rs. 50,000 (rupees fifty thousand) as administrator, karta and natural guardian of the defendant, and after paying the debts, recited in the deed of conveyance in favour of Abdur Rahim, a very large sum of money, namely Rs. 22,253 (rupees twenty-two thousand two hundred and fifty-three) remained in his hands and there was absolutely no necessity to borrow those twelve thousand rupees from the plaintiffs on 26th May 1922; and it is said that there was no justifying cause for the transfer by way of mortgage.

It was also alleged in the written defence of the defendants that Jadunath was a man of dissolute habits, and that he became early addicted to wine and women and began to spend his time in debauchery. It was also said that the high rate of interest mentioned in the bond could not be justified even if there was legal necessity for the borrowing. In other words the plea taken was that even if there was any justification for the borrowing of Rs. 12,000 there was no justifying necessity for borrowing on high rate of interest, namely 18 per cent per annum, with nine-monthly rests. It is also said that the interest was hard and unconscionable. The Subordinate Judge rejected all these defences and decreed the suit in full. Against this decree the present appeal has been brought by the defendant and several grounds which were based on the defences taken in the Court below and which have been already mentioned, were urged before us in support of the appeal. It was contended in the first place that Jadunath was not really the karta of the joint family consisting of himself and his brother and the mother of Durga Prosad, and that therefore the mortgage could not bind the joint family properties. It was said in support of this argument that Jadunath assumed the role of karta for the time when he was executing the mortgage in question. The Subordinate Judge has, however, relied on the oral evidence adduced in this case and has come to the conclusion that Jadunath was acting as the karta. (His Lordship after agreeing with the lower Court proceeded). We are therefore of opinion that this contention that Jadunath was not acting as a Karta of the joint family must fail. The second contention which is raised on behalf of the appellant is that Jadunath obtained letters of administration of the estate of Kali Charan and having obtained the letters of administration he could not execute a valid mortgage so as to bind the joint family estate without obtaining the sanction of the District Judge. The question really turns on the construction which is to be put on the provisions of S. 211 (2), Succession Act. That clause runs as follows:

When the deceased was a Hindu, Mahomedan, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina or an exempted person, nothing herein contained shall vest in an executor or administrator any property of the deceased person which would otherwise have passed by survivorship to some other person.

It may be taken for the purposes of this case that Kali Charan and his two grandsons Jadunath and the present appellant formed members of the joint Mitakshara family and the properties which form the subject matter of the mortgage were the ancestral properties in the hands of Jadunath and Durga Prosad after Kali Charan's death. After Kali Charan's death in the absence of a son the properties would pass by survivorship to Jadunath and Durga Prosad, and there would be according to the provisions of S. 211 (2) no property of the deceased person Kali Charan in respect of which letters of administration could be granted. At the moment of the death of Kali Charan no property of his vested in the executor, the right of survivorship taking precedence over any other right; and that therefore when Kali Charan died the right in the joint family properties passed by survivorship to their two infant grandsons and nothing became vested in the executor, or the administrator notwithstanding the grant of letters of administration. This view is supported by the decision to which we were referred in the cases of 7 Rang 39 (1), 5 Pat L J 107 (2) and 12 Bom 621 (3). We are referred by Mr. Mukerji who appears for the appellant to a decision in 9 C W N 923 (4), but Mr. Mukerji, after examining the case frankly admitted that that was a case where the property was not the property of a member of a Mitakshara family but of one governed by the Dayabhag School of Hindu Law. So that that case has no application and we need not consider it.

The argument of the appellant with regard to this point was that even if the probate Court had no jurisdiction to grant letters of administration the point of the want of jurisdiction cannot be taken in a collateral proceeding but that the order granting letters of administration should have been set aside by a proper proceeding, and we are referred to the provisions of S. 263, Succession Act, and in particular to illustration (1) to that Section. That illustration is to the following effect: "The Court by which the grant was made had no jurisdiction." S. 263 states that the grant of probate or letters of administration may be revoked or annulled for just cause; and it is said that even where there is an error of jurisdiction the letters of administration should have been revoked for just cause which includes according to the illustration the case where probate Court has no jurisdiction. At the same time we are confronted by the well known principle established by a series of decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee that if proceedings are taken by a Court without jurisdiction no further proceedings are necessary to set the same aside or to nullify the effect of such proceedings. We may refer in this connection to the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of 32 Cal 296 (5). But apart from this question being viewed from this standpoint it appears by reason of S. 211 (2), that no letters of administration can be granted in respect of the estate of the deceased person who was a member of a joint Mitakshara family along with other co-parceners. It was therefore not necessary to obtain the sanction of the District Judge in order to render the mortgage in question valid and binding on the joint family estate. This contention of the appellant therefore also fails.

The third contention in this appeal is that as the debts, for paying which the mortgage Ex. 1, dated 26th May 1922 was executed, were not such debts as were incurred for family purposes, the mortgage cannot bind the family properties. It was further said that there is no reliable evidence of bona fide enquiry by the plaintiffs mortgagees as to the existence of necessity, and it is contended that having regard to the well established principle, regarding the limits of the authority of Karta of a Mitakshara joint family to bind the joint family properties by sale or mortgage, the mortgage in question, should be held to be not binding on the family properties and the suit to enforce the mortgage security must fail. Before proceeding to deal with the question raised by the ground as to the existence of legal necessity or as to the existence of an inquiry into the legal necessity, it is necessary just to set forth the law in this behalf which has been summarized in the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of 51 I A 129 (6). At p. 139 after reviewing the numerous authorities both of Indian Courts and also of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council their Lordships say this :

Their Lordships may sum up the propositions which they would wish to lay down as the result of these authorities as follows:

We will cite here only proposition (1) for that is material for the purposes of the present case. The proposition (1) runs as follows :

The managing member of a joint undivided estate cannot alienate or burden the estate qua manager except for the purposes of necessity.

It is not disputed, and it cannot be disputed, that the burden of proving the necessity for the debts and that there has been a bona fide inquiry by the lender is on the lender i. e., the plaintiffs mortgagees in the present case. We have to consider how far they have been able to discharge that burden with reference to the present mortgage. In considering this question there is a circumstance of very great importance in this case which has to be kept in view, namely that just a few days prior to the execution of the present mortgage, portions of the family properties were sold to one Abdur Rahim for a sum of Rs. 50,000 (rupees fifty thousand), and having regard to this circumstance the burden is indeed very heavy on the plaintiffs mortgagees to establish the existence of legal necessity seeing that the family was put in possession of a considerable sum of money, namely, Rs. 50,000 (rupees fifty thousand) a few days before the transaction which is challenged by the defendant in the present case. The Subordinate Judge is of opinion that the plaintiffs did make sufficient inquiry with regard to how the sum of Rs. 50,000 (rupees fifty thousand) was spent for family purposes and that therefore the mortgagees have discharged the onus of showing this: that after due inquiry they were satisfied that so far as Rupees 50,000 (rupees fifty-thousand) were concerned nothing remained out of that sum so as to justify the borrowing on the present mortgage. (His Lordship after discussing evidence proceeded). On this evidence we are not prepared to disagree with the finding of the Subordinate Judge that as a matter of fact the sum of Rupees 50,000 was spent. The question however still remains as to whether the lender should have made a proper inquiry with reference to Rs. 50,000 as to whether these debts which were liquidated by the consideration money of Rahim's kobala were incurred for family purposes. On this part of the case this witness Bhuban states this :

I do not remember if I made any inquiry as to whether these debts were incurred entirely for the benefit of the minor Durga Prosad or for family necessity, but I knew Jadunath to be acting as Karta of the family. I was acting on instructions from Jadunath as his pleader; it was not a personal question. I did not think it necessary to inquire minutely as a lender regarding family necessity and benefit of the minor etc.

Again this witness at p. 64 states this with reference to the sum of Rs. 12,000 (rupees twelve thousand) which form the subject matter of the present mortgage, and this statement throws a flood of light on the question as to whether there was a due inquiry with reference to the legal necessity in respect of the sum borrowed on the mortgage, namely in respect of Rs. 12,000. The statement is this :

As I was not a lender it was not necessary for me to enquire whether these debts were incurred for family necessity or for benefit of the minor Durga Prosad. I spoke to several creditors who at my request gave up some portion of their dues, but I cannot say how much this amounted to.

This statement shows at once that no enquiry was made with reference to the existence of the legal necessity for borrowing the sums advanced on the mortgage in question. We would hold therefore that there was no bona fide enquiry made with regard to the existence of legal necessity for the mortgage loan of Rs. 12,000 but, would hold at the same time in agreement with the Subordinate Judge that it has been shown in the account that the sum of Rs. 50,000 obtained from Abdur Rahim had, as a matter of fact, been actually spent. In this view it remains to examine whether there was legal necessity in respect of each of the items which go to make up the consideration for the mortgage and which went together to make up the sum of Rs. 12,000. (His Lordship after considering the evidence regarding the legal necessity of each item of advance proceeded.

The result therefore is that we hold that out of the sum of Rs. 12,000 which is borrowed on this mortgage there was justifying necessity for Rs 7092-0-9 and that there was no such necessity for the balance of that sum. It has been argued for the respondents that even on the view which we have taken, the mortgage transaction should be upheld in its entirety. It is argued that as it has been found that there was legal necessity for a substantial portion of Rs. 12,000 the presumption should be that there was legal necessity for the rest also and in support of this contention reliance has been placed on a number of decisions both of this Court and also of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The leading decision on this point is the recent decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 54 I A 79 (7). At the outset and before considering the contention of the respondents it becomes necessary to state the law as expounded by their Lordships in this case. The case in which the observations were made depended on the following facts : there was a sale of a joint property governed by the Mitakshara School of the Hindu law and it was proved that the purchaser had made due enquiry as to the necessity for the sale. Out of a fund of Rs. 3,500, Rs. 3,000 had been applied to purposes of necessity and that the price was adequate. The High Court made a decree setting aside the sale conditionally upon Rs. 3,000 being repaid to the purchaser. In this state of facts their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that the decree was contrary to all principle and authority and that the suit should be dismissed Lord Salvesson in delivering the judgment of their Lordships made the following significant observation which is to be found at p. 88 of the report :

This is in line with the series of decisions already referred to, in which it was held that where the purchaser acts in good faith and after due inquiry, and is able to show that the sale itself was justified by legal necessity, he is under no obligation to inquire into the application of any surplus and is, therefore, not bound to make repayment of such surplus to the members of the family challenging the sale.

There are two very important considerations which have to be kept in view in construing what their Lordships have said in the case. Before the contention of the respondent can be upheld, it must be shown that in a case of sale where the purchaser acts in good faith and after due enquiry and is able to show that the sale is justified by legal necessity, he is under no obligation to enquire into the application of that surplus. Two conditions, namely the existence of a bona fide enquiry and the existence of evidence to show that the sale itself was justified by legal necessity, must co-exist in order to attract the application of this rule to a particular case. This decision does not give countenance to the position contended for by the respondents that as soon as it is shown that there was a legal necessity for a part, the whole transaction must be upheld although the purchaser had failed to show that this was legal necessity for the remainder. But this position cannot be maintained because it appears from the clear exposition of the law in the passage to which we have referred that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee hold that the two elements must co-exist in order to attract the principle to the case, namely (1) that the purchaser has made a bona fide enquiry and (2) that the sale is justified by legal necessity.

If the contention of the respondents is given effect to, it would lead to somewhat difficult position. To take one illustration: suppose in a sale for Rs. 51,000 evidence is given to show that there was legal necessity say for Rs. 10,000, then according to the contention of the respondents the sale must be upheld although the purchaser has failed to give evidence as to the existence of legal necessity for a substantial portion of the consideration. This could not have been intended by the decision which we are just considering. It seems to us that their Lordships were laying down the rule in the circumstances that where there has been a bona fide enquiry by the purchaser as to the existence of legal necessity and if the entire consideration is not applied to the necessary purposes the purchaser is not bound to enquire as to the application of the money and is protected if he has made an enquiry only as to the existence of legal necessity. The true position laid down by this decision has been formulated by Sir Dinshah Mulla in his treatise on the Principles of Hindu Law in Art. 245 while dealing with purchase money or money raised on mortgage applied by manager in part only to purposes of legal necessity. He says this :

Cases frequently arise in which joint family property is sold by the manager of the family for legal necessity, but the whole of the price is not proved to have been applied to purposes of necessity, and the sale is challenged on that ground by the other members of the family. In such cases if the sale itself is justified by legal necessity, and the purchaser pays a fair price for the property sold, and acts in good faith and after due enquiry as to the necessity for the sale, the mere fact that part of the price is not proved to have been applied to purposes of necessity would not invalidate the sale, the purchaser not being bound to see to the application of the price. If the above conditions are satisfied the sale must be upheld unconditionally, whether the part not proved to have been applied to purposes of necessity is considerable or not.

That seems to be the correct way of reading the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case with which we are now dealing. In 54 I A 79 (7), a reference has been made of the case of 6 M I A 393 (8). There also as in the present case, the point emphasized was that the validity of the sale in cases of this kind would not depend upon the proof of the application of the sale price. The reason is that the bona fide purchaser for value is not bound to see to the application of the price paid by him. If it were otherwise he would himself have to enter into the management and direct and control the actual application of the money. In these circumstances it has been held in cases for which legal necessity has been established for a portion of the consideration that the mere fact that a consideration of the price of Rs. 712 out of Rs. 5,300, as in 27 C W N 365 (9) or of Rs. 2,000 out of Rs. 18,400 as in the case of 53 I A 204 (10) or of Rs. 38,400 out of Rs. 43,500 as in 54 I A 211 (11), is not proved to have been applied, for legal necessity is not a ground in law for setting aside the sale.

The true gist of the decisions is that there must be a bona fide enquiry by the purchaser and (if the doctrine is to apply to cases of mortgage) there must be bona fide enquiry by the lenders in order to attract the principle in 54 I A 79 (7). The other authorities which follow the decision of 54 I A 79 (7) are on the same lines. Reference has been made to the decisions of the Judicial Committee which follow this and which are 54 I A 211 (11), 32 C W N 257 (12) 61 I A 150 (13). The application of the principle, as has already been stated, must depend on the co-existence of the two elements of bona fide enquiry and the existence of necessity for a part of the consideration. There have been cases before the Judicial Committee where in the case of sale a conditional order of repayment of the portion for which there was no legal necessity was made and in this connexion we might refer to the decisions in the cases of 34 I A 72 (14) and in 35 I A 48 (15). At p. 57 of the latter report it will appear that the conveyances were not held good, but the decree for possession in that case was made conditional because it was found that the payment made by the particular respondent of portions of the consideration money were advanced for legitimate necessities. We are therefore of opinion that the contention of the respondents must fail having regard to our finding that it has not been established on evidence that there was a bona fide enquiry by the lender in the present case.

It is not necessary to express our opinion finally upon the question which has been raised in the course of the argument that the principle laid down in 54 I A 79 (7), can only apply to cases of sale and not to cases of mortgage. There is a divergence of judicial opinion on the point. The Lucknow Chief Court would seem to hold that this principle would apply to cases of sale and should not be attracted to cases of mortgage. The reason given by that Court is that it is not always possible for the father or the manager of a family to sell that share of the property which will bring in the precise sum which is wanted to clear the debts which are binding; while in the case of a mortgage he can borrow the precise amount which is required to meet the family necessity and if he mortgages for more money than is required, the sons cannot be made liable for the sum in excess of the family necessity. See the decision of the case of 4 Luck 107 (16). On the other hand the Patna High Court would seem to hold that the case of mortgage stands on the same footing as the case of sale; and the rule laid down in 54 I A 79 (7) which was a case of sale applies also to mortgage. See the decision in 8 Pat 558 (17). In the view which we have taken that this principle has no application because the bona fide enquiry required is absent, in the present case it is not necessary to express any opinion on the divergence of opinion between the Patna High Court decisions and the Oudh Chief Court decision.

The next question we have to consider is as to whether there was any necessity for borrowing the sum, for which we have found legal necessity to exist, at the high rate of interest, namely 18 per cent with nine monthly rests. The question has to be viewed in the light of what has been observed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 46 I A 145 (18). In that case their Lordships lay down that those who support a mortgage of joint family property made by the manager must prove not only that there was necessity to borrow the principal but that it was not unreasonable to borrow at some such high rate, and upon some such terms as are provided by the mortgage. Their Lordships further lay down that if the rate of interest is exorbitantly high although the security is ample, the Court can properly infer that it was unnecessarily high, and can make a mortgage decree allowing a reduced rate.

On behalf of the respondents our attention has been drawn to a number of transactions between Jadunath and Kalicharan and other creditors in which the interests varied from 9 per cent per annum with yearly rests to 15 per cent per annum with yearly rests, and in some cases with half-yearly rests. We have been referred to Ex. J at p. 127 of the second part of the paper book, Ex. 4 at p. 1, lines 35 to 45 of the second part of the paper book, Ex. A (c), which is typed in the supplementary paper-book when the interest is at the rate of 21 per cent per annum, Ex. A at p. 82 of the second part of the paper-book where the interest is at the rate of 15¹/₂ per cent per annum with half-yearly rests and some promissory notes for small sums of money ranging between Rs. 187 to Rs. 1,775 in which the interest varies from 18 per cent to 36 per cent per annum simple. Considering the facts that in this case the security is ample and that there was a long delay made in bringing the suit, we think that simple interest at the rate of 18 per cent per annum would be amply sufficient to compensate the mortgagee for the interest which he should get on the principal amount of the mortgage. As we have said that there was a real necessity for payment for the two transactions evidenced by Ex. 4, at p. 3 of the second part of the paper-book and Ex. A at p. 82 of the second part of the paper-book that there were many debts due to Bhagban Ram and Narsingh Pandey and it does not appear that there was such a high pressure from these two creditors as would justify those high rates of interest at which the sums were borrowed. The only evidence with reference to these two transactions is to be found at p. 44 of the first part of the paper-book, which is the evidence of one Jangi Ram who is the gomastha of the firm of Bhaban Ram Goga Ram. He says this :

The interest in Ex. 4 was 9 per cent per annum But I know that repeated demands were made by the maliks for the money at the time that Daroga Bazar was sold. Demands were made at our shop where Jadunath and Mahabir Prosad used to come.

It does not appear that demands had been made through Court till the institution of this suit, so as to justify the borrowing at a high rate. In these circumstances the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be varied by granting the usual mortgage decree for a sum of Rupees 7,692-0-9 with simple interest at the rate of 18 per cent per annum up to the date of three months from now. If the mortgage money be not paid with interest thereon by that date the mortgaged properties will be sold. The costs will be costs in proportion throughout. After the date fixed for redemption the interest will run at the rate of 6 (six) per cent per annum until realization. Liberty is given to the appellant to mention to this Court about the continuance of the receiver even after the decree is signed in this case.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 10 of 1935, Decided on 17th December 1935, against judgment of R. C. Mitter, J., D/- 5th March 1935.

Bengal Municipal Act (1932), S. 18 (1), Cls. (1 and 2)—Cls. 1 and 2 are disjunctive, i. e., action under one clause alone can be taken.

In sub-s. (1) of S. 18, Cls. (1) and (2) are to be read not conjunctively but disjunctively; in other words when the Local Government takes action under Cl. (1) of sub-s. (1) it is not at the same time bound to take action under Cl. (2).

Bijan Kumar Mukherji and Phani Bhusan Chakravarty—for Appellant.

Atul Chunder Gupta and Uma Sankar Sarkar—for Respondents.

S.K. Ghose, J.—This is a Letters Patent appeal from a decision of R. C. Mitter, J., and it raises a question with regard to the interpretation of S. 18, Bengal Municipal Act 1932. The question is whether in sub-s. (1) of S. 18, Cls. (1) and (2) are to be read conjunctively or disjunctively; in other words, whether when the Local Government takes action under Cl. (1) of sub-s. (1) it is at the same time bound to take action under Cl. (2). Mitter, J., agreeing with the trial Court and disagreeing with the first appellate Court, has held that the clauses are to be read disjunctively. That view is challenged in this Letters Patent appeal.

The appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that the preparation of the electoral roll of the Garulia Municipality was contrary to the provisions of S. 18. It appears that the plaintiff has been entered as a voter in a certain ward of this Municipality. By Notification No. 7017-M of 14th December 1933 the Local Government acting under sub-s. (1) of S. 18 increased the number of Commissioners from 10 to 12 and by a further notification of the same date it fixed the number of appointed Commissioners at five with the object of securing proper representation of the jute and cotton industries therein. It appears further that by a separate notification the Local Government in the exercise of its power under sub-s. (2) of S. 24 directed the preparation of electoral roll in Form A, and accordingly the electoral roll was prepared. It included the names of all voters connected with the jute and cotton industries as well as of those not so connected. The contention of the plaintiff-appellant is that as the Government increased the number of appointed Commissioners to five under Cl. (1) it was bound to direct the preparation of a special electoral roll of non-industrial voters under Cl. (2), and that such electoral roll not being prepared the election could not proceed on the basis of the general electoral roll. This is a point which was argued before Mitter, J., and having perused his judgment and listened to the arguments on both sides, we may say at once that we are in entire agreement with the opinion of our learned brother. The points may be briefly indicated: It is noteworthy that the word "may" occurring in the first part of sub-s. (1) of S. 18 governs Cl. (1) as also Cl. (2) in other words, it is optional with the Local Government to take action under Cl. (1) and it is also optional with the Local Government to take action under Cl. (2). There is nothing to indicate that, where Government does take action under Cl. (1) it is bound to proceed to take action under Cl. (2), as Mitter, J., has pointed out. If the contrary had been the intention of the legislature one would expect the words "and shall" to occur before the first word "provide" in Cl. (2).

The second point is that the third provision, which is in the words "and the Local Government may further provide for election by general electorates in any portion of such Municipality", applies not merely to Cl. (2), but also to Cl. (1). This is confirmed not only by the position of the clause I have quoted, but also by the re-appearance of the word "may" going to show that it is an independent provision which applies not to only one of the two clauses aforesaid, but to both of them. Therefore it follows that if the Government chooses to take action under Cl. (1) it may further provide for election by general electorates, and it may also do the same thing if it chooses to take action under Cl. (2) or if it chooses to take action under both the clauses. There has been some argument as to the word "portion." It has been contended for the appellant that the expression "portion of such municipality" does not refer to a local area; but this is inconsistent with the definition of the word "municipality" occurring in S. 3, sub-s. (34) which shows that the word means "any place in which this Act, or any part thereof, is in force."

The next point is that Cl. (1) of sub-s. (1) of S. 18 contains two separate provisions under either of which action can be taken namely, first, that the Government may increase the number of appointed Commissioners beyond the proportion mentioned in S. 16 and secondly that the Government may constitute industrial constituencies. The learned advocate for the appellant in this Court appeared to us to argue that Cl. (2) would be a necessary corollary to Cl. (1) because if industrial constituencies were formed it would be necessary also to form electoral constituencies for the representation of inhabitants who were not directly connected with industries. This argument may have some force; but, on the other hand, where action is taken on the first part of Cl. (1), i. e. where the only action taken is to increase the number of appointed Commissioners, as has been done in the present case, it is difficult to see how the argument on the basis of the corollary applies. The Government may only increase the number of appointed Commissioners and it may further provide for election by a general electorate and that may amount to the representation of all the inhabitants. There has been some argument about double representation as Mitter, J. has pointed out. That is a question of policy but it may be pointed out that double representation is not so objectionable as non-representation.

Then it is pointed out that the electoral roll was not specifically prepared under S. 18, sub-s. (3), and it is contended that it is a self-contained section. It is apparent that S. 18 is an exception to S. 16. In terms it is so; and it does provide a self-contained rule for the preparation of electoral rolls under certain circumstances. But, as Mitter, J. has pointed out, the circumstances may be such that the same set of rules framed by the Local Government will apply to S. 16 or to S. 18. In the present case rules have been actually framed under S. 24, sub-s. (2) and there is no reference either to S. 16, sub-s. (1) or to S. 18, sub-s. (2). The argument therefore has no force. There is no reason why we should take a view of S. 18 different from that taken by Mitter, J. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Order.— It appears from the records of the two cases that the right, title and interest of the petitioner Osman in revision case 157 and that of the petitioner Badsha in the other revision case in the disputed plots were extinguished by the auction sales at which Khanda Sundari Debi purchased them. The trying Magistrate has found that the complainant in the two cases grew the crops which were removed by the accused petitioner. The learned Sessions Judge has not reversed the findings of the trying Magistrate. Even if it be assumed that the accused grew the crops, they, being trespassers, had no right to remove them after the real owner got actual possession of the lands through the civil Court in pursuance of the orders of the civil Court under Cl. 6 (iii), S. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act read with O. 21, R. 35, Civil P. C. The writs of possession issued by the civil Court clearly show that possession of the whole of the disputed lands was delivered to Debendra Chandra Lahiri, one of the co-sharer landlords without any objection from the other co-sharer landlords. In the face of the order of the civil Court it is not open to the criminal Court to adjudicate upon the rights of the landlords as between themselves. The petitioners were therefore rightly convicted. The rules are accordingly discharged.

Judgment.— The plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, prayed for the enforcement of an equitable mortgage. The plaintiff's case was that defendants 1 and 2 executed a hand-note in her favour on 30th March 1932 and on the same date deposited title deeds of certain properties as security for the loan on the hand-note, thus creating an equitable mortgage in her favour. A memorandum was said to have been executed by the defendants 1 and 2 evidencing the fact of the deposit of title deeds. The case of the plaintiffs was that the memorandum executed by the defendants 1 and 2 had somehow passed into the hands of defendants 4 and 5 who it was alleged had succeeded in obtaining a collusive mortgage bond executed by defendants 1, 2 and 3 in their favour on 16th December 1932. It is necessary to mention in this connexion that the properties covered by the title deeds deposited by defendants 1 and 2 on 30th March 1932, were the same as those hypothecated by the three defendants 1, 2 and 3 in the mortgage deed executed by them in favour of defendants 4 and 5 on 30th March 1932. The claim of the plaintiff in the suit was at first resisted by defendants 1, 2, 4 and 5 in the suit: but in view of the events that subsequently happened, it is not necessary for the purpose of this appeal to consider the case of the defendants other than defendants 4 and 5. These defendants asserted that a mortgage by defendant 1 of an undivided share of property belonging to a joint family governed by the Mitakshara school of Hindu Law was invalid in law; further that there was partition amongst defendants 1 and 3 (husband and wife) and their co-sharers, by virtue of which defendant 3 (the wife) acquired interest jointly with defendant 1 in respect of one of the items of property of which the title deeds were deposited with the plaintiff, on 30th March 1932. As to the nature of the transaction in favour of the plaintiff, it was pleaded in defence by defendants 4 and 5 that the memo referred to by the plaintiff in her plaint, did not and could not constitute and create any equitable mortgage; that it was inadmissible for want of registration, and further that as the memo constituted the bargain between the parties, no oral evidence of the transaction was admissible under the law. The case for the defence was that the memo. had been suppressed by the plaintiff with an object, and a false statement was purposely made that it had passed into the hands of the defendants. The contesting defendants asserted that the mortgage in their favour executed by defendants 1, 2 and 3 on 16th December 1932 was a valid mortgage, and should prevail over the equitable mortgage by defendants 1 and 2 in favour of the plaintiff and alleged to have been created on 30th March 1932. The Court of first instance dismissed the plaint as against the defendants 4 and 5. On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned Additional District Judge, 24 Parganas, reversed the decision of the trial Court, and passed a preliminary decree in favour of the plaintiff on the footing of an equitable mortgage created in her favour by the defendants 1 and 2, directing the sale of the mortgaged properties specified in the plaint, on failure to pay the mortgage debt within the period of grace allowed by the Court. The defendants 4 and 5 appealed to this Court. The questions raised in support of this appeal on evidence in the case, and on the findings arrived at by the Courts below, were many and various, in view of the different matters in controversy between the parties concerned: the plaintiff on the one hand and the contesting defendants 4 and 5, the appellants in this Court, on the other. The main points, however, which arise for consideration are two in number; and we proceed to deal with them.

1. In view of the pleadings of the parties, the memorandum the contents of which were proved by evidence and regard being had to the conclusions arrived at by the Court of appeal below on materials placed before the Court, we are definitely of opinion that the memorandum which was a part of the transaction evidencing an equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds, was only the record of a completed transaction, and did not constitute a bargain as to the deposit of title deeds. The memorandum as such did not require registration, and the learned Judge in the Court of appeal below was right in holding that oral evidence as to the deposit of title deeds was admissible in evidence. Evidence was rightly admitted on this part of the case; and the conclusions on evidence arrived at by the Judge have to be accepted by us. There was, in the above view of the case before us, an equitable mortgage created by defendants 1 and 2 in favour of the plaintiff. On 30th March 1932, by deposit of title deeds; and the mortgage thus created was operative to the extent of the interests in the properties to which, the mortgagors, defendants 1 and 2, had title, and to that extent only. The mortgagee could not claim any title higher than the one the mortgagors had in the different items of property covered by the title deeds deposited with the plaintiff.

2. The question that arises for consideration next, is whether the plaintiff could be allowed to have a mortgage decree against property which was owned by defendants 1 and 3 jointly, by virtue of a partition between the members of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu law. The fact of the partition was clearly established, and has been found by the Court of appeal below. On the terms of the partition deed Ex. B, in the case, it was beyond controversy, and it was definitely held by the trial Court, that the property which was the subject of the equitable mortgage by defendant 1 was allotted on partition to the defendants 1 and 3 jointly, their share having been left undefined and undetermined. Defendant 3 was not a mortgagor so far as the equitable mortgage in suit was concerned. On the materials on the record and on the conclusions arrived at by the trial Court referred to above, which have not been reversed by the Court of appeal below, the plaintiff was not entitled to get a mortgage decree in respect of properties Ka, Kha and Ga of the plaintiff, so as to bind the interest of defendant 3 who was no party to this equitable mortgage in favour of the plaintiff; the decree as passed by the Court of appeal below cannot therefore be upheld. In the above view of the case before us, and as a result of the decision arrived at by us, as indicated above, this appeal must be allowed, and we direct accordingly. The decree passed by the learned Additional District Judge, in the Court of appeal below, is varied to this extent, that in default of payment of the decretal amount with interest at the rate mentioned in the handnote executed by the defendants 1 and 2 in the plaintiff's favour on 30th March 1932, and thereafter at 6 per cent per annum until realization, the right, title and interest of defendants 1 and 2 in the mortgaged property specified in the plaintiff will be sold for realization of the decretal debt, and that the right, title and interest of defendant 3 in the mortgaged property existing at the time of the mortgage in favour of defendants 4 and 5 on 16th December 1932 will not be affected by such a sale. In the circumstances of the case we make no order as to costs. The parties are to bear their own costs throughout the litigation including the costs in this appeal.

Appeal No. 1825 of 1933, Decided on 12th December 1935.

(a) Promissory Note—Insufficiently stamped—Promissory note inadmissible in evidence—Plaintiff can sue on implied promise to pay, which is independent of promissory note.

If a promissory note is not admissible in evidence on account of it being insufficiently stamped, the plaintiff is entitled to sue on a cause of action which is independent of promissory note. It is not necessary that there should be an independent express contract prior to the execution of such a promissory note. The fact that the money has been lent implies a promise to repay it, and the plaintiff in such a case has a cause of action on the implied promise, which is independent of the promissory note: 39 C W N 1235 and S. A. No. 1483 of 1933, Foll. [P 128 C 1]

(b) Bengal Money Lenders Act (7 of 1933), S. 3—S 3 merely raises presumption that rate of interest exceeding 25 per cent is excessive—It does not forbid Court to grant in any circumstance interest at rate more than 25 per cent, in case of loan given before passing of Act—Lender can rebut presumption by evidence.

Section 3 only raises a presumption that a rate of interest exceeding 25 per cent is excessive and that the transaction was harsh and unconscionable and is substantially unfair. It does not say that if any loan before the passing of the Act was given, the Court shall not in any circumstances allow interest at a rate more than 25 per cent per month, if the loan is unsecured. The section raises a presumption of fact which the lender can by evidence rebut.

(c) Second Appeal—Question of law—Suit for recovery of money—Point that claim for interest should be limited to 25 per cent by reason of S. 3, Bengal Money Lenders Act, is not pure question of law.

A point that the claim for interest in a suit for recovery of money, should be limited to 25 per cent. by reason of provisions of S. 3, Bengal Money Lenders Act, is not a pure question of law because it involves the determination of a question of fact to be decided in evidence which may be led by the creditor to rebut the presumption arising under S. 3 and cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time in second appeal. G. C. Sen, Dwijendra Krishna Dutt and Biswa Nath Naskar—for Appellants.

A. N. Bose, Ramendra Mohan Mazumdar and Abinash Chandra Ghose—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The appeal is on behalf of defendants 3, 4 and 8 in a suit instituted by the plaintiff to recover from them and other defendants a sum of Rs. 800. The Court of first instance passed a decree against the other defendants but dismissed the suit against defendants 3, 4 and 8; but the lower appellate Court has modified that decree and has given a decree to the plaintiff against all the defendants, hence this appeal by defendants 3, 4 and 8. The plaintiff came to Court with a case that the defendants borrowed from him a sum of Rs. 400 on 31st January 1930. On that date the defendants executed a promissory note in favour of the plaintiff, but the said promissory note being insufficiently stamped has not been admitted in evidence. The plaintiff accordingly based this case on the original consideration. The Court of appeal below has found that a sum of Rs. 400 was in fact taken as a loan by all the defendants from the plaintiff. This finding has been arrived at by the lower appellate Court independently of the promissory note as the lower appellate Court has expressly stated at line 10, p. 5 of the paper-book. Mr. Sen on behalf of the appellant has raised two points before me, namely, (1) that the promissory note being out of the way, the plaintiff cannot sue inasmuch as the advance of the money and the execution of the promissory note were contemporaneous; and (2) that the Court below ought not to have granted interest at a rate more than 25 per cent, the stipulation in the promissory note being at the rate of 75 per cent per annum. Regarding the first point I do not find any substance in it. It has been laid down in this Court that if a promissory note is inadmissible in evidence on account of it being insufficiently stamped, the plaintiff is entitled to sue on a cause of action which is independent of promissory note.

It is not necessary that there should be an independent express contract prior to the execution of such a promissory note. The fact that the money has been lent implies a promise to repay it, and the plaintiff in such a case has a cause of action on the implied promise which is independent of the promissory note. This is the view which has been taken in 39 C W N 1235 (1), and that is also the effect of my judgment pronounced in Second Appeal No. 1483 of 1933 (2), delivered on 16th August 1935. For this reason I overrule the first contention of Mr. Sen. In support of his second contention Mr. Sen relies on the provisions of S. 3, Bengal Money Lenders Act of 1933. Before dealing with this point, it is necessary to state the following facts: the plaintiff's dues at the date of the suit came up to Rs. 1,150 on a calculation of the interest at the rate of Rs. 75 per cent per annum, but he gave up his claim for Rs. 350 and he limited his claim to a sum of Rs. 800 only, that is to say Rs. 400 on account of principal and Rs. 400 on account of interest. The loan was taken before the Bengal Money Lenders Act came into force. The judgments of both the Courts below were pronounced before the said Act came into force. Accordingly there is no indication of this point in any of the judgments for the obvious reason that it was not raised in the Courts below and could not have been raised because the Act came into force after the judgments. Mr. Sen urges that the claim for interest ought to be limited to 25 per cent per annum. I am unable to give effect to his contention for this reason that even if S. 3, Bengal Money Lenders Act, is applicable to the facts of this case, which I doubt very much, because S. 3 only raises a presumption that a rate of interest exceeding 25 per cent. is excessive and the transaction was harsh and unconscionable and is substantially unfair. That section does not say that if any loan before the passing of the Bengal Money Lenders Act was given, the Court shall not in any circumstance allow interest at a rate more than 25 per cent per annum if the loan is unsecured. This section raises a presumption of fact which the lender can by evidence rebut. The point therefore which is raised for the first time, is not a pure question of law because it involves the determination of a question of fact to be decided on evidence which may be led by the creditor to rebut the said presumption. This the plaintiff had no opportunity to do. For this reason I am unable to allow Mr. Sen to urge this point here.

I also very much doubt whether the provisions of S. 3 can be applied to a case where the decision of the trial Court was given before the Bengal Money Lenders Act came into force. This is the view taken with regard to S. 4, Bengal Money Lenders Act, by a Division Bench of this Court in 39 C W N 1213 (3), and I am of opinion that the reason given in that judgment for not applying the provisions of S. 4 to a case where the loan had been incurred before the Act came into force, and the decision of the trial Court was given before the Act came into force, is equally applicable to a case where the provisions of S. 3 are involved. For these reasons I hold that the decree passed by the lower appellate Court is correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Waiver—Benefit to sole person can be waived but not when it is for protection of another or based on public policy—Deposit inadequate—Zamindar cannot waive it by giving consent.

As a general rule it is no doubt true that a person can waive a benefit intended solely for him, and it would make no difference whether such benefit is conferred on him by contract or by statute. It is equally well settled that if such a provision made in a statute, though for his benefit, is also intended for the benefit of or protection of the interest of others or is based on public policy, there can be no scope for the application of the principle of waiver. By a sale of a patni under the regulation the auction purchaser acquires very valuable rights. Hence there is no scope for the application of the principle of waiver in applying S. 14-A of the Patni Regulation and the mere statement by the zamindar that he has no objection to set aside the sale will not cure the illegality of shortage of deposit. Mukherjee and Kshetra Nath Chatterjee for Kshitindra Kumar Mitter—for Petitioner.Panchanon Ghose and Joygopal Ghose—for Opposite Parties.

Order.—The petitioner before me is the auction-purchaser of a patni sold under the provisions of Regn. 8 of 1819. The only question involved in this rule is whether the learned Subordinate Judge, to whom a reference was made by the Collector under S. 14-A, Cl. 5, of the Patni Regulation, was justified in setting aside the sale under the provisions of S. 14-A of the said regulation. The opposite party 1 who was the patnidar defaulted in paying the patni rent for the year 1341 B. S. The Mukherjees who are the zamindars, through their manager, their estate being under the charge of the Court of Wards, applied to the Collector for sale under the Regulation on 16th April 1935. In the said application the claim made on behalf of the zamindars was laid at Rs. 527-15-5 gds. On 15th May 1935 the Collector held the sale and at that sale the petitioner purchased the patni. On 13th June 1935 the defaulting patnidar deposited the sum of Rs. 560-15-5

gds. in the Collectorate for enabling him to set aside the sale under the provisions of S. 14-A of the said Regulation. The auction-purchaser having opposed his prayer the Collector made a reference to the learned Subordinate Judge.

It is admitted that the deposit made by the defaulting patnidar has fallen short by a certain amount, namely the amount due on account of interest from the date of the sale to the date of deposit. Having regard to my decision in the case of 39 C W N 516 (1) which has since been approved by a Division Bench in Civil Revision No. 934 of 1934 decided on 24th May 1935, it is conceded by the opposite party 1, that the above mentioned shortage in the amount deposited would ordinarily be fatal to his prayer for setting aside the sale, but it is contended on his behalf that as the zamindar has consented to the sale being set aside, it should be held otherwise. To be more precise the argument is that the deposit required under Cl. (b) of S. 14-A being intended for the benefit of the zamindar it is open to the zamindar to waive the requirements of the said clause, and as in fact he has waived the same by giving his consent to the sale being set aside, the Court should ignore the deficiency in the amount deposited. On the application which was made on 13th June 1935 by the defaulting patnidar to the Collector for setting aside an authorized agent of the zamindars made an endorsement to the following effect: "I have no objection to the sale being set aside. D. N. Roy Chaudhury, R. A. for zamindars."

The learned Subordinate Judge distinguished 39 C W N 516 (1), on the ground that the zamindar had not in that case "consented in writing" to the sale being set aside. No doubt in that case the zamindar had not consented in writing, but in this Court his advocate had in fact said that he had no objection to the sale being set aside. The learned Subordinate Judge has dealt with the case before him in the following way. I quote the words:

It is true that the interest up to date of deposit (from the date of sale) has not been deposited. But this amount was required to be paid for payment to the zamindar. If the zamindar says that he got the amount either expressly or impliedly I think that the non-payment of the amount in Court would not matter. If it had been deposited, the zamindar would have taken it. If the zamindar says that he has got it that is enough compliance with the provisions of S. 14-A of the Patni Regulation. The zamindar by giving his consent to the sale being set aside said in substance that all payments required to be made for setting aside of the sale have been made.

This is the ratio on which the learned Subordinate Judge purports to make his order by which he has set aside the sale. I do not quite follow the learned Subordinate Judge. Whether the receipt of payment out of Court by the zamindar from the defaulting patnidar within thirty days of the sale of any amount covered by Cl. (b), S. 14-A would dispense with the deposit of the same in the Collectorate is a question which need not be considered in this case. All I say for the present is that for the consideration of the said question the marked difference between that clause and sub-s. 1, Cl. (b), O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C., will have to be considered. But in this case before me there is no allegation or proof that any amount was paid by the defaulting patnidar to the zamindar amicably i. e., out of Court, within thirty days of the sale. In such circumstances and where the auction-purchaser is a stranger, even if the zamindar were to say expressly that "all payments required to be made for the setting aside of the sale have been made" the Court or the Collector, as the case may be, would not be right in setting aside the sale, if in fact the money deposited in the Collectorate or the money paid to the zamindar amicably plus the money deposited, fall short of the amounts required to be put in under S. 14-A. I am here assuming that payment to the zamindar amicably of the money required to be deposited under Cl. (b), S. 14-A is a sufficient compliance. The auction-purchaser had acquired a valuable right by his purchase and in my judgment the views of the zamindar on the question of law or the question of rights of the auction-purchaser—it amounts to that—ought not to influence the decision of the Court in favour of the defaulting patnidar.

This leads me to the question of waiver raised before me. As a general rule it is no doubt true that a person can waive a benefit intended solely for him, and it would make no difference whether such benefit is conferred on him by contract or by statute. It is equally well settled that if such a provision made in a statute though for his benefit, is also intended for the benefit of or protection of the interest of others or is based on public policy, there can be no scope for the application of the principle of waiver. By a sale of a patni under the regulation the auction-purchaser acquires very valuable rights. Before the introduction of S. 14-A in the Regulation by the recent amendment the rights acquired by him could not have been challenged except in the manner provided for in S. 14. S. 14-A by providing another mode for setting aside a sale has to a certain extent encroached upon the rights which he enjoyed before. That section can be looked at from another point of view also. The limitations prescribed in that section, e. g., the time for deposit and the amount also, are intended for the protection of his interest. In this view of the matter I do hold that there is no scope for the application of the principle of waiver. On the facts also I hold that no case of waiver by the zamindar has been established. The zamindar's authorized agent simply stated that the zamindars had no objection to the sale being set aside. The zamindars have not admittedly received payment of the interest on the arrears from the date of sale to the date of deposit, and there is nothing on the record to show that they have given up their claim to such interest.

The rule is accordingly made absolute, the order of the learned Subordinate Judge is set aside and the sale confirmed. As the case is a hard one for opposite party 1, I direct the parties to bear their respective costs throughout.

Rule made absolute.

Appeal No. 1192 of 1932, Decided on 5th April 1935, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, Third Court, Comilla, D/- 29th February 1932.

Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 54—Unregistered kobala, purporting to transfer immoveable property of value of less than Rs. 100, is admissible in evidence for collateral purpose of showing nature of possession, although it does not confer title.

The reference in S. 49, Registration Act, is not applicable to the provisions of S. 54, T. P.

Act. S. 49 does not make a document purporting to transfer a tangible immoveable property of value of less than Rs. 100 inadmissible in evidence. [P 131 C 2]

An unregistered kobala purporting to transfer immoveable property of value of less than Rs. 100 does not come within the terms of S. 17, Registration Act, and the provisions of S. 49 of the Act do not apply to such a case. Such a document therefore although it does not confer title, is admissible in evidence for the collateral purposes of showing the nature of possession: 1921 Mad 337 and 1928 All 726, Foll.; 1929 P C 269, Disting. [P 131 C 2]

Syed Farhat Ali—for Appellant.

Sudhir K. Kastgir—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Tipperah, allowing an appeal from the Court of the Munsif Kasba, which dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The question for determination is the title to a plot of land which originally belonged to Jainuddin and which the plaintiff bought from his three sons in Magh 1335 B. S. The defendant claims it on the ground that Jainuddin's widow and son mortgaged the land to him and put him in possession in lieu of paying interest, and finally sold it to him in 1320 B. S. The kobala by which this sale was effected was not registered and the learned Munsif in the trial Court held that it was inadmissible in evidence as a title deed, but could be admitted to show the nature and character of the defendant's possession since its date.

He held further that the plaintiff had not proved that his vendors had been in possession within 12 years of the date of the kobala and that the defendant had been in adverse possession for more than 12 years. The lower appellate Court found that there was no transfer of possession and therefore no sale to the defendant and that was conceded by his pleader in the trial Court. It was held however that the unregistered kobala could not be used to prove adverse possession, and that in the absence of such proof the plaintiff's title prevailed.

The property in dispute is tangible immoveable property of a value less than Rs. 100 and a sale can be effected under the provisions of S. 54, para. 3, T. P. Act, either by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property. S. 4, T. P. Act, provides that this paragraph shall be read as "supplemental to" the Registration Act, and the question has arisen whether an instrument of sale of tangible immoveable property of a value less than Rs. 100 must be treated as being compulsorily registrable as coming within the provisions of S. 17, Registration Act.

A Full Bench of the Madras High Court in 44 Mad 55 (1) and a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in 50 All 986 (2), have held that however illogical it may seem the words used do not incorporate the provision of the Transfer of Property Act into S. 17, Registration Act, and the result is that the reference in S. 49, Registration Act, cannot be deemed to be applicable to the provisions of S. 54, Transfer of Property Act, and S. 49 does not make such a document inadmissible in evidence.

Section 54, T. P. Act, does however provide that the transfer must be made either by a registered instrument or by delivery of possession. The kobala is not registered and therefore cannot confer title, but on the authority of the above cases it would be admissible for the collateral purpose of showing the nature of possession. The learned Subordinate Judge has relied on the Privy Council decision in 33 C W N 1150 (3). The instrument in that case was held definitely to come within the terms of S. 17, Registration Act, so that the provisions of S. 49 of that Act were applicable. As I have already pointed out the instrument in the present case is not incorporated into S. 17, Registration Act.

Once the kobala is admitted in evidence to show the nature of the defendant's possession it is difficult to find any fault with the decision that the defendant had been in adverse possession of the land for an uninterrupted period of 12 years. The appeal is allowed with costs both here and in the lower appellate Court and the suit must be dismissed.

Arthur Charsley Thomas—Defendant.

Suit No. 1830 of 1934, Decided on 15th July 1935.

Contempt of Court—Charge of—Charge of deliberately withholding documents—It must be proved that there are documents which have been deliberately withheld—Mere suspicion is not sufficient.

To establish a charge of contempt of Court, it is essential to prove that there are in the case other documents which have been deliberately withheld by the person charged. Mere suspicion, although very deep is not sufficient to establish a charge of contempt of Court.

S. C. Roy and Nagon Bose—for Plaintiff.

B. C. Ghose—for Defendant.

Order.—This is an application to commit Mr. Arthur Charsley Thomas for contempt of Court. Mr. Thomas was the defendant in an action for dissolution of partnership. Dissolution has been decreed and a reference has been held in which the accounts of the partnership are being considered and the assets determined. The partnership traded under the name of Golden Reef Mining Syndicate, and its operative headquarters were at Patkum in the District of Manbhum. In December 1932 Mr. Thomas and one Teluram Agarwalla started prospecting for gold and in February and March 1933 they acquired prospecting licenses from the guardian of the minor zamindar of the Patkum estate. In December 1933 Teluram left, and a partnership was started between Thomas and the plaintiff in this suit Sitaram Khemka. Thomas was to have 2/3rd share and Sitaram 1/3rd. On 20th February 1934 prospecting licenses were renewed, and some eight months later machinery was in operation at Patkum. It is suggested that on an average 40 to 50 tons of ores were crushed daily which yielded a high percentage of gold. On 20th November 1934 an order was made by this Court in the suit appointing the Official Receiver interim receiver of the business called the "Golden Reef Mining Syndicate" and its assets and of the gold field, machinery and other accessories at Patkum and all books of account at the office of the said business at 7, Old Post Office Street, Calcutta, and at Patkum.

On 10th December 1934, there was a reference to arbitration and two members of the Bar were appointed Receivers in place of the Official Receiver. A consent petition was made in connexion with the order. The petition is said to be the petition of the plaintiff, and in para. 11 there is a statement: "The defendant consents to this petition," and it is also signed by the defendant at the conclusion under the words "I consent." Para. 6 of that petition refers to the order appointing the Official Receiver and states that:

The Official Receiver had been to No. 7, Old Post Office Street, Calcutta, to take possession of all the books of account there, but the Official Receiver could not take possession of any books of account as there were no books of account at the said office.

Para. 7 states that as negotiations for settlement were going on between the parties your petitioner did not take any further steps and did not take any steps to put the Official Receiver in possession of the books of account and the assets, machinery and properties of the said partnership at Patkum.

On 21st December 1934, there was a meeting before the Receivers, the minutes of which state that after hearing the parties the Receivers directed that within three weeks from that date Mr. Thomas should deliver the books of account and documents relating to the partnership in his possession to the Joint Receivers. Mr. Thomas was also directed to make a list of machinery, etc., at the mines and deliver that list to the Receivers. On 17th April 1935 an application was made that Mr. Thomas be committed to jail for contempt, and that he do forthwith deliver up possession of the partnership to the Receivers together with all papers, books of account, etc., relating to the said partnership. On 27th April 1935 Mr. Thomas made an affidavit stating that he was unable to comply with the order owing to illness. I will refer to this affidavit more fully later. An order was then made by this Court that Mr. Thomas should on or before the 10th of May deliver up to the Receivers possession of all the partnership assets referred in the previous order together with all papers, memoranda, writings and documents relating to the partnership business, and should also file affidavit of documents. On 9th May 1935 Mr. Thomas filed his affidavit of documents containing a statement of accounts, but disclosing no books of accounts.

On 6th June the present application was filed. The petition by the plaintiff Sitaram Khemka sets out the above facts and in para. 11 there are set out the charges on which the present application is based. The charges relate to five matters. Failure to deliver (1) account books; (2) assay books and assay reports; (3) a diary book alleged to have been kept by the defendant; (4) 3 prospecting licenses; and (5) a German map and another map of the mines said to contain details of the mining area and the reefs and other relevant matters. The matter came before Ameer Ali, J., who directed that Mr. Thomas and Mr. Biswas, his accountant, should appear before the Court and be examined orally. They were examined by Ameer Ali, J., and they have now been cross-examined before me. The main charge relates to the failure to disclose accounts. Thomas has put in a statement of accounts, and after a certain amount of correspondence he has informed the Receivers on 9th May that there were no separate books of the partnership, but that the statement which he had put in was based on the books of two companies, the Dorgbun Trust Limited which is an English Company and the Island Trust Limited which is an Indian Company. The minutes of the 9th May contain the following entry:

Mr. Thomas says that no cash ledger or journal of the partnership were kept, but there is a statement of accounts compiled from the books of the companies whose money was borrowed for the purpose of running the partnership business. The items in the statement of accounts filed can be checked and verified from the books of these companies.

That offer was repeated in a letter of the 17th May by Mr. Thomas's Solicitor to the Solicitors for the plaintiff. (His Lordship then discussed the evidence and proceeded.) With regard to all the charges excepting those relating to the accounts I find that they are based on supposition, and there is nothing really to support them in view of the denials which have been made by Mr. Thomas and Mr. Biswas and in the supporting affidavits. With regard to the accounts, on the other hand, there is a mass of material which raises the deepest suspicion. I have referred in detail to the fact that it was only at the very last moment that Mr. Thomas stated that there were no accounts of the partnership business other than accounts of the Dorgbun Trust and the Island Trust from which the materials required in the reference could be gathered. The witnesses originally swore that these books contained only accounts relating to the mining syndicate, but Biswas was forced to admit that it was incorrect. The list of liabilities and the dues to store suppliers are not taken from the accounts of these companies as has been admitted in the witness box by the accountant. Mr. Thomas in the witness box was a thoroughly unsatisfactory witness. He fenced with most questions and created an extremely bad impression. He professed absolute ignorance of the accounts, but when his attention was directed to them he found little difficulty in following and in answering the question, quickly if the answer was in his favour, but with considerable difficulty if he did not consider that the answer would be satisfactory from his point of view.

From the material which has been placed before me, it appears to me that the petitioner was amply justified on the respondent's own statements in supposing that there are other accounts that Mr. Thomas had knowledge of, and access to, the other accounts, and that he was evading disclosing them to the Court. This raises the deepest suspicion, but it is not sufficient to establish a charge of contempt of Court. To establish such charges it is essential to prove that in fact there are in this case other documents which had been deliberately withheld. That, in my opinion, has not been established, and this application must be dismissed. In view, however, of the attitude which has been taken up by Mr. Thomas throughout, I direct that he should pay the costs of this application as of a hearing.

Judgment.—This is a suit for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 18,000 odd stated in the concise statement to be due from the defendants to the plaintiff firm on the khotor patta account and for costs. The defendants are said to be members of a joint Mitakshara Hindu family who carried on business under the name of Ramdas Bhagwan Das. There were various loans and adjustments alleged and the sum which is claimed is the sum which is said to be due after giving credit for moneys received. The plaint was filed on 21st November 1934. A written statement was put in on behalf of defendants 2, 4, 5, 10, 11 and 12. Another written statement was put in on behalf of defendants 1, 3 and 9, both on 4th April 1935. There was also a written statement on behalf of certain minor defendants. About 20th May the plaintiff firm applied to amend their plaint by adding details of certain transactions and by referring to the defendants as a Mitakshara joint family and not as a firm. The order was made and it was further ordered that the adult defendants should be at liberty within 7 days from date of their receiving a copy of the amended plaint to file such additional written statement in the suit as may be rendered necessary in consequence of the aforesaid amendment. A copy of the amended plaint was sent to the defendants' attorney on 9th May, and thereafter the attorneys for the plaintiff firm reminded the defendants on more than one occasion that the time to file other additional written statements had expired. No written statement was in fact filed until the suit came on for hearing today. Mr. Suhrawardy then on behalf of the defendants asked for leave to file the additional written statements, and Mr. Bose on behalf of the plaintiff firm stated that he objected to their being filed but that he was not willing to take an adjournment if I felt disposed to admit the additional written statements. In those additional written statements the plea was taken that the suit as framed is not maintainable and that the business of Ramdas Bhagwan Das was a joint family business and not a contractual partnership.

On the defendant being called upon to propose issues, the first issue suggested by Mr. Suhrawardy was that the suit was not maintainable inasmuch as it was a partnership firm and had not been registered under S. 58, Partnership Act. This section provides how registration may be effected and S. 69 (2) provides:

No suit to enforce a right arising from a contract shall be instituted in any Court by or on behalf of a firm against any third party unless the firm is registered and the persons suing are or have been shown in the Register of Firms as partners in the firm.

There is nothing to show that the plaintiff firm is a partnership firm, but that has not been denied before me and it is clear that the plaint refers throughout to the plaintiff as "the plaintiff firm." S. 4, Partnership Act, defines a partnership firm and says that persons who have entered into partnership with one another are called individually partners and collectively a firm, and there is no doubt that the plaintiffs have referred to themselves as a firm, and it must be presumed, even in the absence of evidence, that they are persons who have entered into partnership with one another and are a partnership firm. It was contended that S. 69 was not applicable inasmuch as the transactions which were the subject matter of this suit had all taken place prior to 1st October 1933. The materiality of that date is by reason of S. 1 (3), Partnership Act 9 of 1932 which provides that:

The act shall come into force on the first day of October 1932, except S. 69, which shall come into force on the 1st day of October 1933.

The meaning of that provision seems to me perfectly clear, namely that after 1st October 1933 S. 69 will become operative and that a firm which is not registered and which sues to enforce a right arising from a contract shall be non-suited. Now, this view has already been taken by a Division Bench of this Court in 39 C W N 67 (1). It is further contended that the additional written statements should not be admitted to raise a question of this nature which was never foreshadowed either in the original written statement or in the amended written statement; and reliance is placed on the order made by Ameer Ali, J., granting leave to file an additional written statement, and limiting such additional pleas to those which may be rendered necessary in consequence of the amendment of the plaint. It is contended with justice that the amendment of the plaint did not necessitate a plea that the suit as framed is not maintainable. Mr. Suhrawardy for the defendants however contends that the additional written statement has been admitted, and that even if it had not been admitted, this is a question which goes to the root of the suit and it is a question of which the Court must take cognizance when brought to its notice. He further contends that it is a matter which he has the power to raise at any time, and in support of this contention he relies on the decision of the Privy Council in 52 I A 126 (2). At page 128, Lord Sumner, delivering the judgment of the Board, states that their attention had been drawn to a provision of the Stamp Act. "This section," he says, had not been pleaded by the defendants in the suit, for their general plea No. 10. 'Lastly the defendant company submits that the suit of the plaintiff firm is not maintainable' cannot be read as raising a specific statutory answer. Their Lordships were informed that the point was not discussed in either Court below, . . .

1. Surendra Nath De v. Manohar De, 1934 Cal 754=153 I C 671=62 Cal 213=39 C W N 67.
2. Surajmall Nagarmall v. Triton Insurance Co., 1925 P C 83=86 I C 545=52 I A 126=52 Cal 408 (PC).

and the result has been that the effect of this section was not considered until the case came before their Lordship's Board.

The suggestion may be at once dismissed that it is too late now to raise the section as an answer to the claim. No Court can enforce as valid that which competent enactments have declared shall not be valid, nor is obedience to such an enactment a thing from which a Court can be dispensed by the consent of parties, or by a failure to plead or to argue the point at the outset:

and reference is made to (1867) 2 Ex 333 (3):

The enactment is prohibitory. It is not confined to affording a party a protection of which he may avail himself or not as he pleased.

His Lordship concludes:

To allow the suit to proceed in defiance of S. 7 would defeat the provisions of the law laid down therein.

The reasoning and the decision which was come to by the Board in regard to the provisions of the Stamp Act in that appeal appear to me entirely applicable to the argument which has now been raised with regard to the provisions of the Partnership Act. In the circumstances, I am deciding on this preliminary issue that the suit is not maintainable in its present form. I adjourn the further hearing to enable the plaintiffs to consider their position.

Issacs, Cammiade and Sachin Choudhury—for Defendants 1 and 2.

Judgment.—These three suits have been heard together as their decision depends on the same facts. The main suit has been brought by Nishi Kanta Sarkar (to whom I shall refer as the plaintiff) against Sir David Ezra and Mr. Tylor Bryan, defendants 1 and 2, for damages for encroachment, for suspension and abatement of rent, and for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to the joint use of a common passage. Sir David Ezra is the lessor, and Sarkar and Bryan were lessees under him of Nos. 10 and 9, Chowringhee, respectively. In the other two suits Sir David Ezra sues Mr Sarkar for arrears of rent. In the main suit the plaintiff claims a right of user over a passage between his premises No. 10 and the premises No. 9, Chowringhee. It is common ground that a platform was built over that passage in July 1933, and was in position until July 1934. The plaintiff contends that it remained for a further two months before it was demolished. Both the defendants accept responsibility for the erection of the platform, and the plaintiff assesses the damages that he has suffered at Rupees 1,32,000. He also alleges that the platform encroached upon his premises and that he therefore was entitled to a suspension or abatement of rent from defendant 1. The plaintiff's lease is dated 12th December 1930. It provides that the plaintiff should hold the premises No. 10, Chowringhee Road, for a term of 10 years from 1st March 1931, on a monthly rent of Rs. 1,000, with an increase of Rs. 30 per month every three years; additions and alterations were to be made by the lessee at a cost of Rs. 12,000, to which the lessor was to contribute Rs. 4,000. The covenant around which the present dispute centres is 2 C, and is in the following terms:

And the lessor will allow the lessee attachment and use of the north wall of premises No. 11, Chowringhee Road, for the purpose of constructions detailed in Sch. B hereof and will also allow or permit the lessee uninterrupted joint use with the occupiers of No. 9, Chowringhee Road, the entire 4 feet (four feet) passage in width along the south wall of the said No. 9, Chowringhee Road from the date of these

No. 10, Chowringhee is to the south of No. 9, Chowringhee, a road which runs north and south and to the west of both premises. There is some dispute as to the width of the passage described in the lease as "4 feet wide," but it is common ground that a space from 4 to 5 feet wide appertained to No. 9, Chowringhee, on its southern boundary which was marked by a low boundary wall. Defendant 2 was in occupation of No. 9, Chowringhee, under a lease from defendant 1 for a term of five years from 1st July 1928. The plaintiff on obtaining his lease immediately started negotiations with defendant 2, so as to obtain his consent to use the passage as required by the terms of the lease. From the correspondence it is apparent that the plaintiff considered this consent a mere matter of form, while defendant 2 was doubtful of its effect on the amenities of his premises and was unwilling to give his consent without receiving some advantage in return. In April 1931 defendant 2 went on leave out of India and the day before his departure, on 22nd April, certain terms were put on paper and signed by the plaintiff and defendant 2. Briefly these terms provided that the parties should have joint use of the passage described as "5 feet wide" and the plaintiff should, if called upon, take a sub-lease of a portion of the premises No. 9, Chowringhee.

One of the main questions in the suit is whether this document constituted a binding agreement between the parties, and I shall refer to its terms in detail hereafter. During the absence of defendant 2 his attorney called upon the plaintiff to take up the lease in terms of the agreement of 26th April. The plaintiff raised objections, and on 17th June 1932 defendant 2 brought a suit against the plaintiff for specific performance. In January 1933 that suit was withdrawn and stood dismissed with costs. On 22nd July 1933, the defendants erected a platform, about 5 feet wide and 50 feet long, adjoining the south wall of No. 9, Chowringhee. This platform was removed a year or 14 months later. The plaintiff contends that this platform obstructed the passage to No. 10, Chowringhee, caused an excess of water to collect, and drove away his tenants. On 14th May 1934, he filed this suit for damages which he assessed at Rs. 1,32,000, and claiming that he was entitled to suspension of rent, he ceased payment, but without prejudice deposited with his attorneys a sum of Rs. 8,000. On 4th July 1934, Sir David Ezra brought a suit for arrears of rent and municipal taxes, and on 25th June 1935 he sued for further arrears of rent amounting to Rs. 13,680. It is agreed by both parties that if the Court holds that the plaintiff is entitled to damages, the amount of such damages must be referred, but evidence has been given by the plaintiff and his tenants in support of the plaintiff's case that damage was in fact incurred. The following issues have been framed:

1. Is the plaintiff entitled to any rights in or over the passage referred to in paras. 2 and 5 of the plaint? 2. Did the defendant Bailey Tyler Bryan ever give his consent to the plaintiff having joint use of the said passage or agree to the plaintiff having such user? (a) If yea, was such consent conditional? (b) And if yea was such condition performed by the plaintiff? 3. What are the dimensions and what was the nature of the platform referred to in para. 8 of the plaint? 4. Was the said platform an encroachment or trespass on any portion of the plaintiff's demised lands? 5a Did the erection of the said platform wrongly deprive the plaintiff of the peaceful use and enjoyment of the demised lands or any portion thereof? 5b Did the said platform wrongfully deprive the plaintiff of the peaceful use and enjoyment of the passage? 6. Has the plaintiff suffered any damage as a consequence of such wrongful act? To what damages is the plaintiff entitled? 7. Is the plaintiff entitled to suspension of rent? 8. Is the sum of Rs. 2,860 claimed as arrears of rent in Suit No. 1196 of 1934 or any and what part thereof due and payable to the plaintiff therein? 9. Is the sum of Rs. 13,680 claimed as arrears of rent in Suit No. 1193 of 1935 or any and what part thereof due and payable to the plaintiff therein? 10. What sums, if any, are due and payable to the plaintiff on the said rent suits in respect of the excess rates claimed therein?

Extra issue:—Did the plaintiff erect shop-rooms at the Chowringhee Road side of No. 10, Chowringhee Road, on the assurance of defendant 1, that a clear

10 ft. passage would remain between No. 9, Chowringhee, and the north extremity of the new shoprooms? I have no hesitation in finding that the platform was erected on the 22nd July 1933, and demolished on the 20th July 1934. (The judgment after deciding issues 1 in the negative, 2(a), in the positive and 2(b), in the negative, 3, width 5 ft. 4, in the negative, 5 (a), and (b) in the negative and after holding that it was not necessary to decide issue 6 proceeded.) On the 7th issue the plaintiff contends that there has been an encroachment which amounts to an eviction, and, if the rent be one and indivisible, as it is here, justifies suspension of rent. The defendants contend that this plea cannot be raised because no eviction has been specifically pleaded. This plea cannot in my opinion be upheld. Pleadings in India cannot be regarded with the same meticulous care with which they were scrutinised in the English Courts, and in my view the plaint alleges encroachment and interference with sufficient particularity to justify the raising of this issue. The principles which have to be considered in deciding what constitutes eviction so as to justify suspension were laid down in England so long ago as 1855, in the well-known case of 17 C B 30 (1). Jervis, C. J., after dealing with the derivation of the word "eviction" says at p. 64 of the report:

It is now well settled, that, if the tenant loses the benefit of the enjoyment of any portion of the demised premises, by the act of the landlord, the rent is thereby suspended. The term "eviction" is now popularly applied to every class of expulsion or amotion. Getting rid thus of the old notion of eviction, I think it may now be taken to mean this: not a mere trespass and nothing more, but something of a grave and permanent character done by the landlord with the intention of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of the demised premises.

Williams, J., at p. 68 says:

There clearly are some acts of interference by the landlord with the tenant's enjoyment of the premises which do not amount to an eviction, but which may be either mere acts of trespass or eviction according to the intention with which they are done. If those acts amount to a clear indication of intention on the landlord's part that the tenant shall no longer continue to hold the premises, they would constitute an eviction.

And Crowder, J., says much the same thing at p. 71.

1. Upton v. Townend, (1855) 17 C B 30=25 L J C P 44=4 W R 56=1 Jur N S 1039.

Although, therefore, I agree that it is not every act of trespass by a landlord that will amount to an eviction, I think in both cases the tenant has been substantially and permanently deprived of the subject matter of the demise, so as to entitle him to say that he has not had the occupation of that which he was entitled to.

And Willes, J. at p. 75:

In both cases, therefore, as it seems to me, the tenant was, by an act of the landlord, which was intended to be, and was, of a permanent character, deprived of the perfect and convenient use of the thing demised.

The question of fact which therefore has to be determined is: Did the landlord by the erection of this platform do something of a grave and permanent character with the intention of permanently depriving the plaintiff of a portion of the subject matter of the demise? Neither of the defendants, both of whom accept responsibility for the erection of the platform, has given evidence, preferring to rely on the correspondence and other documents. For the plaintiff, stress is laid on the fact that no explanation has been given as to why the platform was erected. It is not uncommon to erect a barrier to protect an easement and it is probable that such was the purpose of the platform, for it must be remembered that the plaintiff had been using this passage for a considerable period though, as I have held, he had no legal right to do so. On my findings the platform did at any rate in one portion encroach to the extent of a few inches on to the plaintiff's premises and Mr. S. C. Bose for the plaintiff contends that an encroachment however small may constitute an eviction. In my view there was in fact no eviction, the defendants were evidently building the platform so far as possible along the southern boundary of No. 9. The platform was erected in a day, and I accept the defendants' evidence that it was demolished in a single morning, in July 1934, after it had been in position for one year. There is nothing to show that it was intended to be permanent, and in my opinion the encroachment was so slight that it amounted to a mere trespass. Its character was neither permanent nor grave. Secondly, I can find no evidence of an intention to deprive the plaintiff of the enjoyment of the demised premises. I find accordingly on issue 7 that there was no eviction so as to justify suspension of rent.

I have already commented on the unsatisfactory nature of the plaintiff's evidence. He seldom gave a direct answer and in the witness box he persisted in charging the defendants with colluding so that the landlord might regain his property with the improvements effected by the plaintiff. There is not the slightest justification for any such charge. The plaintiff's own attitude is apparent from the correspondence. He started a scheme of speculative building and his first disappointment came when he was refused sanction to install a petrol pump. Then to his dismay he found that Mr. Dryan would not convey his passage rights without consideration. Threats were of no avail and eventually he found that to gain his object he must take a lease of a portion of No. 9. He admits that he did not want to take up the lease if he could avoid it. The speculation was proving a failure, as appears from the undated letter to Mr. Bryan in England, as throughout the correspondence we find him making claims to which admittedly he is not entitled. When first the platform is erected he consents to put up with it, if he can get a remission of rent, and finally he claims suspension, and ceases to pay rent at all. The attitude which Mr. Sarkar himself has adopted is possibly responsible for his charges of bad faith against his landlord and neighbour. Those charges are in my view quite unfounded. Suit No. 924 of 1934 is dismissed. The plaintiff must pay the costs of both the defendants.

Appeal No. 16 of 1932, Decided on 19th December 1935, from original decree of Sub-Judge, 2nd Court, Tipperah, D/- 13th July 1931.

(a) Bengal Estates Partition Act (5 of 1897), S. 113 (c)—Commissioner directing fresh partition—No appeal lies.

There is no appeal to the Board in a case where the Commissioner after setting aside the partition made by the Collector has directed a fresh partition by him: 1916 Pat 154 Foll.

(b) Jurisdiction—Order without, is void—Judgment can be impeached in collateral proceedings.

An order made by a Court which has no jurisdiction to deal with the subject matter of the suit has no binding effect on the person who is affected by the order. It is absolutely void. It is open in a collateral proceeding to impeach even the judgment of a Court on the ground of want of jurisdiction: 9 All 191 (P C) and 11 Mad 26 (P C), Ref. [P 141 C 1]

(c) Jurisdiction—Civil Court can entertain suit to set aside order passed by revenue Court beyond its jurisdiction.

When authorities of limited jurisdiction act in excess of their jurisdiction their acts become liable to be scrutinised by the civil Court and become liable to be set aside. Hence an order passed without jurisdiction by the Board of Revenue can be subject of civil suit.

D. N. Mitter, J.—This appeal is on behalf of defendant 1 and arises out of a suit originally brought by the plaintiff, a ward of Court, through the Manager of the Court of Wards, for a declaration that certain proceedings purported to have been taken under the Estates Partition Act (Act 5 of 1897 B. C.) are void from a particular point of time and that every thing done thereafter including the partition of a revenue paying estate is void. The Subordinate Judge has granted a decree to the plaintiff and hence the present appeal by defendant 1. There are numerous defendants to this suit. The facts on which the present appeal depends lie within a very small compass and are not in dispute. They may be briefly stated as follows: In 1911 proceedings for the partition of Tauzi No. 31 of the Tipperah Collectorate consisting of 39 Mouzas were started and the Deputy Collector made the final partition as provided by the Estates Partition Act. The partition was approved by the Collector (See part 2, p. 13) order sheet K. An appeal was taken to the Commissioner as appears from the memorandum of appeal, Ex. 7, Part 2, p. 23.

The Commissioner heard the appeal on 1st July 1921 (see part 2, p. 25). The gist of the order, about which we shall have to advert later in greater detail, is that he sent back the case to the Collector for a fresh partition. The controversy which was raised before the learned Commissioner on behalf of the plaintiff, who was represented by Mr. Haliday, Manager, Sarail Wards Estate, was mainly this, viz. that he does not want to take the Putni tenures and part of Putni tenures allotted to his Saham, for these tenures were not created by him or his predecessor in interest, but were created by other co-sharers who were in exclusive possession of the lands comprised in the Putnis. The loss which the Sarail Estate will suffer was stressed and the danger to the Government Revenue was indicated. Against this order of the learned Commissioner of the Chittagong Division, defendant 25, one co-sharer, filed an appeal to the Board of Revenue. It may be stated here that one of the questions raised in the suit is whether an appeal lay to the Board of Revenue under the Act. Proceeding now with the narrative of facts it appears that the Board heard the appeal and by its order dated 30th January 1928 (Ex. 5, Part 2, p. 28) set aside the order of remand with the result that the partition approved by the Collector was affirmed by the Board of Revenue. It does not appear that the question of the want of jurisdiction of the Board to hear the appeal was raised before the Board at the time of the hearing of the appeal but the plaintiff afterwards filed a petition of review (65 of 1925) (p. 31, part 2), in which the point questioning the jurisdiction of the Board was raised. The Board rejected the application for review on 14th November 1925, (Ex. 6, p. 41). In the meantime possession had been delivered to the parties according to the allotments. See order sheet 11th May 1923 (Ex. K, p. 20 part 2). In paras. 7 to 11 of the plaint, the plaintiff complains that the Collector allotted to the plaintiff's share 5 entire mouzas and portions of 3 mouzas specified in table A and 4 entire mauzas as shown in table B, that out of the said mouzas the mouzas of table A and certain shares of mouzas of table B were let out in leases by some of the proprietors other than plaintiff's predecessors and the plaintiffs without their consent, that the plaintiffs are not bound by the said leases and they would after the partition attach under the law to lands and mouzas allotted to the proprietors who or whose predecessors in interest created those leases, that in the partition proceedings the lessees were not made parties and they are not willing to give up possession to the plaintiffs and, if after any litigation to recover possession the plaintiffs are unable to get possession of the said mouzas freed from the leases, the assets of the mouzas allotted to the plaintiff's share will be greatly reduced. The plaintiff has accordingly brought the suit for a declaration that the order of the Board of Revenue was ultra vires of the statute and the final partition is not binding on the plaintiff. Several defences were taken in the suit, the nature of which will appear from the grounds taken in his appeal which will be presently set forth. The Subordinate Judge has negatived all the defences and has given the declaration asked for by the plaintiff. Hence the present appeal. In appeal the following grounds have been taken:

(1) Under Ss. 57 and 59 and Ss. 90 and 113, Estates Partition Act (Act 5 of 1897) an appeal did lie to the Board of Revenue against the order of the Commissioner directing a fresh partition. (2) Assuming an appeal did not lie the Board's hearing of the appeal was an irregular assumption of jurisdiction and there was no inherent want of jurisdiction in the Board which was the appellate authority, as this might have been determined by the Board at a later stage. (3) The civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Such jurisdiction is impliedly barred.

To take ground 1 first: The determination of this ground depends on a construction of Ss. 57, 58 and 59, and Ss. 90 and 113, Estates Partition Act. Under S. 58 of the Act the Deputy Collector submitted the papers to the Collector for the sanction of the Collector, and the Collector is to follow the procedure laid down in Cls. 2, 3, 4 and 5, S. 58, as the circumstances of the case may require. In the present case the Collector approved the partition under sub-cl. (a), Cl. (4), S. 58. Against this order an appeal was presented to the Commissioner. The learned Commissioner returned the papers to the Collector for a fresh partition. Against this order of the Commissioner an appeal was preferred to the Board of Revenue and the Board of Revenue set aside the order of the Commissioner and confirmed the partition. It is the competency of this appeal to the Board that is questioned in the present appeal before us and was also challenged in the Court below. An appeal is a creature of the statute, and an appeal to the Board from certain orders of the Commissioner are provided by S. 113 of the Act. The appeal against the order of the Commissioner is sought to be justified on behalf of the appellant on the ground that the order of the Commissioner directing a fresh partition is an order amending the partition as approved or made by the Collector within the meaning of Cl. (c), S. 113 of the Act. It is said that the term "amending" is wide enough to cover the case where the Commissioner sends back the case for re-partition.

It is argued that the word "amending" should not receive the limited construction so as to signify "confirming with amendments" the partition made by the Collector. In our opinion by no stretch of language can the order of Mr. De sending back the case to the Collector for re-partition by the Collector be regarded as an order by the Commissioner amending the partition made by the Collector. The order amending the partition can only signify a final order made by the Commissioner amending the partition i. e. confirming with amendment the partition made by the Collector. There is a decision of the High Court of Patna in 1 P L J 491 (1), which has held that there is no appeal to the Board in a case where the Commissioner, after setting aside the partition made by the Collector, has directed a fresh partition by him. The appellant argues that the Patna decision is wrong. We are unable to accede to this argument.

If one examines the scheme of provision regarding an appeal to the Board one can have no doubt that the intention of the framers of the Act was that there should be an appeal from final orders made by the Commissioners either confirming or amending the partition, not where the Commissioner directs the Collector to make a fresh partition.

This leads us to consider the second ground that the question of want of jurisdiction making the order of the Board of Revenue a nullity does not arise in the present case, for there is no inherent jurisdiction of the Board over the subject matter of the partition, for an appeal would lie, if not at this stage but at a later stage, viz., after the matter comes again to the Commissioner and he has passed final orders thereon. We are unable to agree in this view. The Board of Revenue was incompetent to hear the appeal against the order of the Commissioner directing a fresh partition by the Collector and in entertaining the appeal the Board was acting without jurisdiction. The plaintiff has asked for a declaration that the appeal was without jurisdiction and all proceedings from the point of time when the Board entertained and allowed the appeal must be held to be void and of no effect. To this state of facts the observations of Lord McNaughten in 26 I A 16 (2) (at p. 28), apply with great force :

It is in substance a suit to have the true construction of a statute declared and to have an act done in contravention of a statute rightly understood pronounced void and of no effect.

The annulling of the order of the Commissioner directing a fresh partition by the Board who was acting ultra vires of the statute in entertaining the appeal cannot affect the rights of the plaintiff. As was put by Lord McNaughten in the case of an illegal cancellation of an order of the Collector directing registration of the appellant's village, in that case :

Cancellation in obedience to illegal commands of the Government can have no more effect than cancellation at the dictation of a lawless mob which the officer in charge has no power to resist.

It is now settled beyond controversy that an order made by a Court who has no jurisdiction to deal with the subject matter of the suit has no binding effect on the person who is affected by the order. It is absolutely void. It is open in a collateral proceeding to impeach even the judgment of a Court on the ground of want of jurisdiction : see S. 44, Evidence Act. Reference may be made to two leading decisions of the Judicial Committee in 9 All 191 (3) and 14 I A 160 (4). No amount of consent can cure the defect of jurisdiction. As Lord Watson observed in 9 All 191 (3) :

2. Fischer v. Secretary of State, (1899) 22 Mad 270=26 I A 16 (P C).

3. Ledgard v. Bull, (1887) 9 All 191=13 I A 134 (P C).

4. Meenaksi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri, (1888) 11 Mad 26=14 I A 160 (P C).

Where the Judge has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject matter of a suit, the parties cannot by their mutual consent convert it into a proper judicial process although they may constitute the Judge their arbiter, and be bound by his decision on the merits when they are submitted to him.

In 14 I A 160 (4) their Lordships pointed out that a right of appeal from the decision of a Judge must be given by the statute or an equivalent authority. In this case it was held that there was no right of appeal to the High Court from the order of the District Judge to fill up a vacancy in the Committee of a Pagoda and there being inherent incompetency in the High Court to deal with the appeal, consent could not confer on the High Court jurisdiction which it never possessed. These two cases are sought to be distinguished on the ground that in the present case the Board had entire seizin of the subject matter and it had merely interfered at an earlier stage whereas in 14 I A 160 (4) no question of the High Court having seizin of the subject matter arose, for it was a special jurisdiction in which the High Court did not come into the picture at all. There is nothing in the distinction, for the Board had no seizin of the appeal at that stage against the order of the Commissioner. The Board of Revenue and the other revenue Courts were given special jurisdiction for a particular purpose. They were statutory bodies vested with special jurisdiction for a particular purpose. If they act according to the provisions of the statute which created them, the civil Court has no jurisdiction to interfere; but if they act in contravention of the statute, the interference of the civil Court becomes justified.

It remains to consider the third ground: It is argued for the appellant that looking into the provisions of Act 5 of 1897 the civil Court had no jurisdiction to declare the proceedings before the revenue Courts to be a nullity. It is argued that the Act provides for a hierarchy of authorities to annul partition. The jurisdiction of the revenue Courts, it is said, is exclusive and therefore a suit in the civil Court does not lie. The point made is that the order of the Board of Revenue is final. But this finality has effect so long as the acts of revenue authorities are not ultra vires of the statute. When these authorities of limited jurisdiction act in excess of their jurisdiction their acts become liable to be scrutinised by the civil Court and become liable to be set aside. For all the aforesaid reasons, we are of opinion that all the grounds of appeal fail and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. The costs must be paid to the plaintiff.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 35 of 1935, Decided on 18th December 1935, against judgment of M. C. Ghose, J., D/- 11th April 1935.

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (1859), S. 33—Ground not specifically set forth before commissioner can be taken in suit.

The wording of S. 33 of the Revenue Sale Law is very particular; and as worded, that section requires that the ground should be declared and specified. There can be no question that apart from anything else, omission to take the ground in a definite form and with sufficient particularity before the commissioner is a bar to the ground being put forward as a ground in a suit to set aside the sale. Kanidhan Dutt, Indu Bhusan Mukherjee and Sudhansu Kumar Dey—for Appellant.

Panchanan Ghose, Pulin Behary Das and A. Quaseem—for Respondents.

Mukherjee, Ag. C. J.—This appeal is pressed upon two grounds. The first ground is to the effect that the revenue sale to set aside which the plaintiff instituted the present suit was bad, because notices under Ss. 6 and 7 of the Revenue Sale Law were defective in certain particulars. For disposing of this ground it would be sufficient to say that this was not a ground declared or specified in the appeal which the plaintiff had made to the commissioner. The memorandum of appeal filed by the plaintiff before the commissioner and the judgment of the commissioner in that appeal have been placed before us. We find that amongst other points taken, all that was said with reference to the procedure adopted for the sale was that the notices had not been properly served, but there was no point taken that notices were in any way defective. The wording of S. 33 of the Revenue Sale Law is very particular; and as worded, that section requires that the grounds should be declared and specified. There can be no question that, apart from anything else, omission to take the ground in a definite form and with sufficient particularity before the commissioner is a bar to the ground being put forward as a ground in a suit to set aside the sale.

The other ground on which the appeal has been pressed before us is in substance this: that the revenue for arrears of which the sale took place was due for the March kist of 1927 and it became an arrear on 1st April 1927 and that therefore the latest day for its payment would be 12th January 1928 and that inasmuch as the sale was held on 23rd September 1927, it was a sale held without jurisdiction. It should be pointed out that in the trial Court no ground of this description was put forward and although there was an objection to the effect that the plaintiff believed that no arrears were really due and so the collector had no jurisdiction to sell the property that ground was practically abandoned at the trial, because the plaintiff at the trial admitted that the revenue due for March kist 1927 was really in arrears. In the memorandum of appeal filed before the Subordinate Judge from the decision of the trial Court the ground now taken before us was not taken. But at the hearing of the appeal before him it was put forward. The learned Judge held that the kistbandi not having been produced and no materials having been placed before him for the purpose of showing that the March kist of 1927 was a kist according to the kistbandi and not an instalment payable by the last date of payment as fixed by the Board of Revenue, it was not possible to hold that the contention was well founded. We think the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point was correct.

In the appeal before M. C. Ghose, J., the matter was sought to be re-opened by the present appellant, as respondent therein, but the learned Judge declined to interfere with the finding of the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the question was a question of fact, and the conclusion which the Subordinate Judge had arrived at on the materials before him on that question could not be interfered with. We have heard Mr. Dutt on this question and we are in entire agreement with the view that the learned Subordinate Judge had taken, namely that in the absence of any materials which would indicate that the revenue due for the March kist of 1927 was really an amount due according to the March kist, if there was any such kist in the kabuliyat and was not an amount due for which the last date of payment according to the date fixed by the Board of Revenue was some date in March 1927, it is not possible to say that the sale that took place on 27th September 1927 was held without jurisdiction. The appeal in our opinion fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 217 of 1935, Decided on 20th January 1936, from appellate order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Howrah, D/- 13th February 1935.

Civil P. C., (1908), S. 145 and O. 38, R. 5—Attachment before judgment released on surety undertaking to pay amount under decree that may be passed—Decree passed—Property sold in execution not fetching full decretal amount—Surety can be proceeded against—Court's demanding from surety security for prospective decretal amount is only irregularity—Surety having executed bond held could not raise objection as to illegality of bond in execution proceedings.

The appellant instituted a suit on a promissory note against two persons and thereafter applied for attachment before judgment of a motor lorry belonging to the said defendants. The Court issued on them a notice to show cause why the said motor lorry should not be attached before judgment or why they should not furnish security to the extent of Rs. 860 to cover the decree, if any, that may be passed against them. The said defendants appeared and offered to furnish security. They proposed the respondent and another person as sureties and the respondent and another person agreed to stand as sureties. They, the proposed sureties, executed in favour of the Court a surety bond reciting the notice issued on the defendants, the fact that the Court had allowed the defendants to furnish security, and that the executants had made themselves personally liable to the extent of Rs. 860, that is, for the amount that might be decreed against the defendants, and the sureties promised to pay the same in case the decretal amount be not realised from the judgment-debtors. The suit was decreed in full against the defendants. The appellant first executed his decree against the principal judgment-debtors and attached the lorry which was sold by the Court in execution. It fetched Rs. 100 only at the Court sale. The appellant could not realise anything more from the principal judgment-debtors who had been adjudicated insolvents on their own application. The appellant then applied for proceeding against the respondent, one of the sureties. The substantial objection raised by the respondent was that the Court went beyond jurisdiction in asking for security for the decretal amount under provisions of O. 38, R. 5, Civil P. C., and as the bond executed had gone beyond the terms of the said rule it could not be enforced in execution proceedings:

Held: that O. 38, R. 5 no doubt contemplated security for the production in Court of the property sought to be attached before judgment or its value at a future time when called upon and the amount of the security demanded should ordinarily be commensurate with the value of the property sought to be attached; but the object of the legislature for providing for attachments before judgment was to secure the prospective decree-holder in matter of realisation of the money that might be eventually found by the Court to be due to him. Having regard to the object of the provisions for attachment before judgment the Court in making a demand for and in taking security for the prospective decretal amount might have acted at most in an irregular manner in the exercise of its jurisdiction. [P 145 O 1]

Held further: that the respondent having executed the surety bond in the form he had done, could not raise the objection which he had raised in this case in the course of execution proceedings started against him under the provisions of S. 145 of the Code. [P 145 O 1]

Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of the decree-holder and arises out of proceedings started under S. 145, Civil P. C., against the respondent, a surety. The appellant instituted a suit, in the year 1929 on a promissory note against two persons, Krishna Chandra Roy and Hiralal Roy. The claim was laid at Rs. 759.6-0 in the plaint. He thereafter applied for attachment before judgment of a motor lorry belonging to the said defendants. On 13th November 1929 the Court issued on them, the Roys, a notice to show cause why the said motor lorry should not be attached before judgment or they should not furnish security to the extent of Rs. 860 to cover the decree, if any, that may be passed against them. The said defendants appeared and offered to furnish security. They proposed the respondent and another person as sureties and the respondent and another person agreed to stand as sureties. They, the proposed sureties, executed in favour of the Court a surety bond dated 30th November 1929. The bond recites the notice dated 13th November 1929, issued on the defendants, and the fact that the Court had allowed the defendants to furnish security. Then the bond states that the executants make themselves personally liable to the extent of Rs. 860, that is, for the amount that might be decreed against the defendants, and the sureties promise to pay the same in case the decretal amount be not realised from the judgment-debtors. The Court on a favourable report from the Sheristadar as to the solvency of the respondent and the other co-executant, accepted them as sureties and withdrew the order for attachment before judgment. On 4th June 1930, the suit was decreed in full against the defendants. The appellant first executed his decree against the principal judgment-debtors and attached the lorry which was sold by the Court in execution. It fetched Rs. 100 only at the Court sale.

The appellant could not realise anything more from the principal judgment-debtors who have been adjudicated insolvents on their own application. The appellant then applied for proceeding against the respondent, one of the sureties. The substantial objection raised by the respondent is that the Court went beyond jurisdiction in asking for security for the decretal amount under the provisions of O. 38, R. 5, Civil P. C., and as the bond executed has gone beyond the terms of the said rule it cannot be enforced in execution proceedings. This objection was overruled by the learned Munsif who allowed execution to proceed against the respondent. The learned District Judge on appeal, however, has accepted the said objection. He has further held that if the bond is to be regarded as one for the production in Court of the lorry or its value in cash, for which purpose only a bond could be taken under the provisions of O. 38, R. 5, there was no breach of the bond, as the lorry was actually brought in Court under the process of the Court and ultimately sold. He accordingly dismissed the execution. Against this order passed by the learned District Judge the decree-holder has preferred this appeal. I do not follow the last mentioned reasons of the learned District Judge. If the bond is not for the production of the lorry or its value in Court, I do not see how it can be regarded as such. In proceeding in the aforesaid manner the learned District Judge in my view has proceeded upon a hypothetical case. He cannot make a new bond for the parties. The bond contains only one undertaking by the sureties, namely to pay the decretal amount to the decree-holder in a certain contingency, and the only question is whether the said undertaking can be enforced in execution.

The bond in its express terms is for the performance of a prospective decree that may be passed eventually against the defendants, Krishna Chandra and Hiralal Roy, and the sureties have by the terms of the security bond made themselves personally liable to the extent of Rs. 860. The case prima facie falls within S. 145 of the Code and the appellant has the prima facie right to enforce his remedies against the respondent in execution proceedings. It is said, however, that the surety bond is void being taken by the Court in excess of its powers. The notice of the Court issued on 13th November 1929 on the defendants was also to show cause why they should not furnish security to the extent of Rs. 860 which amount was estimated to cover . . . the amount of the decree. The sureties undertook to pay the amount of the decree that may eventually be passed against the defendants to the extent of Rs. 860. The figure was fixed at Rs. 860 apparently on the basis that the claim being laid at Rs. 759-6-0, the decree including costs could not exceed that amount. The order for attachment before judgment was withdrawn as the respondent and another person stood sureties and gave an undertaking to pay the amount of the decree that may be passed eventually in case the defendants could not pay. There was accordingly good consideration for the bond. It is however argued that the Court can only demand security from the defendants under O. 38, R. 5 for the production in Court of the property sought to be attached or its value, and to place it at the disposal of the Court when called upon, and it is said that when in the notice it made a demand on the defendants to furnish security for the estimated amount of the decree that may eventually be passed, it acted beyond its powers and without jurisdiction and the bond in question cannot be enforced. O. 38, R. 5 no doubt contemplates security for the production in Court of the property sought to be attached before judgment or its value at a future time when called upon and the amount of the security demanded should ordinarily be commensurate with the value of the property sought to be attached, but the object of the legislature for providing for attachments before judgment is to secure the prospective decree-holder in matter of realisation of the money that may be eventually found by the Court to be due to him. Every act done by a Court in contravention of the provisions of a statute is not necessarily beyond jurisdiction or a nullity.

It may be an irregularity. In cases of contravention of statutory provisions, no hard and fast line can be laid down for demarcating between acts which are nullities and acts which are irregularities but this much can be said, as was laid down by Mookerji, J., in delivering his judgment in 35 Cal 61 (1), that the question must be determined keeping in view the nature, scope and object of the provisions of the statute contravened. Having regard to the object of the provisions for attachment before judgment, which I have indicated above, I hold that the Court in making a demand for and in taking security for the prospective decretal amount may have acted at most in an irregular manner in the exercise of its jurisdiction. In that view of the matter the remedy of the defendants was to point out to the Court the irregularity in the notice, issued on 13th November 1929, which by its terms demand security from them of the decretal amount, when they appeared to show cause in pursuance of the same, and if the Court still insisted on the said security, to proceed to a higher tribunal, and the respondent having executed the surety bond in the form he has done cannot in my judgment raise the objection which he has raised in this case in the course of execution proceedings started against him under the provisions of S. 145 of the Code. For these reasons I set aside the order of the learned District Judge and restore that of the Munsiff. The execution against the respondent must proceed from the stage at which it was left, but the amount must be limited to Rs. 860. The appellant will have his

Monarch Bioscope Co.—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Appeal No. 2022 of 1933, Decided on 19th December 1935, from appellate decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, First Court, 24 Parganas, D/- 27th June 1933.

(a) Interpretation of Statutes—Plain meaning clear—Previous law or proceedings of select committee should not be referred.

Every Act must be construed according to the plain meaning of its terms and, if the plain meaning is clear, such meaning should be taken without reference to the previous law on the subject or the proceedings of the Select Committee. [P 146 C 2]

(b) Calcutta Municipal Act (3 of 1923), S. 391—Cinema show is not excluded from S. 391.

The term theatre or circus or other similar place of public amusement in S. 391 cannot possibly omit a cinematograph show. A cinematograph show is one of the most widely spread popular forms of public amusement. It is held in a building similar to a theatre and it cannot possibly escape the words of S. 391. If the Legislature which enacted the section intended to omit the cinema in view of the Cinematograph Act of 1918, they should have specially stated it in a proviso to S. 391. As they have not done so and the words of the section are quite clear, it must be held that it includes cinematograph show. [P 146 C 2]

(c) Calcutta Municipal Act (3 of 1923), S. 391—That corporation generally used to give notice to take license would not make opening of show without previous license legal.

It is the duty of the owner of the place of amusement to take a license in proper time before he opens the place of public amusement. The mere fact that the Corporation generally used to give a notice to take out a license would not make it legal on the part of a proprietor to open a show without a previous license. [P 147 C 1]

(d) Calcutta Municipal Act (3 of 1923), S. 391—Cinematograph Act of 1918 does not take any Corporation's power under S. 391.

The Cinematograph Act is an All India Act and applies to Cinematograph shows exhibited at any time or place within British India and the chief object of the Act is to prevent the showing of unlicensed cinematograph films and further to have proper safeguard against fire. For this purpose, no one may open a cinematograph show at any place without any license under the Cinematograph Act of 1918. But this will not necessarily take away the power of the Calcutta Corporation under S. 391. [P 147 C 1]

(e) Calcutta Municipal Act (3 of 1923), S. 391—Cinema show opened without previous license of corporation—Corporation can suppress show and is not bound to make case in criminal Court.

The Corporation can suppress a cinema show which is opened without previous license of the Corporation. And it is not bound to make a case against the proprietor in criminal Court and get him fined. [P 147 C 2]

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the defendant, the Corporation of Calcutta. The facts in short are these: The plaintiff, the Monarch Bioscope Co., which is a peripatetic Bioscope Co., obtained a license from the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, to exhibit at a certain Mela within the Corporation of Calcutta, and according to their license they were opening the cinema show on 23rd April 1929. They had put up their temporary erections and were selling their tickets when a Corporation officer appeared with police help and prevented the company from exhibiting the cinema show on the ground that they had not taken a license from the Corporation of Calcutta. The plaintiffs' case is that after they obtained a license from the Commissioner of Police they were not bound to take a further license from the Corporation of Calcutta and the action of the Corporation officer was ultra vires and oppressive and they claimed damages for the same. The trial Court held that the plaintiffs were legally bound to take a license from the Corporation and as they had not done so, the action of the Corporation officer was not illegal. The trial Court dismissed the suit. In appeal, the learned Additional Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiffs were not bound to take a further license from the Corporation and the action of the Corporation officer was ultra vires and illegal. The Court awarded damages of Rs. 100. The main question in appeal is whether under S. 391, Calcutta Municipal Act, it was obligatory on the plaintiffs to take a license from the Corporation. S. 391 is in these terms:

No person shall, without or otherwise than in conformity with the terms of a license granted by the Corporation in the behalf, keep open any theatre, circus or other similar place of public resort recreation or amusement.

The Court of appeal below thought that as the term 'cinema' is not in S. 391, and inasmuch as the report of the Select Committee dealt with the Bill and it appeared from the note of the Select Committee under the section that cinemas were not included in S. 391 in view of the Cinematograph Act of 1918, the cinematograph show does not come within the provisions of S. 391. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the proceedings of the Legislature cannot be referred to as legitimate aids to the construction of the Act in which they result. See the case of 22 I A 107 (1). Every Act must be construed according to the plain meaning of its terms, and if the plain meaning is clear we must take that plain meaning without reference to the previous law on the subject or the proceedings of the Select Committee. In this case, after hearing the learned Advocates on both sides at great length it is absolutely clear that the term theatre or circus or other similar place of public amusement cannot possibly omit a cinematograph show. A cinematograph show is one of the most widely spread popular forms of public amusement. It is held in a building similar to a theatre and it cannot possibly escape the words of S. 391. If the Legislature which enacted the section intended to omit the cinema in view of the Cinematograph Act of 1918 they should have specially stated it in a proviso to S. 391. As they have not done so and the words of the section are quite clear, we must hold that it includes cinematograph show.

The next question urged by the learned Advocate is that under S. 391 it is an offence to keep open a theatre or other place of amusement. It is urged that the show in question had not yet opened. They were only selling tickets at the door and had not yet begun exhibiting the cinema show. This argument does not appeal to me. If the plaintiffs had no legal right to keep open a cinema they had no right to open it without a license. The next argument is that it has always been the practice of the Corporation to serve a notice upon the proprietor of the place of amusement calling upon him to take a license and that it is not necessary to take a license until such notice is served. Such may have been the practice of certain officers of the Corporation but it is clear upon the terms of the Act that it is the duty of the owner of the place of amusement to take a license in proper time before he opens the place of public amusement. It may be that the owners of a place which had a license may be allowed some time of grace to renew the license, but for a new show such as the plaintiffs were opening, they must according to the law take a license before they open their show. The mere fact that the Corporation chose to give a notice would not make it legal on the part of the proprietor to open a show without a previous license. It was urged that the Cinematograph Act of 1918 is a complete Act and that as it provides for the safety of the public no further action is called for by the Corporation. To this the reply is that the Cinematograph Act is an all India Act and applies to Cinematograph shows exhibited at any time or place within British India and the chief object of the Act is to prevent the showing of unlicensed cinematograph films and further to have proper safeguard against fire. For this purpose, no one may open a cinematograph show at any place without any license under the Cinematograph Act of 1918. But this will not necessarily take away the power of the Calcutta Corporation under S. 391.

It should be observed that the business of a Municipal Corporation is not only to secure the safety of the public but also to secure their comfort and convenience. Whether in fact a poor performer should be bound to take license both under the Cinematograph Act and under the Calcutta Municipal Act is a matter for the high authorities to determine. As the law now stands the plaintiffs were under obligation to take a license from the Corporation. Then it was urged that the Corporation Officers acted ultra vires in suppressing the cinema without giving the plaintiffs an opportunity to take a license. The reply is that it was the duty of the plaintiffs to take a license before preparing to open the cinema. The learned Subordinate Judge has made strictures on the conduct of the Corporation Officers. It was suggested that probably the Corporation Officers would have passed over the matter if an illegal gratification had been given. However that may be, we must deal with the matter according to law, and according to the clear interpretation of the law the plaintiffs were under obligation to take a license from the Corporation and as they did not do so, it cannot be said that the Corporation Officers exceeded their authority in suppressing it. It was urged in the last place that the Corporation should have made a case against the plaintiffs and got them fined by the Magistrate and that they have no business to suppress the unlicensed show. The argument is of no weight. In the result, the appeal is allowed and the plaintiffs' suit is dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal under S. 15 of the Letters Patent is refused.

Order.—In these cases rules were issued to show cause why certain orders should not be set aside. These orders were the subject of one judgment of the learned Sessions Judge of Burdwan. The matter arose out of a civil suit tried by a Munsif. It was alleged that certain of the parties were guilty of an offence under S. 196, I. P. C. An application was made to the learned Munsif, asking him to make a complaint against these persons under S. 476, Criminal P. C. The Munsif held an inquiry and eventually made a complaint against the defendants Satya Kinkar Ghosh and Amrita Lal

Ghosh : but he refused to make a complaint against the pleader Haradas Banerjea or defendants 3 to 5 in the suit, because he considered that no prima facie case against them had been made out. There was an appeal to the Sessions Judge, and he agreed with the Munsif in making a complaint against Satya and Amrita, but disagreed with him with regard to the pleader and the other defendants, because in his opinion the effect of the order of the Munsif refusing to make a complaint against them was to debar the Magistrate, whose duty it would be to hold an inquiry, from taking action against those persons, even though after going into the case in much more detail than had been possible before the Munsif, a criminal case against them was disclosed. The learned Judge proceeded to say as follows :

I do not think that it is desirable that the learned Magistrate's hands should be fettered in this fashion, I must not be understood in the present case to be holding that a prima facie case has been made out against these persons. All that I wish to point out is that if the learned Magistrate, in the course of his inquiry, finds from the materials before him that the interests of justice require that criminal action should be taken against all or any of these persons, he should be free to take such action. In this view of the case, I set aside the order of the learned Munsif discharging the rules against the pleader Babu Haradas Banerjea and against defendants 3 to 5, leaving it open to the Magistrate, who holds the inquiry, to take any action against them, if the evidence before him justifies such a course, and he allowed the appeal to that extent. It seems to us that the learned Sessions Judge correctly stated the legal position of the learned Magistrate who will hold the inquiry. In 1 Marsh Rep 270 (1) Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., and two other Judges held that under the corresponding S. 171, Act 25 of 1861, a Court has power to order that the Magistrate shall investigate whether forgery has been committed with reference to a particular document offered in evidence before such Court, without particularising any individual as the suspected person. The learned Chief Justice remarked that it had been urged that this section (as does the present S. 476, Criminal P. C.) referred to an accused person, and that this showed that the section must refer to an individual selected, after an investigation, by the Court before whom the alleged offence may have been committed, and that the section could not justify an order for the Magistrate to investigate and fix upon some person who shall be then convicted by the Magistrate. But the Court refused to concur in this view of the law and held that the section gave power to any Court to send the case for investigation to any Magistrate and directed that such Magistrate should thereupon proceed according to law.

If there be a person distinctly accused, of course the Magistrate can proceed equally against him as he can in investigating a case sent to him. But there is nothing in the section to prevent the investigation of a case where no particular individual is as yet accused. The investigation is to show whether any or what person is to be charged under the law. Moreover, no injustice is done to anyone. If on investigating the case it appears to the Magistrate that there is no proof to warrant his committing anyone, no one can be injured; if, on the other hand, the result of the investigation shows that someone has committed forgery, that person may be and ought to be proceeded against according to law, and if found guilty by a competent Court, he will be punished for the crime.

In 23 Cal 532 (2) it was held by a Division Bench of this Court that the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C., clearly indicate that a Court must not only have ground for enquiry into an offence of the description referred to in the section but must also be prima facie satisfied that the offence has been committed by some definite person or persons against whom proceedings in the Criminal Court are to be taken. That was a case in which the learned Munsif had sent the case to the Magistrate for investigation and trial of charges under S. 193 and other sections of the Indian Penal Code "against the plaintiff or some other person or persons." "Thereby showing," as the learned Judges remarked, that he did not arrive at any definite conclusion as to whether the investigation, which he directs, should go on either against the plaintiff or against some other person or persons.

The case in Marshall's Reports does not seem to have been cited before that Court, and the cases upon which the learned Judges relied, specially the case of 23 Cal 532 (2), do not seem to support the view which they took. In 21 C W N 950 (3) this matter was again considered by a Division Bench of this Court. The District Judge had made an order under S. 476 against a person who had applied for probate of a will which, in the Judge's opinion was prima facie a forgery. Before the Magistrate who held the inquiry, on the application of the Public Prosecutor, the petitioner, who was not a party to the probate proceedings, was also summoned in the same proceeding which was pending against the first accused. The Court held that the petitioner was not a party to the proceedings in the Civil Court, and neither sanction under S. 195, Criminal P. C., nor a complaint under S. 476, was a necessary precedent to proceedings against him. They further held that the Criminal Procedure Code provides for taking cognizance of offences and not of offenders, and that the Magistrate who had legally taken cognizance of an offence under S. 476 had jurisdiction to proceed against anyone who might be proved by the evidence to be concerned in that offence, whether he was mentioned in the order under S. 476 or not, and they distinguished the case of 23 Cal 532 (2) above referred to.

In our opinion, the law is correctly stated by the learned Judges in this case, and in 1 Marsh Rep 270 (1). But the learned Sessions Judge having correctly directed himself on this point of law, went on to set aside the order of the Munsif discharging the rules against the pleader Babu Haradas Banerjee and defendants 3 to 5. This, in our opinion, was unnecessary for the purpose which the learned Sessions Judge intended, and there seems to be no justification for setting aside the Munsif's order. The order, in our opinion, was no bar, as suggested by the learned Sessions Judge, and the question whether the Magistrate ought to and can in law proceed against any other persons except the defendants Satya and Amrita will have to be decided at the trial. If the learned Sessions Judge had thought fit himself to make a complaint against some person or persons unknown, in our opinion, he would have been acting within his powers. But the effect of his judgment is to do neither the one thing nor the other. He blows hot and cold. He has not decided to make a complaint against persons unknown, and yet he has set aside the Munsif's order refusing to make a complaint. In our opinion, therefore the learned Judge's order cannot be supported and must be set aside. The rules in these two cases are made absolute.

A sentence was passed by G as a Special Magistrate forming a Special Criminal Court within the meaning of S. 23 of Ordinance 11 of 1931. That Court came to an end in May 1932. S, who succeeded G as Sub-divisional Magistrate held that S was not a successor of G as a special Magistrate forming a special criminal Court within the meaning of that section. petitioner in 1932 by a Special Magistrate under S. 17 (2), Criminal Law Amendment Act, should not be set aside.

The petitioner was convicted on 27th January 1932, under S. 17 (2), Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1908 for having promoted a meeting under the auspices of the Burdwan Congress Committee which had been declared unlawful. The case was tried by Mr. S. P. Ghose, special Magistrate, Burdwan, who sentenced the petitioner to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two years and six months and to pay a fine of Rs. 500, in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for six months more. On 8th March 1932, an order was made for the execution of the fine and subsequently, while the petitioner was serving his sentence, a sum of Rs. 44-8-0 was realised by attachment and sale of his moveable properties. In May 1932 Ordinance No. 11 of 1931, under which Mr. S. P. Ghose had been appointed a Special Magistrate, expired. The petitioner alleges that although part of the fine was realised, no intimation of such realisation was given to the jail authorities, with the result that the petitioner had to serve out the whole term of imprisonment inflicted in default of payment of the fine, namely, 6 months in addition to the substantive sentence of imprisonment passed upon him. Further, he alleges that the fact of realisation of a part of the fine, if intimated to the jail authorities, would have earned for him a remission of sentence, but that he received no such remission on account of partial realization of the fine besides the usual remission for good conduct under the Jail Code. Subsequently, on 7th March 1935, a warrant was issued under S. 386, Criminal P. C., by Mr. B. Sinha, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Burdwan, authorising the Collector of the district to realise the unrealised part of the fine, viz., Rs. 456, according to civil process by attachment and sale of the immoveable properties of the petitioner. The petitioner further alleges that although it appeared clear from the settlement papers, etc., that he had some landed properties, no proper steps were taken to realise the unrealised portion of the fine till after the lapse of three years from the date of his conviction.

The arguments raised on behalf of the petitioner are that the Court of Mr. B. Sinha, who issued the warrant, not being a Court of the Special Magistrate who passed the sentence or his successor-in-office, had no power to issue the warrant. Further, the warrant was not signed by Mr. Sinha as a Special Magistrate but as Sub-divisional Magistrate of Burdwan. Further it has been argued that under S. 386, Criminal P. C., where the offender has suffered the whole of the imprisonment ordered to be undergone in default of payment of the fine, the Court shall not issue a warrant for the realisation of the fine, unless for special reasons to be recorded in writing it considers it necessary to do so. With regard to the first point, Ordinance 11 of 1931 provided in Chap. 1 for certain emergency powers, and in Chap. 2 for certain Special Criminal Courts, and S. 23 (included in that Chapter) provided that Courts of criminal jurisdiction may be constituted under that Ordinance of the following classes: namely, (i) Special tribunals and (ii) Special Magistrates. The note in the margin of that section is "Special Court." S. 386, Criminal P. C., provides that:

Whenever an offender has been sentenced to pay a fine, the Court passing the sentence may take action for the recovery of the fine by issuing certain warrants; provided that, if the sentence directs that in default of payment of the fine, the offender shall be imprisoned, and if such offender has undergone the whole of such imprisonment in default, no Court shall issue such warrant unless for special reasons to be recorded in writing it considers it necessary to do so.

Section 389 provides that:

Every warrant for the execution of any sentence may be issued either by the Judge or Magistrate who passed the sentence, or by his successor-in-office.

It is contended on behalf of the Crown that Mr. Sinha is the successor-in-office of Mr. S. P. Ghose within the meaning of this section. In my opinion this contention is not sound. The sentence, passed by Mr. S. P. Ghose was passed by him as a Special Magistrate forming a Special Criminal Court within the meaning of S. 23, Ordinance 11 of 1931. That Court came to an end in May 1932. Mr. Sinha, who succeeded Mr. Ghose as Sub-divisional Magistrate, cannot possibly be held to be Mr. Ghose's successor as a Special Magistrate forming a Special Criminal Court within the meaning of that section. Similarly, although Mr. Sinha became a Special Magistrate on the very day he made the order in question, he did not make the order as a Special Magistrate, and it is doubtful whether he even knew that special powers had been conferred upon him. Moreover, he was appointed a Special Magistrate under the Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act (12 of 1932). Consequently, it is not possible to argue that on account of this appointment, he became the successor-in-office of Mr. Ghose, the Special Magistrate under the previous Ordinance, who convicted the accused and inflicted the sentence upon him.

Ordinance 9 of 1932 in S. 4 thereof provides that where before the expiration of the Bengal Emergency Powers Ordinance, 1931, an order has been made thereunder for the trial of any person by a Special Magistrate, but the trial has not begun, or the trial has proceeded but has not been completed, the offence may be tried or the trial completed by such Special Magistrate and such Special Magistrate shall continue to have all the powers with which he was vested under the said Ordinance. If a further provision had been made under that section for the execution by warrant of fines inflicted as part of the sentence as in the present case, no difficulty would have arisen. It is conceivable that the difficulty might be met by applying the provisions of S. 559, Criminal P. C. That section provides that:

The powers and duties of a Judge or Magistrate may be exercised or performed by his successor-in-office. And when there is any doubt as to who is his successor-in-office, then any such Magistrate or the District Magistrate shall determine, by an order in writing, the Magistrate who shall, for the purposes of the Code or of any proceedings or order thereunder, be deemed to be the successor-in-office of such Magistrate.

It is not necessary to give any decision on this point, because that matter is not in issue at the present moment and will have to be decided when if at all, such an order is made in this or any other similar case. The other point raised on behalf of the petitioner is that Mr. Sinha who issued the warrant, did not record any special reason in writing within the meaning of the proviso to S. 386. The reason he recorded was that the petitioner was a man of dangerous character. In my opinion this was not such a reason as is contemplated by the section. In 59 Bom 350 (1), Sir John Beaumont, C. J. said that the Court should follow the policy which seems to have inspired the proviso to S. 386, which appears to be that in general an offender ought not to be required both to pay the fine and to serve the sentence in default. But the proviso enables a warrant to be issued for recovery of the fine even if the whole sentence of default has been served, if the Court considers that there are special reasons for issuing the warrant and in his opinion, those should be reasons accounting for the fact that the fine has not been recovered before the sentence in default has been served. I am in agreement with the remarks of the learned Chief Justice. Except in special cases it seems to me both undesirable and unfair to seek to realise a fine when the sentence ordered to be served in default of payment of the fine has already been served in full; and in my opinion the proviso is intended to deal with cases where for some sufficient reason the authorities have not been able to realise the fine before the default sentence has been served. It is true that there seems to be some evidence to show that the authorities did try to realise the fine but were not aware that the petitioner possessed landed properties.

On the other hand, he alleges that they had the settlement papers which they could have had examined and which would show clearly that he was the owner of the properties, and that their inability to realise the fine was due to their own laches. Whether that be true or not, that is not the reason recorded by the learned Magistrate for issuing a warrant within the meaning of the proviso to S. 386, Criminal P. C. For all these reasons, I am of opinion that the order of Mr. Sinha must be set aside and the warrant quashed.

Jack, J.—I agree that the order should be set aside as it appears to be a case which is not contemplated by the Criminal Procedure Code, namely, where there is no successor-in-office to the Special Magistrate. S. 559 applies where there is any doubt as to who is the successor-in-office and possibly it might be held that under that section, the District Magistrate would be empowered to appoint a successor-in-office for the purpose of these proceedings. But in this case no such appointment has been made. As regards the other point, it may be noted that although in the Bombay case, 59 Bom 350 (1), the learned Chief Justice held that the reason given by the Magistrate was not such a reason as is referred to in S. 386, he still refused to interfere with the order for the execution of the warrant on the ground that although the reason given by the Magistrate was not such a reason, still there was a special reason in that case why the warrant should be executed, namely a reason similar to that which the prosecution alleged in the present case i. e. that the authorities had endeavoured to realise the fine but had not been able to do so in due time owing to not knowing where the properties were situated.

Appeal No. 194 of 1933, Decided on 23rd January 1936, from original decree of Sub-Judge, First Court, Bakargunj, D/- 22nd May 1933.

(a) Tort—Negligence—Collision between vessel at anchor and one in motion—Onus of proof is on latter.

The burden of proof in an action founded upon collision between a vessel at anchor and one in motion, is upon the owner of the latter to prove that the collision was not occasioned, by any negligence on their part. They have to prove that the collision was due to inevitable accident not arising from negligent navigation: The Annot Lyle, 11 P D 114, Rel. on.

(b) Tort—Negligence—Contributory negligence—Vessel lying at anchor not complying with regulation to have lights—But vessel visible from upper deck of vessel in motion and accident capable of being averted by exercise of ordinary care and skill—No contributory negligence arises and negligence of former will not excuse latter.

In a case of collision between a vessel at anchor and another in motion, it was found that the vessel at anchor had not complied with the regulation to have lights on the boat. But it was found that this absence of light was not the cause of the collision, that the boat was visible from a distance of about 300 cubits from the upper deck of the vessel in motion and that the accident could have been averted by the exercise of ordinary care and skill. In a suit for damages by former against latter:

Held: that the question of contributory negligence did not arise, and that as the defendants could by exercise of ordinary care and diligence have avoided the mischief which happened, the plaintiff's negligence would not excuse him: Radly v. L. and N. W. Ry. Co., (1867) 1 A C 754, Rel. on. [P 154 C 2, P 155 C 1]

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit described in the plaint filed in Court as a suit for compensation on account of the plaintiffs' cargo boats having been broken and sunk by a steamer owned by the defendants. The case of the plaintiffs, a firm carrying on business in the name and style of Ram Kanai Madhab Chandra Pal Radha Krishna Pal, Gobinda Chandra Pal, Krishna Kumar Choudhury Srinath Talukdar before the Court, was that in the month of December 1927, goods specified in detail in the plaint, belonging to them, were being carried from Calcutta to a place named Kalaiya Bandar in a boat (Narain Majhi's boat), which reached the river to the south of a village named Karmakati, on 16th December 1927, a little after dusk, and lay at anchor beyond the usual track of steamers passing by the river there, with lights on it, visible from a distance. On that night between 9-30 and 11 p. m. the steamer "Brahmin" of which the defendants the R. S. N. Co. Ltd., and the I. G. N. and Railway Company Ltd., were the owners, while on its journey from Patuakhali to Barisal, deviated from the usual route and collided with the boat and broke and sunk the same. The breaking and sinking of the boat, resulting from the collision, caused damage to the plaintiffs' firm, and compensation for damages and loss sustained was claimed. The claim was for recovery of Rs. 5,946-7-9, with interest from the defendant-companies.

The defence in the suit was that there was no negligence on the part of the master or Serang in navigating the steamer; that the steamer was following the usual steamer track and that the boat in question was in the deep navigable channel of the river and carried no light as required by the Government Regulations. The defendants pleaded non-liability for damages as claimed in the suit on the ground that the boat was kept in deep and navigable water channel, without any light on it. On the pleadings of the parties bearing upon the main case before the Court, a number of issues were raised for determination. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below, on the three of these issues requires consideration in the appeal as the decree passed in favour of the plaintiffs in the suit for the amount of Rs. 4,995-7-6, against which this appeal is directed is based on the decision of those issues.

Issue 4. Whether the accident was due to any negligence or rashness on the part of the master and senior Serang of S. S. Brahmin in navigating his vessel.

Issue 5. Whether the accident was due to Narain Majhi keeping his boat in the deep navigable channel and not exhibiting any light as required by law?

Issue 6. Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to any damages from the defendants? If so, what is the amount of such damage?

The findings on evidence in this case documentary and oral, so far as they are material for the purpose of this appeal, may be summarised under the following three different heads: I. The Serang allowed the steamer to go beyond the usual track and got into the places used for the mooring of boats, and collided with the boat in question. The Serang or master of the steamer was not fully acquainted with the usual tract of steamers in the Patuakhali line. II. There were lights before the collision in the boat in question as also in other two boats, lying close by, as required by the Government Rules. III. The steamer clerk went to the upper deck; and he and the Serang were conversing with each other, and the talk in which they were absorbed went on until black things, i. e., the boat in question, along with other boats, were seen on the river, at a distance of 10 to 15, or 15 to 20 cubits off from the prow of the steamer, when they were first seen by them. On the evidence coming from the defendants' side, there was no fog in the river at the time of or before the collision, and that there was negligence on the part of the Serang not to see the boats when they were 300 feet or so off from the steamer. Witness 1 for the defendants deposed to the fact that things up to 200 cubits were visible; according to witness 2, things up to 150 to 200 cubits were visible. Mr. Dunn, the Marine Assistant of the defendants at the time of the accident, and who was on board the steamer at the time, deposed to these facts: There was no fog till after midnight, i. e., till after the steamer had left the place of accident. It would not be correct for anybody to say that at that time of accident there was fog. Owing to darkness objects on both sides of the river could not be seen clearly but they could be seen from 300 feet at most from the steamer.

On consideration of the evidence in the case, the whole of which was placed before us, the conclusion arrived at by the Judge in the Court below mentioned under I and II above, does not appear to us to be justifiable. The evidence in the case does not make out the position that there was any usual track or route which had to be followed on the part of the river where the collision took place, in the Patuakhali line, nor could it be said, on the evidence before us that the Serang of the steamer was not acquainted with the track to be followed by a steamer in the Patuakhali line. The materials on record do not further establish the fact on which great deal of evidence appears to have been adduced on both sides, that there were lights on Narain Majhi's boat, the boat in question, as was asserted by the plaintiffs. The presence of lights on the other boats lying close by was not of much importance or consequence in view of the definite case before the Court as to lights having been exhibited by Narain Majhi's boat, which was sunk as the result of collision. The other findings arrived at by the Court below as mentioned in III above, appear to us to be amply supported by the evidence in the case. The evidence in the case establishes that there was negligence on the part of the Serang, that the collision was not an inevitable accident, inasmuch as he could have but had not seen the boat with which the steamer collided when it was at a distance of 300 feet from the prow of the steamer; that a competent Serang could easily have averted the collision by the exercise of ordinary care and skill. The evidence in the case indicates further that the absence of light on the boat was not the cause of collision, seeing that the Serang and the steamer clerk who were on the upper deck together saw what according to the clerk was a "big black heap" and according to the Serang, two or three black marks like

"jungles" or "black things". On the materials before us, we have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion, in agreement with the Judge in the Court below, that both the Serang and the steamer clerk were unreliable witnesses, so far as important facts arising for consideration in the case go, and that there was clear indication in their evidence, taking the same with other evidence, that their endeavour throughout was to clear their own conduct and exonerate the defendants from liability if possible. "The big black heap" and "the black marks like jungles" or "black things" in their evidence were the boats lying at anchor, which according to unimpeachable evidence on record were visible from the upper deck of the steamer from a distance of 300 cubits, and the absence of light therefore could not possibly be taken to be the cause of collision, which could very well have been averted but for the negligence of the person entrusted with the navigation of the steamer. The collision was due to negligence and failure on the part of the Serang to use ordinary care and skill, and not to the fact of there being absence of light on the boat with which the steamer collided. On the facts of the case as established by evidence dealt with above, the law applicable to the case before us may be briefly reviewed, with reference to the authority of decided cases bearing upon the questions arising for consideration.

The burden of proof, although it loses its importance in a case like the present where all the relevant and material evidence has been placed on record, by one side or the other, in an action founded upon a collision between a vessel at anchor and one in motion is upon the owner of the latter to prove that the collision was not occasioned by any negligence on their part. The defendant has to prove that the collision was due to inevitable accident not arising from negligent navigation: see 11 P D 114 (1). The defendant in the case before us did not satisfy the test by evidence led on their side; and did not discharge the onus that was upon them. The question of onus directly arising for consideration in a case of collision between a steamship and a sailing vessel, which had failed to comply with Admiralty Regulations regarding lights, was considered in 3 P C 212 (2), in which the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, being of opinion that the collision might have been avoided if the sailing vessel had obeyed the regulations, she was to blame for the collision that occurred. It was held in that case, that though the omission to exhibit proper lights might be immaterial where it was shown that absence of such lights was not the cause of the collision and did not conduce to it, the onus lay on such vessel to show that non-compliance with regulation was not the cause of the collision. In the case before us, not only the evidence for the plaintiffs, but the evidence on the side of the owners of the steamer, indicates clearly that the absence of lights on the boat was not the cause of the collision. The evidence coming from the side of the plaintiffs and the defendants points clearly to the fact that the boat at anchor was visible from the upper deck of the steamer, and that the collision was due not to the absence of light on the boat, but to the negligence and want of exercise of ordinary care and skill on the part of the Serang.

In the case before us a vessel under steam ran down a boat at her mooring when there was no fog, and when things on the river and on its banks were visible at a distance of 300 cubits from the steamer. That fact was prima facie evidence of fault on the part of the steamer, and she could not escape liability for the consequences of the act, except by proving that a competent Serang could have averted the collision by the exercise of ordinary care and skill: 14 A C 40 (3). The evidence in this case establishes the position that the Serang concerned could very well have averted the collision with the exercise of ordinary care and skill on his part.

The question of contributory negligence does not arise in the case before us on the conclusions on evidence mentioned in different parts of the judgment. There is no doubt about the proposition that the plaintiff in an action for negligence cannot succeed if it is found that he himself has been guilty of negligence or want of ordinary care which contributed to cause an accident. But the proposition is well established that the plaintiff may have been guilty of negligence, and although that negligence, may, in part, have contributed to the accident, yet if the defendants could by exercise of ordinary care and diligence have avoided the mischief which happened, the plaintiffs' negligence will not excuse him: see (1867) 1 A C 754 (4). The plaintiffs in this case might have been at fault for not having complied with Government rules for exhibition of lights on their boats lying at anchor; but the collision could very well have been averted by the exercise of ordinary care and skill of the Serang of the steamer, who we have no doubt, on the evidence before us, saw or was in a position to see the boat at anchor from a distance, and could well have by exercise of ordinary care prevented the collision. On the conclusions we have arrived, as indicated above, the decision of the Court below, holding the defendants liable for damages must be affirmed.

The quantum of damages has been determined by the Court on evidence before it, regard being had to the claim in suit. Out of the total amount of Rupees 4,995-7-6, decreed in favour of the plaintiffs, the sum of Rs. 500 approximately was objected on three main grounds. It was urged on behalf of the defendants-appellants, that the amount of Rupees 287-4-9, representing the expenses incurred by the plaintiffs for sending the goods mentioned in Sch. (Ka) to the plaint, from Calcutta to Kaliya Bandar, should not have been allowed; that Rs. 200 should not have been allowed for miscellaneous expenses; and that the amount of Rs. 100 for costs of conducting criminal case was not recoverable by the plaintiffs from the defendants. In the matter of costs for sending goods from Calcutta to Kaliya Bandar, it was conceded on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents in this appeal, that the amount charged under that head could not properly be allowed to the plaintiffs in the suit. In regard to the three items generally it was stated that interest on damages having been disallowed by the Court below, the plaintiffs were entitled to get the amounts under the above three heads, on an equitable consideration of the case before the Court. In our judgment, the Court below was right in disallowing interest on damages in the case before us; and taking all the three items together, it would not be unfair, on the materials on record, to allow deduction in favour of the defendants-appellants, to the extent of Rs. 500, as claimed by them in this appeal from the total amount of damages decreed against them. The amount of Rs. 500 will be deducted from the amount of Rs. 4,994-7-6 mentioned in the decree of the Court below, passed in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents. The decree passed by the lower Court, against which this appeal is directed, is affirmed in other respects. The parties are to bear their own costs in this Court.

Judgment.—The question involved in this appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled to get a decree for rent against the defendants as tenants at the rate of Rs. 76-12-7 a year or at the rate of Rs. 58-13-10 a year. It is admitted that the tenancy is a permanent tenancy. It is also admitted that Rs. 58-13-10 have been realized by the landlord from the tenants up to the year 1316. It is a finding of the Court that the origin of the tenancy is lost in obscurity, at least it was not created after the Transfer of Property Act came into force: and there is no registered document or any document showing the creation of the tenancy. The landlord's case is that at the time of the Settlement Operation under Ch. 10, Ben. Ten. Act, excess lands were found in possession of the tenants, that is to say, more land than what was stated in the collection paper of the landlord; and that in the year 1317, the tenants verbally agreed to pay additional rent for excess area, and the total rent was settled at Rs. 76-12-7 which the tenants undertook to pay from 1317, and the tenants had in fact paid at that rate since 1317. The defendants state that the rent was Rs. 58-13-10 and that is still the rent and the landlord never realized rent at the higher rate at any time, and that in any event the said contract cannot be proved except by a registered document.

In support of the landlord's claim he produced a large number of counterfoils of rent receipts from the year 1317 up to a few years of the suit. These counterfoil rent receipts show that rent has been realized at the rate of Rupees 76-12-7. Both the Courts below have believed these counterfoils to be genuine and they have found that the landlord realized from the tenants from 1317 rent at Rs. 76-12-7. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's claim at the aforesaid rate. But the lower appellate Court has dismissed the plaintiff's claim. From the evidence of realization of rent at the rate of Rs. 76-12-7 from 1317, the necessary inference is that that figure was arrived at by agreement between the landlord and the tenants, that is to say the tenants agreed orally to pay from 1317 at the rate of Rupees 76-12-7 instead of the low rate of Rs. 58-13-10. The lower appellate Court in granting the plaintiff a decree at the rate of Rs. 58-13-10, has held that such oral contract was ineffective in law, for such a contract must be by a registered document. If a permanent tenancy is created after the Transfer of Property Act it is clear that a registered document is necessary under S. 107, T. P. Act. The question, therefore, is whether the rent of a permanent tenancy can be varied after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act by an oral agreement, that is to say without a registered document. As I have said, the lower appellate Court has taken the view that it cannot be done without a registered document.

Mr. Sen on behalf of the appellant contends that the view taken by the lower appellate Court is wrong, and for that purpose he cites before me a passage from the case of 11 C L J 22 (1). The passage is to be found at p. 25 of the report, and it runs as follows:

The question to be decided in the case of every dowl therefore is as to whether it embodies a special agreement between the parties; if it does, it requires registration; if it does not the registration is not needed. Now in the case before us it cannot be said that the dowl upon which reliance was placed is a lease. There was a pre-existing tenancy; that is the common case of both the parties. The only effect of the dowl was to evidence that there had been a commutation of rent and that the rent which was previously payable, partly in kind and partly in cash, was henceforth to be paid in cash. To a document of this description the principle laid down by this Court in 24 Cal 20 (2), and by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in 22 Mad 217 (3) applies. That principle is that a document given by the owner of land to his tenant or by the tenant to his landlord, varying the term of the tenancy with reference to the amount of rent to be paid is not an interest in immoveable property and does not require registration.

The question is whether the passage which I have italicized above, is still good law in view of the decision of the Full Bench in 39 Cal 284 (4). So far as the facts of the case of 11 C L J 22 (1) are concerned there cannot be any doubt that the actual decision therein has not been affected by the Full Bench, for in that case there was no question of variation of rent of a tenancy. The rent was originally fixed partly in cash and partly in kind, and all that the landlord and tenant agreed upon was to put a value upon the rent payable in kind and agreed to pay thereafter the rent in cash only. In the referring order to the Full Bench Woodroffe, J. and Caspersz, J., relying upon 24 Cal 20 (2), and the case of Obai Goundan (3) (supra) noticed in the aforesaid passage in 11 C L J 22 (1),

1. Haro Prosad Das v. Ram Narain Chowdhury, (1910) 11 C L J 22=2 I C 89.
2. Satyesh Chandra v. Dhunpat Sing, (1897) 24 Cal 20.
3. Obai Goundan v. Ramlinga Ayyar, (1899) 22 Mad 217=8 M L J 256.
4. Lalit Mohan Ghose v. Gopali Chuk Coal Co. Ltd., (1912) 39 Cal 284=12 I C 723 (FB).

expressed the view that a document which varied an existing rent in a registered lease did not require registration. The Full Bench, however, had to consider the case of variation of rent or royalty, or reduction of rent or royalty in a lease originating with a registered document executed after the Transfer of Property Act, by reason of certain letters written by the landlord and the tenant by which an agreement for reduction of royalty had been arrived at. But in dealing with this question the Full Bench went into the matter fully and after referring to S. 107, T. P. Act, said that the plain intent of that section was that all essentials of a lease of this description, that is to say a lease of immoveable property from year to year or any term exceeding one year, or reserving an annual rent, must be embodied in one or more documents duly registered, and then it pointed out that the provision about the amount of rent was an essential element of a lease. In my judgment, therefore, the reasons so given by the Full Bench in the case of 39 Cal 284 (4), furnish an answer to the case which I have before me, and the said Full Bench case affected very much the law as laid down in the portion of the judgment in the case of 11 C L J 22 (1), which I have underlined. It might be mere incidentally noticed that Mookerjee, J., who delivered the judgment in 11 C L J 22 (1) was himself a party to the Full Bench judgment.

Having regard to these facts, I do hold that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in holding that without a registered document, the plaintiff is not entitled to claim rent at more than the rate of Rs. 58-13-10 a year. The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

JACK, J.

Arman Shaik and others — Accused—Petitioners.

v.

Naimuddin Shaik—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 894 of 1935, Decided on 19th November 1935.

Penal Code (1860), Ss. 143 and 427—Person put in possession of field under O. 21, R. 95, Civil P. C., cutting crops—No offence under either S. 143 or S. 427 is committed.

Where a purchaser is put into possession of fields under O. 21, R. 95, Civil P. C., he is entitled to cut the crop standing on it and he cannot be convicted under Ss. 143 and 427, Penal Code. [P 158 C 1]

*Sudhansu Sekhar Mukherjee—*for Petitioners.

*Nirmal Chandra Das Gupta—*for Opposite Party.

Order.—In this case a rule was issued on the District Magistrate and the opposite party to show cause why an order convicting the petitioners under Ss. 143 and 427, Penal Code, and fining one Rs. 100 and the other petitioners Rs. 50 each should not be set aside.

The prosecution case is that the petitioners and others forcibly cut and took away unripe paddy from the complainant's land and thereby committed mischief to the extent of Rs. 1,200. The finding is that the petitioners had been put in symbolical possession by a civil Court and that they had been trying to oust the complainant and one Musobdi from the land. These were the persons who actually grew the crop and the petitioners came there and cut away the unripe crop while the complainant left the locality in order to institute a suit to restrain the petitioners from cutting away the standing crop from the land.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioners that they had been put into actual physical possession by a civil Court of the land with the standing crop and were therefore entitled to cut the crop. On a reference to the statement of the complainant it appears that the complainant admits that the petitioners were put into possession by a civil Court. There appears to be nothing on the record in support of the theory that they were merely put into symbolical possession. In the circumstances, having been put into possession of the land and the crop by a civil Court, they were perfectly entitled to cut the paddy whether it was ripe or unripe.

The deposition of the Assistant Sub-Inspector in another case against the petitioners had been shown to me in which he states that only ripe paddy was cut and that the unripe paddy was not cut. The proceedings under S. 144 which followed this case also show that all the paddy was not reaped. There appears to be therefore some doubt whether the Courts below were right in accepting the complainant's statement that the paddy which was cut was unripe. The petitioners apparently were put into possession under O. 21, R. 95 and that being the case, they were entitled to cut the crop, and their convictions under Ss. 143 and 427 cannot be supported.

This rule is, accordingly, made absolute and the convictions and the sentences are set aside. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

B.D./R.K. Rule made absolute.

Special Bench

MUKERJI, AG. C. J., LORT-WILLIAMS
AND S. K. GHOSE, JJ.

In the matter of N, an Advocate.

O. O. C. J., Decided on 10th January 1936.

(a) Legal Practitioner — Professional or other misconduct—Court has jurisdiction to take action in respect of all misconducts—Under S. 10 (1), Bar Councils Act, Court can take cognizance of all misconducts—Discretion left in Court should be judicially exercised.

By the words professional or other misconduct, the legislature intended to confer on the Court jurisdiction to take action in all cases of misconduct, whether in a professional or other capacity. The word 'may' in sub-s. 1 of S. 10, Bar Councils Act, makes it plain, that while the jurisdiction of the Court is not restricted but extends to all cases of misconduct, a discretion is left to the Court to take action in suitable cases only. It is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule, and the exercise of the discretion will often have to be varied with changing conditions. No general principles can or ought to be laid down fettering the Court's discretion, except that it must be exercised judicially: In re Weare, (1893) 11 Q B 439 and 1935 P C 168, Ref. [P 159 C 2; P 160 C 1]

* (b) Legal Practitioner—Misconduct —Two tests—One of misconduct such as to be unworthy of remaining in profession; second of unfitness to perform duties of advocate—Two tests to be read disjunctively — Tests equally applicable in cases of suspension or reprimand of advocates.

The test that the Court has to apply in considering whether an advocate should be struck off the roll of advocates is whether the proved misconduct of the advocate is such that he must be regarded as unworthy to be a member of the honourable profession to which he has been admitted, and unfit to be entrusted with the responsible duties that an advocate is called upon to perform. The two conditions laid down as aforesaid should be taken disjunctively so that on the fulfilment of any one of the conditions the test would be regarded as satisfied. This test would prove a sound working rule in the majority of cases and would be applicable to all branches of the profession: the first condition being a standard applicable to all, and as regards the second condition the circumstances to be taken into consideration differing according to the duties attaching to the particular profession. The test speaks of striking off the roll which is equivalent to removal. But as regards suspension or reprimand the test would apply equally well, the form of the action taken being dependent on the nature and gravity of the misconduct found and also other circumstances: 1934 Rang 33, Applied. [P 160 C 1]

(c) Legal Practitioner — Disciplinary jurisdiction of Court —Jurisdiction should not be employed either to aid or to supplement ordinary criminal law of the land.

The disciplinary jurisdiction vested in Courts should not be employed merely in aid of the criminal law of the land and merely to supplement, as it were, by way of a further punishment, a punishment which the advocate has received under that law for the misconduct of which he is guilty: Ex parte Brounsall, 2 Cowd Rep 829, Applied. [P 160 C 2]

* (d) Legal Practitioner—Misconduct—Conviction of criminal offence is per se evidence of misconduct—All criminal offences do not call for disciplinary measures—Conviction for sedition does not necessarily involve removal or suspension of advocate—Court should consider facts on which conviction is based.

Conviction of a criminal offence is per se evidence of misconduct. But while conviction for a criminal offence is prima facie evidence of misconduct, all criminal convictions are not grounds for the exercise of the Court's disciplinary jurisdiction, e. g., motoring offences. A mere conviction under S 124-A does not necessarily involve the removal or suspension of a legal practitioner but the Court must ascertain and take into consideration the facts on which the conviction is based: 1935 P C 168; 1922 P C 351; 1934 Lah 251; 6 N L R 129; 1920 Bom 168 and 1924 Mad 129, Discussed.

S. C. Roy, P. C. Ghose, J. C. Moitra and R. Chowdhury—for Advocate.

A. K. Roy—for the Crown.

H. C. Mazumdar—for the Bar Council.

Judgment. — Mr. Niharendra Dutt Mazumdar, a Barrister of the Middle Temple, was enrolled under the Bar Councils Act, on 11th January 1933 and was admitted as an advocate of this Court, his name being entered in the roll of advocates entitled to appear and plead on the original side of the Court on 17th January 1933. It is his case that soon after his enrolment as aforesaid he began to take a prominent part in Labour and Trade Union movements and became, as he says, an "Honorary Trustee," some sort of a principal officer of a Trade Union of the labourers of the Port and Docks of Calcutta registered under the Indian Trade Unions Act of 1926. In 1934, between 3rd March and 2nd December, he delivered a number of speeches at certain meetings of the Union held at public places. For three of the speeches, said to have been made on 3rd, 4th and 18th March respectively, proceedings under S. 107, Criminal P. C., were taken against him and the Magistrate ordered him to be bound over to keep the peace for one year, and this order was affirmed by this Court on appeal. For three other speeches, made respectively on 29th April, 11th November and 2nd December, the Magistrate convicted him in three separate cases under S. 124, Penal Code, and sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for nine months, one year and one year respectively. He preferred appeals to this Court in the first and the third of these cases, but not in the second case, and this Court being of opinion that the sentence which he was undergoing in the second case would be sufficient for all the cases, reduced the sentence in the first case to the period already undergone and ordered the sentence in the third case to run concurrently with that in the second case.

In the meantime, upon a petition presented by the Registrar on the original side of this Court on 22nd July 1935, in which all the aforesaid cases were set out the Court referred the matter to the Bar Council for inquiry. The tribunal constituted for the purpose held the inquiry, its findings having been received, the case has come up before us for passing final orders.

A considerable part of the arguments addressed to us on behalf of the advocate was directed to establish that the misconduct referred to in sub-s. (1) of S. 10, Indian Bar Councils Act, means such misconduct as would make a lawyer unfit for the exercise of his profession. This contention apparently is based upon a comparison of the language of the said subsection with the wording of Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent, under which the Court can take action on reasonable cause; it being suggested that the legislature by using the word "misconduct" in the Indian Bar Councils Act in the place of the more indefinite phrase "reasonable cause" in the Letters Patent has restricted the powers of the High Court in this respect. On this supposition it has been argued that the words "professional or other misconduct" can mean misconduct in a professional capacity and also only such misconduct in a private capacity as would denote unfitness for the duties of an advocate. The argument is sought to be supported by reference to these decisions of English Courts in which arose the question of taking disciplinary action against Solicitors and in which, while formulating the principles on which such action should be taken, the question of their unfitness to practice as Solicitors was stressed upon. One such case is (1893) 11 Q B 439 (1) in which Lopes L. J., observed :

The jurisdiction of the Court extends not only to the case where the misconduct has been connected with the profession of the Solicitors, but also to cases where the conduct, though not so connected, has been such as to make it clear to the Court that that person is no longer fit to be held out as a fit and proper person to exercise the important functions with which the Court entrusts him. * * *

If he has previously misconducted himself we should consider whether the circumstances were such as to prevent his being admitted or whether he had condoned his offence by subsequent good conduct, the principle on which the Court acts being to see that suitors are not exposed to improper officers of the Court.

But in the same case Lord Esher, M. R., expressed himself in words which may perhaps be read as taking a much wider view of the Court's jurisdiction in this respect. He observed :

The Court is not bound to strike him off the rolls unless it considers that the criminal offence of which he has been convicted is of such a personally disgraceful character that he ought not to remain a member of that strictly honourable profession.

There is, however, no authority in which it has been said that in the case of misconduct in a private capacity, unless it denotes unfitness in professional capacity, action should not be taken. And I do not see why the words "professional or other misconduct" should not be read in their plain and natural meaning. I therefore respectfully agree with Beaumont, C. J., in holding that by the words aforesaid the legislature intended to confer on the Court jurisdiction to take action in all cases of misconduct, misconduct in a professional or other capacity : 59 Bom 57 (2), affirmed on appeal by the Judicial Committee in 39 C W N 1281 (3). The word "may" in sub-s. (1) of S. 10 of the Act makes it plain, that while the jurisdiction of the Court is not restricted but extends to all cases of misconduct, a discretion is left to Court to take action in suitable cases only. With regard to the exercise of the Court's discretion in a case of this nature, or for the matter of that in any other case, it is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule, and the exercise of the discretion will often have to be varied with changing conditions. No general principles can or ought to be laid down fettering the Court's discretion, except that it must be exercised judicially. But if reported decisions afford us a guide, I would adopt, with respect, the test which Page, C. J., on a consideration of some of the authorities, laid down in 12 Rang 110 (4). He said :

The test that the Court has to apply in considering whether an advocate should be struck off the roll of advocates is whether the proved misconduct of the advocate is such that he must be regarded as unworthy to remain a member of the honourable profession to which he has been admitted, and unfit to be entrusted with the responsible duties that an advocate is called upon to perform.

With all respect I would prefer to take the two conditions laid down as aforesaid disjunctively, and apply the test in that way so that on the fulfilment of any one of the conditions the test would be regarded as satisfied. This test would prove a sound working rule in the majority of cases and would be applicable to all branches of the profession; the first condition being a standard applicable to all and as regards the second condition the circumstances to be taken into consideration differing according to the duties attaching to the particular profession. The test speaks of 'striking off the roll' which is equivalent to removal. But as regards suspension or reprimand the test would apply equally well, the form of the action taken being dependent on the nature and gravity of the misconduct found and also on other circumstances. Amongst the principles that are well settled in this connexion one is contained in the following words of Lord Mansfield in 2 Cowd Rep 829 (5) :

This application is not in the nature of a second trial or a new punishment. But the question is whether after the conduct of this man, it is proper that he should continue a member of the profession which should stand free of all suspicion. It is not by way of punishment, but the Courts in such cases, exercise their discretion, whether a man whom they have formerly admitted is a proper person to be continued on the roll or not.

If the above principle be correct, then another principle follows immediately from it and it is this: that the disciplinary jurisdiction vested in Courts should not be employed merely in aid of the Criminal law of the land and merely to supplement, as it were, by way of a further punishment, a punishment which the advocate has received under that law for the misconduct of which he is guilty.

The present case is not one in which the advocate concerned had engaged himself in revolutionary activities designed to destroy the Government or the system of which the Courts of justice form part or to boycott the Courts or to break any particular law which it is the duty of the Courts to administer. Nor is there any indication of his having made an organised or persistent attempt to create a breach of the peace or to incite acts tending to subvert law and order. In the speeches that he made on a subject in which he was interested, he advocated certain reforms and supported a policy which suited his ideals, and in the course of those speeches he made utterances which were open to objection. For some of these speeches it was considered necessary to bind him over for a year to keep the peace, and in others, passages were found in which he had transgressed the limits of fair criticism and which appeared to bring him within the clutches of the law as to sedition. For the offences of sedition he was punished in the three cases in which he was tried. It is really the convictions in these last mentioned cases which have to be regarded for the present purpose.

That to be convicted of sedition is to be found guilty of a misconduct cannot be denied. Indeed it is beyond question now that conviction of a criminal offence is per se evidence of misconduct: 59 Bom 57 (2), affirmed on appeal by the Judicial Committee in 39 C W N 1281 (3). But while conviction for a criminal offence is prima facie evidence of misconduct, all criminal convictions are not grounds for the exercise of the Court's disciplinary jurisdiction e.g., motoring offences. And here the first question is whether a conviction for the offence of sedition is such misconduct as would, in all circumstances, require action to be taken under the Court's disciplinary jurisdiction. A consideration of some of the authorities relevant upon the point will be useful. A case to which very great importance must attach is that of 49 Cal 845 (6), in which a pleader made speeches at various places against a particular land revenue system in vogue in the Province, in the course of which he characterized the system as unjust and illegal, and advised his audience to stop payment under that system and leave it to Government to recover the dues by attachment. His sanad was cancelled upon grounds one of which was that his conduct appeared to be incompatible with his obvious duties and responsibilities as an official of the Court. The case went up to the Judicial Committee and their Lordships in refusing leave laid stress on the point that the pleader had not confined himself to protests, however vehement, against the tax or against its injustice, but that he had urged an organised resistance of payment and attempted to establish a system which would have impeded and might have defeated its recovery with grave danger to public peace. The case was one under S. 13 (f), Legal Practitioners Act.

The abovementioned cases, as well as a large number of other cases where legal practitioners convicted under S. 17, Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908, or under S. 3, Police Incitement Disaffection Act, 1922, or for similar other offences, or found guilty of Civil Disobedience, or of participating in hartals or revolutionary campaigns for breaking or disobeying the laws of the land have been referred to and discussed in an elaborate judgment by Jai Lal, J., in 15 Lah 354 (7). Of these cases special reference must be made to three. One of these is 8 I C 282 (8), in which a legal practitioner of the Central Provinces was convicted under S. 124-A, I. P. C. and the question of his dismissal arose under S. 12, Legal Practitioners Act. The Court held that

Prima facie, such a conviction implied a defect of character and that loyalty to the Crown is a fundamental part of the structure of the legal profession throughout the British Empire.

It was found that the sedition of the pleader took the form of an implacable hatred of the British rule and everything connected with it, indicating a desire and intention not to correct but to root out the Government of India. And it was found that, even after the punishment was served out, he stubbornly adhered to his criminal tendencies and that there was an entire absence of any change of character or disposition in the direction of loyalty to the Crown. On these findings the pleader was dismissed.

Another case is 44 Bom 418 (9), in which the Advocates involved had signed a pledge whereby they bound themselves to refuse civilly to obey certain laws and such other laws as a committee to be appointed thereafter might think fit. Mcleod, C. J., held that it was the duty of the legal practitioners to advise their clients to the best of their abilities as to what the law is, and not as to what the law should be in their opinion, and that this conflict should be more pronounced if any of the legal practitioners had occasion to advise his clients regarding one of the laws denounced by the league, and added:

A very sound principle to remember is that those who live by the law should keep the law.

Beaumont, C. J., Bom 57 (2), dissented from the aforesaid view and observed that no such embarrassment was likely to ensue and also observed:

In our opinion, the obligation of obedience to the law is neither greater nor less in the case of lawyers than that of other citizens. If the so-called principle means that those who earn their living by the practice of the law must cease to do so if they break the law, the condition is one which should be imposed under legislative authority when the advocate is admitted and not invented afterwards by the Court.

The third case is 75 I C 977 (10). In this case the legal practitioner had instigated to forsake the English Courts and resort to the Courts to be set up by the Congress and to cease paying taxes to Government. For this conduct the renewal of his sanad was refused, Coutts-Trotter, J. remarking as follows:

The last thing that I think we should consider ourselves concerned with in the ordinary way is what the political opinions of anybody are, whether they are members of the legal or any other profession. But while the Courts will always uphold the liberty of the subject in thought or speech, an applicant who comes to ask for the issue or renewal of a sanad is applying to be treated as a part of the machinery for the maintenance of law and order in the body politic and to take an active part in administering for the other subjects of the Crown the benefit that may be supposed to result from the upkeep of law and order. It is intolerable and illogical that a man should seek to be put in that position while at the same time he is saying that law and order should be disobeyed, that taxes are not to be paid, and that public offices are to be abandoned in order to paralyse the very life of the body politic.

It is apparent that the pleader in the case last mentioned was persisting in his tenets when the order aforesaid was made. On a consideration of the cases referred to in his judgment, Jailal, J., in the case aforementioned deduced certain tests and came to the following conclusion:

Applying the above tests to the present case, it seems to me that a mere conviction under S. 124-A does not necessarily involve the removal or suspension of a legal practitioner, but the Court must ascertain and take into consideration the facts on which the conviction is based.

The case before the learned Judge was one in which the advocate concerned had been convicted of sedition, and the question that was being considered was whether he should not be removed or suspended from practice under Cl. 8, Letters Patent of the Lahore High Court and S. 41, Legal Practitioners Act. I have carefully considered all the decisions referred to by the learned Judge and with the conclusion quoted above, I entirely agree. I have read the speeches which the advocate delivered on the several occasions. They certainly bring the advocate within the clutches of the law as to sedition, inasmuch as in some of the passages therein base motives were attributed to Government and remarks were made which were likely to lead to disaffection and hold the Government up to contempt in the eyes of the public. At the same time, however, I am clearly of opinion that the general tenor of the speeches was inoffensive and was such as one would expect to find in speeches made in connexion with questions affecting a labour union. I would say of all the speeches what was said in respect of one of them by my learned brother Lord Williams, J., namely:

Unfortunately in his enthusiasm, this accused, as so often happens, went over any line which could be held to be legitimate.

Regarding the speeches together, I find that except on some particular questions his views are not in any way hostile to the Government; and indeed there are several passages in them in which he may be taken to have advocated obedience to law and order. The tribunal of the Bar Council has pointed out:

Apart from his activities in connexion with the labour movement the respondent (meaning the advocate) seems to be a young man of good character, inexperienced in his profession, honest and straight in his dealings. No question of professional misconduct arises here. . . . After a very careful and anxious consideration of the speeches, and all the surrounding circumstances, we have come to the conclusion, not without some hesitation, that the respondent is guilty of 'other misconduct' under S. 10, Bar Councils Act; though in view of the fact that his speeches and conduct were in connexion with the then existing industrial movements and disputes, the case seemed to us to be very near the border line.

In my opinion no further action is called for in the case and I would order accordingly.

Madhabendra Kumar Shaha and another—Decree-holders—Respondents.

Appeal No. 117 of 1935, Decided on 23rd January 1936, from appellate order of Dist. Judge, Dacca, D/- 7th December 1934.

Company—Agreement by one class of creditors will not bind another class not party to agreement—Depositor in banking company obtaining decree ceases to be depositor—Hence he is not bound by scheme sanctioned by other depositors.

Sec. 153, Companies Act, itself contemplates an agreement with any class of creditors or an agreement with all creditors but, inasmuch as different classes affected by any scheme must hold separate meetings, and the term "class" must be confined to those persons whose rights are not so dissimilar as to make it possible for them to consult together with a view to their common interest, it is clear that an agreement arrived at by one class of creditors will not bind another class which has not been a party to it. And a depositor who has obtained a decree against a banking Company before any scheme has been embarked on by the latter, ceases to be a depositor and becomes a decree-holder. Hence where the scheme was sanctioned by one class of creditors the depositors, a decree-holder, an entirely different class of creditors, will not be bound by it. The position is not altered by the consideration that the depositors in the meeting purported to treat decree-holders as "creditors": 1935 Cal 117, Rel. on.

Bartley, J.—This appeal arises from an order made in execution proceedings. The judgment-creditor respondents obtained a compromise decree against the appellant Bank on 25th July 1933. On 28th August 1933, an order was obtained from this Court under S. 153, Companies Act, directing the Company to convene a meeting of its depositors for the purpose of considering a scheme of arrangement between the Company and its depositors. At this meeting, held in November 1933, it was agreed that depositors should not be entitled to demand payment for a period of seven years, and that each depositor should, for the purposes of the scheme, be deemed to be a creditor for the amount shown to his credit in the books of the Company as on 30th July 1933 irrespective of whether he had obtained a decree or not. The scheme was sanctioned by this Court on 23rd February 1934. On an application by the Bank objecting to the execution of the decree obtained by the respondents, the Court of first instance held that it could not be executed, on the ground that every depositor, whether armed with a decree or not, was bound by the arrangement entered into by the majority and sanctioned by this Court. The Court of appeal below reversed this decision, holding that the decree-holders ceased to be depositors when their decree was obtained. On appeal before us, it was contended on the strength of two decisions, 39 C W N 1198 (1) and 39 C W N 1199 (2), that this decision was wrong, and that the decree in the present case was incapable of execution.

Now the earlier of the two decisions

1. Barisal Loan Office v. Sasthi Oharan Bhattacharya, (1935) 39 C W N 1198.
2. Serajgunj Loan Office v. Nil Kanta Lahiri, 1935 Cal 777=39 C W N 1199=62 C L J 310.

cited is authority for the proposition that a scheme of composition passed and sanctioned under S. 153, Companies Act, binds all creditors of the Company, and it was definitely found in that case that on the facts, the composition applied to all the creditors, including the judgment-creditors. In the subsequent case cited, Mitter, J., while adopting the view of the law stated above, pointed out that it was the duty of the Court sanctioning a scheme under the Act to see that one class of creditors or depositors does not feast upon the rights of another class. "It is for this purpose," he went on to say, "that separate meetings must be convened by distinct classes of creditors." Finally he held that if the Court grants sanction, the agreement of the majority of the creditors with the Company binds all those who fall within the class represented by the said majority. With this view of law, we are in entire agreement. S. 153, Companies Act, itself contemplates an agreement with any class of creditors or an agreement with all creditors but, inasmuch as different classes affected by any scheme must hold separate meetings, and the term "Class" must be confined to those persons whose rights are not so dissimilar as to make it possible for them to consult together with a view to their common interest, it is clear that an agreement arrived at by one class of creditors will not bind another class which has not been a party to it. In the present case, the scheme applied to the depositors only. It bound all depositors with effect from 5th November 1933, the date of the meeting, but did not bind any other class of creditors.

If then the present appellants were depositors on that date, they could not execute their decree. They had been depositors but, on 25th July 1933, had obtained a decree in a suit to recover the amount in deposit. It has been held in 38 C W N 1171 (3), that a depositor who has obtained a decree against a banking Company before any scheme has been embarked on by the latter, ceases to be a depositor and becomes a decree-holder. We see no reason to dissent from this view. In our judgment there is no conflict in the principle underlying the three decisions of this Court in the cases referred to above, and what follows from that principle is that, in the present case, where the scheme was sanctioned by one class of creditors, the depositors, a decree-holder, an entirely different class of creditors, will not be bound by it. The position is not, in our opinion, altered by the consideration that the depositors in the meeting, purported to treat decree-holders as 'creditors.' The legal position remains that an agreement entered into by depositors would not necessarily bind creditors, who might conceivably include a much larger body of claimants. In the result, this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at three gold mohurs.

Guha, J.—I agree.

Appeal No. 322 of 1933, Decided on 8th April 1935, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Murshidabad, D/- 23rd August 1932.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 65—Document per se inadmissible in evidence can be objected to at any time—Objection to method of proof must be taken at earliest point of time—Document not inadmissible per se—Secondary evidence sought to be given—Objection must be raised when document is put in and not in appeal or at time of argument.

A document which is per se inadmissible in evidence can be objected to at any time. If however the objection relates to the method of proof and if secondary evidence is sought to be put instead of the original, the objection must be taken at the earliest point of time. If the document is not inadmissible per se and if secondary evidence of it is sought to be tendered, the right time to object would be at the time the document is put in and not either at the appellate stage or at the time of the argument.

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 65—Secondary evidence of document alleged to have been lost, sought to be given—Hearsay evidence is admissible to show loss.

In order to show that search has been made for a document, so as to let in secondary proof of its contents, hearsay evidence of the answers given by the persons who were likely to have it in their custody ought to be received.

Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent with cesses and damages for the years 1334 to the Pous Kist of 1337 B. S. and also for enhancement of rent under S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act. It is admitted that the plaintiff would be entitled to claim arrears of rent if he is able to prove that the Dar Putni interest under Touzi No. 1152 of the Murshidabad Collectorate, under which the tenancy is admittedly held, has vested in him. For the purpose of proving the purchase of the said Dar Putni interest, the plaintiff proved the certified copy of the conveyance dated 13th November 1929 by which he purchased the property. At the time when the certified copy of the conveyance was put in, no objection was taken to its going in. In fact, neither in the deposition nor in the list of documents admitted into evidence nor on the back of the document is there any note that the document was objected to. For the purpose of proving the conveyance the plaintiff examined a man of the name of Umesh Chandra Mandal, a Gomasta of the plaintiff's Koolgachi Kutchery who was an attesting witness to the original conveyance. In his examination-in-chief he said that the original was lost from the Mianpur Kutchery, that he attested the Kobala written by Raghu Nath and executed by Purna Babu who had signed it in his presence. "The original of Ex. 1 was to this effect". In the course of the cross-examination, the witness stated that "the original of Ex. 1 is lost". I heard that from Khajaddi Gomasta. He lives within the jurisdiction of this Court and is alive." As I have stated before the document Ex. 1 was not objected to. At the time of the argument it was urged that the loss of the original being not proved, because the evidence of loss given by the witness Umesh Chandra Mandal was only hearsay, the document Ex. 1 cannot be received in this case.

This objection has been given effect to by both the Courts. I do not think that it was open to the defendants at the time of argument to object to Ex. 1. It is an undoubted principle of law that a document which is per se inadmissible in evidence can be objected to at any time. If however the objection relates to the method of proof, that is, if secondary evidence is sought to be put in instead of the original, the objection must be taken at the earliest point of time. If the document is not inadmissible per se and if secondary evidence of it is sought to be tendered, the right time to object would be at the time when the document is put in and not either at the appellate stage or at the time of the argument. In this case if the objection had been taken at the proper time and in the proper form, the party who had put that document in, would have been able to adduce other evidence for the purpose of establishing that secondary evidence could be taken. With regard to the observation made by the Courts below that the loss has not been proved as the evidence of loss is merely hearsay, the following passage in Taylor on Evidence, Edn. 11, Vol. 1, p. 323, para. 430, is relevant. The learned author summarises the case law in England in these terms :

Indeed, it has been held that, in order to show that search has been made for a document so as to let in secondary proof of its contents, hearsay evidence of the answers given by persons who were likely to have it in their custody ought to be received.

On the above principle also I think that the lower Courts were not right in rejecting Ex. 1 from consideration. I hold therefore that it must be taken that the plaintiff has proved the devolution of title on him and he is entitled to the arrears of rent claimed. As the plaintiff has also prayed for enhancement of rent under S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act, and as that question has not been investigated by any of the Courts below having regard to the view taken by them that the plaintiff's suit was liable to be dismissed as he had failed to prove his title, I think there should be a remand of the case to the Court of first instance in order that this further claim, namely, the claim for enhancement under S. 30 (b) may be considered, and I direct accordingly. The plaintiff is entitled to his costs of this Court. Further costs are left to the discretion of the Court of first instance.

Appeal No. 1584 of 1932, Decided on 23rd January 1935.

Where a person and his predecessor have been catching fish in a disputed khaos to the exclusion of all others from time immemorial, a legal origin for this right can be inferred in their favour. This legal origin may be either a grant or a regulation as evidenced by custom under which fishermen of the village have been exclusively catching fish in the disputed khaos: 9 Cal 698, Disting; Lord Rivers v. Adams, (1878) 3 Ex D 361; Hall v. Nottingham, (1875) 1 Ex D 1 and 1914 P C 48, Ref. [P 166 C 2]

Judgment.— This is an appeal by some of the defendants in a suit for a declaration of fishery right of the fishermen of the village Manikpur in particular places (khaos) on the south bank of the tidal navigable river Lohar and for certain consequential reliefs. The plaintiffs' case is that they and their predecessors had been catching fish in those four khaos to the exclusion of all others from time immemorial peacefully and without interruption by placing stake-net, that the defendants who live in the village Budhanti lying on the north bank of the river dispossessed them from the first and second khaos in the month of Bhadra 1336 B.S. and were threatening to dispossess them from the other khaos. The defence of the defendants is that they have got exclusive right to fish in the disputed khaos and that the plaintiffs' story of possession and dispossession was absolutely false. The defendants also stated that the plaintiffs have got no khaos in the river Lohar. The learned Munsif held that the plaintiffs have succeeded in proving their title to the disputed khaos and in that view decreed the plaintiffs' suit. On appeal the decree of the trial Court has been affirmed by the learned District Judge. The only point urged in support of this appeal is that an exclusive right of fishery in portions of tidal navigable rivers cannot be claimed either by prescription or custom. Reliance was placed by the learned advocate for the appellant on the decision in, in 9 Cal 698 (1). The facts of that case however are entirely different. In that case fishery right was claimed in certain beels against the owner of those beels by an unlimited number of tenants of several parganas. Under these circumstances, it was held that such a custom would be unreasonable, for if the right based on such a custom were declared the tenants would take away the whole fish stocked in the beels and nothing would be left for the owner. The learned Judges in that case relied upon the case of (1878) 3 Ex D 361 (2). But in (1875) 1 Ex D 1 (3), the possibility that the custom there set up might have the effect of taking away from the owner the whole use and enjoyment of property was not thought sufficient ground for disallowing it.

The facts of the present case as stated above are entirely different. Here both the parties claim exclusive right to fish in the disputed places under a custom. The real issue in the suit was whether the plaintiffs or the defendants were entitled to fish in the disputed places exclusively under the admitted custom and the parties led evidence on that issue. The existence or validity of the custom was not denied by either of the parties. The munsif in this connexion has observed as follows: "Both parties claim exclusive right in the disputed khaos standing upon custom." It was not suggested in the pleadings or in the evidence that the custom was unreasonable as the plaintiffs would take away all the fishes of the river. The right claimed in the present suit is by the fishermen of one village only. In (1859) Cal S D A 1357 (4), at p. 1361, the following observations were made:

By our Regulation Law, Regn. 11 of 1825 which is declaratory of the common law of this country, as well as by the common law of England, the bed of a navigable river is not the property of any individual and consequently the right of fishery in such rivers is not private property, but that right is a right common to every person; and if any individual claims an exclusive right in navigable waters, he must show that it has been acquired either by grant or by prescription which is evidence of a grant.

A legal origin for the right can be inferred from long user: see 41 I A 221 (5), at p. 227. It was however contended by the learned advocate for the appellant that a legal origin for the original claim cannot be inferred in favour of the fishermen of a village. But in the case of 31 I A 75 (6), at p. 81, in which the question was whether the tenants of nine villages appertaining to a certain taraf of a pargana could acquire a right of pasturage over the waste lands of the villages to which they belonged, Lord Macnaghten observed as follows:

On proof of the fact of enjoyment from time immemorial there could be no difficulty in the way of the Court finding a legal origin for the right claimed. Unfortunately however both in the Munsif's Court and in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, the question was overlaid and in some measure obscured by copious references to English authorities and by the application of principles or doctrines, more or less refined, founded on legal conceptions not altogether in harmony with Eastern notions.

Again a fishery common to the public might be used subject to such regulations as are essential for its enjoyment by the public. If such a regulation is evidenced by a custom obtaining from time immemorial, there is no reason why it should not be enforced as creating an obligation: see 12 Mad 43 (7). Again in the case of 39 Cal 53 (8), Cox, J. (Teunon, J., concurring), observed as follows:

There is authority in the cases of 2 Bom 19 (9) and 12 Mad 43 (7) for the proposition that the method of enjoying the common right may be regulated by custom.

It has been concurrently found by the Courts below that the plaintiffs and their predecessors had been catching fish in the disputed khaos to the exclusion of all others from time immemorial. I have already pointed out that a legal origin for this right can be inferred from immemorial user. This legal origin may be either a grant or a regulation as evidenced by custom under which fishermen of the village Manikpur have been exclusively catching fish in the disputed khaos. The Courts below were therefore right in decreeing the plaintiffs' suit. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal under S. 15, Letters Patent, has been asked for in this case and is refused.

Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 26-F—Petition for pre-emption—Complicated questions of title should not be gone into in proceedings for pre-emption.

The complicated questions of title should not be gone into and determined in proceedings for pre-emption under S. 26-F of the Act. Any right which the transferor may have in the property remains entirely unaffected and it is only the right, title and interest of the transferee which passes. [P 167 C 2]

—Opposite Party.

Order.—This is a rule calling upon the opposite parties to show cause why an order of the Munsiff dismissing an application made by the petitioner for pre-emption under the provisions of
S. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act, should not be set aside. The facts are these : Opposite party No. 2 is the transferor, opposite party No. 1 is the transferee. When the notice was served upon the petitioner he filed an application. The opposite parties then combined together to make out a case that there was no transfer ;
that opposite party No. 2 was a minor ;
that no consideration passed and so on.
The learned Munsiff went into all these questions and came to the conclusion that there was no transfer, with the result that opposite party No. 2 is still a raiyyat holding under the petitioner. The question raised in this rule is whether it was open to the Munsiff to consider this question at all. The section appears to have been enacted in order to provide a procedure by which the money due from the pre-emptor will be paid to the transferee and for ensuring that the right of pre-emption is exercised within the time allowed. Under sub-s. (1), as soon as the notice is served, the landlord has the right to make an applicaton. This application will be dismissed unless the amount of the consideration money together with the compensation is paid into Court.

The Court then has to give notice to the transferee so that he may have an opportunity of stating what other sums, if any, he may have paid in respect of the property. The Court then directs the applicant to pay these amounts into Court as well. When these deposits are made under sub-s. (5), the Court shall make an order allowing the application.

The first thing to be noticed is that the transferor takes no part whatever in these proceedings. No notice is to be served upon him and it does not appear that he has any locus standi. The transferee is entitled to show that he spent money on account of the property ; but he is not allowed to file any objection to the granting of the petition on any other ground. On the contrary, under the sub-section the Court shall make an order allowing the application provided the deposits have been made. It is quite clear from these provisions that it was never the intention of the legislature that complicated questions of title should be gone into and determined in these proceedings. Any right which the trans-feror may have in the property remains entirely unaffected and it is only the right, title and interest of the transferee which passes. It appears that in this case the transferor is still in possession and the petitioner will not be able to obtain possession without bringing a suit in which the question of title between him and the transferor will be gone into and decided on proper materials after proper issues have been framed. But it was never the intention of the legislature that questions of that sort should be determined in the way in which it was sought to do in these proceedings. It was not suggested on behalf of the transferee that the necessary deposits were not made and this is the only ground on which he could resist the granting of the application. If in spite of having notice of the case now made between the trans-feror and transferee the petitioner wishes to proceed with his application, he is entitled to succeed. The result is that this rule is made absolute. The petitioner will be granted a declaration allowing the application in the terms of sub-s. (5). In the circumstances, I make no order as to costs.

Sasthi Charan Barnik—Defendant—Appellant.

v.

Mannidra Lal Singha — Plaintiff — Respondent.

Appeal No. 1016 of 1933, Decided on 22nd May 1935, against decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Chittagong, D/- 9th January 1933.

Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 87—Transfer of holding on footing that under-lease should be given to transferor—Transaction merely amounts to transfer of part of holding—It does not amount to abandonment

Where a transfer of a holding is made on the footing that an under-lease should be given to transferor, the transaction is to be treated not as a transfer of the whole interest in the holding but as being no more than a transfer of the part. Such a transfer does not amount to an abandonment within the meaning of S. 87, and the landlord is not entitled to recover possession of the holding. The principle also applies where the raiyat is in possession of a portion of agricultural lands. [P 168 C 2; P 169 C 1]

Where, therefore, an occupancy tenant, although he sells the entire holding to another person, continues to be in possession of a portion of it as a sub-lessee and has not left the village and the transferee has been paying rent after his purchase to the landlord in the name of the transferor nor is there any repudiation of tenancy by the occupancy tenant, there is no abandonment within the meaning of S. 87. The mere fact that the occupancy tenant has been paying rent to the transferee for the land which is in his cultivation is not enough to show that he had repudiated his liability to pay rent to the landlord: 1932 Cal 584 and 1915 Cal 242, Rel on. Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for khas possession of a holding on declaration of the plaintiff's title thereto. The plaintiff's case briefly stated is as follows: One Man Gazi held the disputed holding under the plaintiff as an occupancy raiyat having no transferable right therein. He transferred the entire holding to the defendant in Asarh 1290 M. E. and abandoned the holding. The defendant is therefore a trespasser and is therefore liable to be evicted. The main defence of the defendant is that he is a purchaser only of a portion of the holding and that there had been no abandonment of the holding by the raiyat Man Gazi. The learned Munsif held that the defendant is the transferee of a portion of the holding and that there had been no abandonment of the holding by Man Gazi. He accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's claim for khas possession. On appeal by the plaintiff to the lower appellate Court the learned Judge has found that Man Gazi has sold the entire holding to the defendant, but he has continued to be in possession of a small portion of the holding as a sub-lessee under the transferee. On these facts the learned Judge was of opinion that the holding was abandoned by Man Gazi and that the plaintiff was entitled to re-enter. He accordingly allowed the appeal and decreed the plaintiff's suit for khas possession. Hence the present appeal by the defendant.

The point for determination in this appeal is whether the tenancy of Man Gazi had come to an end by transfer as alleged by the plaintiff. Now the position, when a transfer is made on the footing that under-lease shall be given to the transferor, is this that the transaction is to be treated not as a transfer of the whole interest of the holding but as being no more than a transfer of the part: see 36 C W N 478 (1). On the facts found by the learned Judge therefore the transfer of the holding in the present case must be taken to be a transfer of only a part of the holding. The plaintiff is therefore not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding unless there has been either abandonment within the meaning of S. 87, Ben. Ten. Act, or repudiation in the tenancy: see 42 Cal 172 (2). The point for consideration therefore is whether there has been abandonment in the present case within the meaning of S. 87, B. T. Act. The possession of Man Gazi of a portion of the holding has been proved in the present case. He has not left the village. His evidence which has been accepted by the learned Judge goes to indicate that the transferee has been paying rent after his purchase to the plaintiff. The plaintiff's case is that he did not recognize the purchase by defendant 1. There cannot be any doubt therefore that the transferee has been paying rent in the name of the transferor. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said that no arrangement has been made for payment of the rent due to the landlord. I am therefore of opinion that there has been no abandonment within the meaning of S. 87, Ben. Ten. Act.

The facts of this case also do not go to show that there had been repudiation of the tenancy by Man Gazi. The mere fact that he is paying rent to the transferee for the land which is in his cultivation is not enough to show that he has repudiated his liability between himself and the plaintiff to pay rent: see 36 C W N 478 (1), cited above. The learned advocate for the respondent however tried to distinguish the above case on the ground that in that case the raiyat was in possession of the homestead portion of the holding. But the principle laid down in that case has equal application where the raiyat is in possession of a portion of the agricultural lands. In fact the plaintiff has failed to produce any material before the Court from which it can be inferred that Man Gazi has repudiated his liability to pay rent to him. The plaintiff is therefore not entitled to re-enter as there has been neither abandonment nor repudiation of the tenancy by the raiyat Man Gazi. The result therefore is that this appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court are set aside and those of the trial Court are restored. The appellant will get his costs in this Court as well as in the lower appellate Court.

Appeal No. 1116 of 1932, Decided on 29th November 1934, from appellate decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Howrah, D/- 16th February 1932.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), Ss. 48-C (a) and 66—S. 66 is very wide—Under-raiyats can claim benefit of S. 66 (2), if proviso to S. 48-C Cl. (a) is not attracted.

The language in S. 66 is very wide. The word used there is 'tenant' and where under-raiyats are tenants, if the proviso to S. 48-C, Cl. (a) is not attracted, the under-raiyats can claim the benefit under S. 66 (2). [P 170 C 1]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 66—S. 66 includes suit for recovery of arrears of rent as also for ejectment.

[P 170 C 1]

*Hari Charan Sastri and Manilal Bhattacharjee—*for Appellants

*Khitish Chandra Chakravarti and Panchanan Ghosal—*for Respondents.

Judgment.—The appellants are the plaintiffs in a suit for ejectment under S. 48-C, Cl. (a), Ben. Ten. Act as also for recovery of the price of Bhag produce for the years 1332 to 1335 B.S. with damages thereon. The Courts below have decreed the plaintiffs' claim for rent for the year 1335 B. S. at Rs. 40 per annum with damages thereon at 25 per cent. They agreed in dismissing the plaintiffs' claim for ejectment. Hence the present appeal by the plaintiffs. The only point urged in support of the appeal is that in view of the terms of the kabuliyat the defendants are not entitled to get the benefit of the proviso to S. 48-C, Cl. (a). Assuming that this contention is correct still the plaintiff cannot succeed in the present appeal. The facts in this case are not disputed. The defendant held the under-raiyati on the basis of a registered kabuliyat dated 1306 B.S. From the terms of the kabuliyat it is clear that the tenants have got the option of paying their rent either in money or in kind. The Courts below on a construction of the kabuliyat have come to the conclusion that the under-raiyats are protected by the proviso to S. 48-C, Cl. (a), Ben. Ten. Act and have given the benefit of S. 66 (2) to them. Now S. 48-C Cl. (a), is in these terms:

An under-raiyat shall, subject to the provisions of this Act be liable to ejectment on one or more of the following grounds, and not otherwise, namely (a) on the ground that he has failed to pay an arrear of rent: Provided that, if the under-raiyat is one whose rent is payable in terms of cash and not of produce and he pays through the Court all arrears up-to-date together with such interest and damages as the Court may award, he shall not be liable to ejectment on account of such arrears.

This section therefore is controlled by the other provisions of the Act. S. 66 of the Act runs as follows:

When an arrear of rent remains due from a tenant not being a permanent tenure-holder, a raiyat holding at fixed rates or an occupancy raiyat, at the end of the agricultural year (Bengali year), the landlord may, whether he has obtained a decree for the recovery of the arrears or not and whether he is entitled by the terms of any contract to eject the tenants for arrears or not, institute a suit to eject the tenant. (2) In a suit for ejectment for an arrear of rent a decree passed in favour of the plaintiff shall specify the amount of the arrear and of the interest (if any) due thereon and the decree shall not be executed if that amount and the costs of the suit are paid into Court within 30 days from the date of the decree, or when the Court is closed on the 30th day on the day upon which the Court re-opens. (3) The Court may for special reasons extend the period of 30 days mentioned in this section.

The language in S. 66 is very wide. The word used there is "tenant" and it is not disputed in this case that the under-raiyats in the present case are tenants, and that they are not mere Bhagidars or Adhidars or Borgadars. If the proviso to S. 48-C, Cl. (a) is not attracted to this case the under-raiyats can claim the benefit under S. 66, Cl. (2). The learned Advocate for the appellant did not seriously dispute this position but he argued that S. 66 contemplated cases for ejectment only, and that the present suit being a suit for recovery of arrears of rent as also for ejectment, the provisions of S. 66 could not be attracted to this case. But if this contention be correct, the present suit is not within the purview of S. 48-C also. This argument therefore is of no assistance to the plaintiff. The Courts below were therefore right in giving the under-raiyats the benefit of S. 66. In view of the above conclusions, it is not necessary to express any definite opinion as to whether in view of the terms of the kabuliyat, the under-raiyats in the present case can claim the benefit of the proviso to S. 48-C Cl. (a). The proviso speaks of an under-raiyat whose rent is payable in terms of cash and not in terms of produce. It is therefore contended by the learned Advocate for the appellant that where the tenant has got the option to pay the rent either in money or in kind, he cannot claim the benefit of the proviso, in other words the argument is that the proviso contemplates cases where the rent is payable only in cash and not cases where the raiyat has got the option to pay either in cash or in kind. There is some force in this contention. But as the under-raiyats in the present case are entitled to the benefit of the provisions of S. 66, it is not necessary for the purposes of this case to pursue the point any further. In any view of the case the plaintiffs are not entitled to eject the defendants, as it is admitted that the arrears have been all paid up.

The appeal therefore fails, but in the circumstances of the case, I make no order as to costs. Leave to appeal under S. 15 of the Letters Patent, has been asked for and is refused.

Mahammad Nazir Joddar—Defendant—Respondent.

Appeal No. 1483 of 1933, Decided on 16th August 1935, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Jessor-Khulna, D/- 1st May 1933.

Promissory Note—Suit for money not based on promissory note because of insufficient stamp—Plaintiff proving payment to defendant—He is entitled to recover money with interest though promissory note is inadmissible—Fact of loan gives plaintiff cause of action independently of pro-note.

In a suit for recovery of loan of money represented by a promissory note insufficiently stamped, but on which the suit is not based on account of the defect, as soon as the plaintiff proves that he paid a sum of money by way of loan to the defendant, he is entitled to get back the money with interest though the promissory note cannot be introduced in evidence on the ground of insufficiency of stamp. The fact that money has been lent gives a cause of action to the plaintiff which is independent of the promissory note: 23 Cal 851, Rel. on.

Judgment.—The plaintiff's case is that on 14th Chaitra 1334, corresponding to 28th March 1928, the defendant borrowed from him a sum of Rs. 629 and executed in his favour a promissory note for the said sum of money on the same date with a stipulation to pay interest at Rs. 3-2-0 per cent per month. He filed his suit on 5th March 1931, and in the plaint as originally filed he based his claim on the promissory note. But as the promissory note was insufficiently stamped, and so inadmissible in evidence he applied for amendment of the plaint. The said application for amendment was allowed by the Court on 25th February 1932. The amended plaint proceeded upon the footing that the plaintiff was entitled to recover back the money lent independently of the promissory note. The learned Munsif held that the sum of Rs. 629 had in fact been lent by the plaintiff to the defendant. He accordingly made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 629, but reduced the rate of interest to Rs. 1-4-0 per cent per month. At the trial the plaintiff led evidence to prove not only the advance of the said money to the defendant by way of loan but went a step further and attempted to prove that before the promissory note was executed the defendant made a verbal promise to repay the amount with interest at the rate of Rs. 3-2-0 per cent per month. The defendant preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge. The said appeal was heard by the learned Additional District Judge. The learned Judge held that the evidence of an independent oral promise by the defendant to repay the money with interest was unreliable. He held that such being the case the plaintiff could not recover except with the aid of the promissory note which could not be admitted in evidence as it was insufficiently stamped. He accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit without recording any finding as to whether the defendant took Rs. 629 from the plaintiff as a loan.

In my judgment the learned Judge is wrong in his views. He seems to labour under the impression that the plaintiff, in order to succeed on the plaint as amended, was required to prove an independent express contract prior to the execution of the promissory note. The law as laid down in the cases of this Court, however, is that the plaintiff is entitled to recover if he has a cause of action independent of the promissory note. Sir Comer Petheram, C. J., pointed out in 23 Cal 851 (1), where the observation of Garth, C. J., in 7 Cal 256 (2) was considered, and explained that:

An implied contract to repay money lent always arises from the fact that the money is lent, even though no express promise, either written or verbal, is made to repay it.

The fact that money has been lent therefore gives a cause of action to the plaintiff which is independent of the promissory note. In my judgment as soon as the plaintiff in such a case proves that he paid to the defendant a sum of money by way of loan, he is entitled to get back the money lent with interest, though the promissory note cannot be introduced in evidence on the ground of insufficiency of the stamps. The view I am taking is in accord with the preponderance of authority of this Court which have been reviewed in the judgment of Mukherjee, J., in 34 C W N 554 (3) and in the judgment of Sir Harold Derbyshire, C. J., in A F O D No. 287 of 1930 (4). I accordingly set aside the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court and remand the appeal to that Court so that the appeal may be decided in accordance with the observations made above. The most important point for that Court to consider would be whether the plaintiff had paid to the defendant the sum of Rs. 629 or any sum by way of loan. If it answers the said question in the affirmative it will confirm the decree of the Munsif. The appeal is accordingly allowed and the case remanded to the lower appellate Court. The costs of this appeal to abide the result.

Appeal No. 184 of 1935, Decided on 26th August 1935, from appellate order of Addl. Dist. Judge, 24 Parganas, D/- 29th January 1935.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 26-E—Re-sale—Not fresh execution but fresh sale in pending execution is contemplated—Provisions of S. 26-E (3) are mandatory—Order of forfeiture of first purchase money should be made before ordering fresh sale.

Section 26-E (3) does not contemplate fresh execution proceedings; it provides for fresh sale in the execution proceedings then pending. Such resale should be held under S. 26-E (3) of the Act, and the provisions of that section complied with. Under that section an order of resale can ordinarily be made only after an order for the forfeiture of the purchase money has been made. —

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 26-E—Execution sale—Court not fixing time or overlooking time fixed to deposit landlord's fees—Auction purchaser not depositing such fees—Sale is not a nullity.

Where no time is specified, on the occasion of the execution sale within which the deposit of the landlord's fees under S. 26-E (1) of the Act is to be made or the Court overlooks the fact that such time had been specified, and the auction-purchaser does not deposit such fees, the Court has no justification to treat the sale as nullity. Lodge, J.—This appeal arises out of orders passed on an objection under S. 47, Civil P. C. The material facts are these: Defendant 1 took a loan from the Labanga Samaboy Samity on mortgage of his share of a certain holding. Defendants 2 to 7 stood surety for defendant 1 and gave their shares in the same holding as security for the repayment of the loan. On application being made to the Registrar of Co-operative Societies a decree was passed against defendants 1 to 7 on 15th July 1928. In the decree it was found that Rs. 1,312-8-0 was due from defendant 1 to the Labanga Samaboy Samity; and he was directed to pay the amount by 7th January 1929. In the event of his failure to pay the decretal amount within the time fixed, it was ordered that the mortgaged property be put to sale; and that if the sale proceeds were insufficient to satisfy the decretal debt, the Society would be at liberty to apply for a personal decree against defendants 1 to 7. Defendant failed to pay the decretal amount, and in execution Case No. 235 of 1929, the mortgaged properties were put to sale, and purchased by the decree-holder. The sale proceeds were sufficient to satisfy the decretal debt, and a note was made in the order sheet of the execution case that the case was disposed of on full satisfaction. The decree-holder auction-purchaser failed to deposit the landlord's fee as required by S. 26-E, Ben. Ten. Act. But it seems clear from the materials placed before us that the executing Court omitted to specify the time within which such deposit should be made.

On 7th November 1933, the decree-holder applied to the Court to have the order of full satisfaction vacated; and this prayer was granted without any notice to the judgment-debtors, and merely on the ground that the auction-purchaser had failed to deposit the landlord's fees. The decree-holder then filed a fresh execution case, being case No. 196 of 1933, in which he prayed for the sale not only of the mortgaged property, but also of the property of defendants 2 to 7 which were given as security for the loan. These properties were put to sale and purchased by the decree-holder for a sum much less than the decretal amount. Defendants 1 and 3 filed an objection under S. 47, Civil P. C., on the grounds (1) that the order of full satisfaction should not have been set aside without notice to them; and (2) that if resale of the property was necessary, it should be held in accordance with the provisions of S. 26-E (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, and any deficit on such resale should be realised from the first auction purchaser; and (3) that the property of defendants 2 to 7 could not be sold until after the mortgaged property had been sold and the sale proceeds found insufficient to satisfy the decretal debt. These objections were overruled by the Subordinate Judge, third Court, 24 Parganas and an appeal from his order was dismissed by the Additional District Judge of that district. Hence this appeal. The lower Courts have held that as the landlord's fee was not deposited after the first sale, that sale was a nullity and consequently the decree-holder was entitled to apply again for execution of his decree. In our opinion, the first sale cannot be treated as a nullity.

If the only defect was the failure to deposit the landlord's fee, and if the decree-holder required that the holding be resold, then such resale should have been held under S. 26-E (3), Ben. Ten. Act, and the provisions of that section complied with. Under that section an order for resale can ordinarily be made only after an order for the forfeiture of the purchase money has been made. No such order of forfeiture was made in the present case and no reason was given for the omission. The fact that the decree-holder was himself the auction purchaser does not affect his liability to be penalised for failure to deposit the landlord's fee. S. 26-E (3) does not contemplate fresh execution proceedings: it provides for fresh sale in the execution proceedings then pending. We are satisfied from the materials placed before us that the provisions of S. 26-E were not strictly followed, and the Courts below have fallen into error in consequence. Though S. 26-E (1) does not state that the landlord's fees are to be deposited within a time to be fixed by the Court, it is clear from S. 26-E (3) that the Court must specify the time within which the deposit is to be made. Doubtless the Court may extend that time in suitable cases. But until the time specified has expired, there can be no resale under S. 26-E (3). It appears to us that either no time was specified, on the occasion of the first sale, within which the deposit was to be made, or the Court overlooked the fact that such time had been specified. In either case, the Court had no justification to treat the sale as a nullity, and to set aside the order of full satisfaction. Further it is obvious that no order to the detriment of defendant 1's interest should have been made without notice to him.

The order vacating the order of disposal on full satisfaction was made without jurisdiction. The appeal must be allowed, and the Mis. case remanded to the original Court for disposal according to law. Execution case No. 196 of 1933 should be treated as a continuation of execution case No. 235 of 1929 : and the order passed on the application of the decree-holder to have the order of full satisfaction vacated, and all subsequent orders, set aside. The Court should fix a time within which the deposit required by S. 26-E (1), Ben. Ten. Act, shall be made in connexion with the first sale. If the auction-purchaser fails to make the deposit within the time so specified, the Court may then make an order for the forfeiture of the purchase money, and for resale of the property. The Court may not order resale without first making an order of forfeiture. If it shall be found necessary to order resale, the mortgaged property alone shall first be resold ; and only after such resale, and if the sale proceeds be found insufficient to satisfy the decretal debt, shall the property of defendants 2 to 7 be sold. The appeal is allowed with costs throughout; and the case is remanded for disposal in accordance with the directions given above. Hearing fee in this Court three gold mohurs.

Sudharam Roy and others—Respondents.

Appeal No. 1778 of 1932, Decided on 28th January 1935, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Midnapore, D/- 21st April 1932.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), Ss. 105 and 106 and 109 (amended)—Plaintiff recorded as 1/4 share-holder in record-of-rights—Application under Ss. 105 and 106 claiming 1/3 share—Application dismissed—Plaintiff's suit for assessment of rent for 1/4 share based on record-of-rights—Such suit is not barred by S. 109.

The plaintiff was recorded as a 4 anna sharer in the record-of-rights and claimed to be entitled to a 5 annas share and made an application under Ss. 105 and 106 for a claim for assessment of rent in respect of 5 annas share. The application was dismissed whereupon the plaintiff brought a suit, based on the entry in the record-of-rights for a claim for assessment in respect of 4 annas share:

Held : that though it was open to the plaintiff in his application under Ss. 105 and 106 to have included a claim for assessment of rent in respect of $\frac{1}{4}$ share on the basis of the entry in the record-of-rights but such a claim was not included it cannot be said that the subject matter of the present suit and that of the previous application are the same and as such S. 109 is no bar to the present suit. [P 175 C 1]

(b) Practice—Suit instituted after amendment of Section came in force—Suit must be governed by Section as amended.

Where a suit was instituted after the proviso to section had already come into operation:

Held : that it is governed by the Section as it stands together with the proviso contained in it ; the ordinary law being that the rights of the parties with regard to a suit should be determined upon the law as it stands at the date of the institution of the suit. [P 176 C 1]

Judgment.—The plaintiffs are the appellants in this appeal. The principal defendants were in occupation of some lands which belonged to the plaintiffs and their co-sharers, the pro forma defendants. These lands were recorded in the record-of rights as being lands wherein the plaintiffs had a 4-anna share and it was also stated therein that they were assessable to rent. On that the plaintiffs applied under Ss. 105 and 106, Ben.

Ten. Act, for correction of the records alleging that they had a 5-anna share in the lands and not a 4-anna share as stated in the record-of-rights. In that application they prayed for a declaration of their title to a 5-anna share and for khas possession in respect of that share and, in the event of such khas possession not being allowed, for settlement of a fair and equitable rent for the lands in respect of that share. The proceedings instituted on the basis of this application were struck off on 7th December 1917 with the following order: "No action taken: deficit process-fee of Rs. 1-12-0, not paid; case struck off." Thereafter the plaintiffs instituted a suit for declaration of title on the allegation that the entry in the record-of-rights was wrong and they also prayed for khas possession and for other reliefs. This suit was eventually dismissed by the Court, the Court holding that S. 109, Ben. Ten. Act, operated as a bar to the suit. No question in this appeal arises upon the suit aforesaid or upon the result thereof, and so it will not be necessary to refer to it again hereafter. Thereafter the plaintiffs instituted the present suit in which they took their stand upon the entry in the record-of-rights and asked for assessment of rent in respect of their 4-annas share as recorded therein and also for recovery of rent at the assessed rate for certain years previous to the institution of the suit. Defendant 1 took several pleas—some in the nature of pleas in bar and others on the merits; but these pleas were all overruled and the Munsif made a decree in the plaintiffs' favour holding that the plaintiffs were entitled to a rent of Rs. 14 for the lands per year in respect of their 4-anna share and allowing the plaintiffs arrears of damages for use and occupation at the said rate for three years immediately preceding the date of the institution of the suit.

From this decree the principal defendants preferred an appeal to the District Judge. The learned District Judge held that the present suit was barred by reason of the provisions of S. 109, Ben. Ten. Act. To his reasons on which this conclusion of his is founded, reference will presently be made; but it may be stated here that except as regards this preliminary point on which he dissented from the view which the Munsif had taken he agreed with the Munsif in other matters, namely in so far as the latter had decided against defendant 1 as regards his other objections. He held that the objection raised by the said defendant on the ground of limitation was entirely without force and that the rate of rent which had been fixed by the learned Munsif was fair and equitable. Being of this view, the learned Judge took as the basis of his decree the rate of Rs. 6 for the sixteen annas share of the lands which defendant 1 had admitted as the rental and on that basis gave the plaintiffs a modified decree. From this decree of the learned District Judge, the present appeal has been taken by the plaintiffs.

From what has been stated above, it would appear that the substantial question which arises for determination in this appeal is the question whether by reason of the application which the plaintiffs had made under Ss. 105 and 106, Ben. Ten. Act, the present suit is barred in consequence of the provisions of S. 109 of that Act. It has to be stated here that before the suit was instituted the said S. 109, Ben. Ten. Act, was amended by the introduction into it of the proviso that is to be found now under the said section. The reason upon which the learned Judge proceeded in arriving at his conclusion as regards the bar afforded by S. 109, Ben. Ten. Act, may be summarized in the following words: He refers to S. 2, Cl. (3), Ben. Ten. Act, in the first instance and then he observes:

Under the old S. 109 the defendant had acquired a right not to have his jote assessed to rent as that was a matter in the S. 106 case.

And in respect of this conclusion of his he has observed thus:

The amendment to S. 109 amounts to a repeal of the old S. 109 and the enactment of the new section, and it could not affect a right of the defendant acquired before the amendment. The respondent urges that the old section was a mere bar, and that the bar has been removed. But the correct view is that the old bar supported an erection under which the appellant was entitled to shelter. The amendment has not removed the bar and brought the edifice toppling down on the appellant and the hundreds dwelling in peace under similar erections similarly supported; it has merely said that in future the law will not provide such bars to support such erections to shelter people, which is quite a different thing. The point cannot be disposed of by talking loosely about bars.

The learned Judge apparently thought that the proviso which had been introduced into S. 109, Ben. Ten. Act, amounted merely to the repeal of a certain provision which was to be found in the Act as it stood before the amendment. That however is not the position. It is a substantive provision enacted in order to be operative from the point of time at which the enactment was intended to come into force. It is expressed in very clear words, from which no intention to delay its effect for any length of time can possibly be inferred. It seems to me that for two reasons, if not more, the view that the learned Judge has taken of this matter is not correct. In the first place, the question is whether the first part of the section apart from the proviso is applicable to the present case. In answering that question I ask myself, what was the subject matter of the application under Ss. 105 and 106, Ben. Ten. Act? And reading that application it seems to me perfectly plain that the subject matter of that application was a claim to a one-third share in the lands, a claim which had been negatived in the record-of-rights, and the claim with respect to that one-third share consisted of two alternative reliefs, namely, (1) for khas possession and (2) for assessment of rent. It is quite true that the one-fourth share on which the plaintiffs now take their stand is less than the one-third share which they had claimed in the said application; but even then upon a proper consideration of the matter, it seems to me inconceivable that it can be said that the present claim for assessment of rent in respect of a one-fourth share can, in any way, be treated as a subject matter of the application under Ss. 105 and 106, Ben. Ten. Act. It is quite true that it was open to the plaintiffs in that application to have included a claim for assessment of rent in respect of a one-fourth share on the basis of the entry in the record-of-rights; but such a claim was not included and I find it very difficult to hold that the present suit in so far as it was a suit for assessment of rent in respect of a one-fourth share on the footing of the record-of-rights was a matter which was the subject matter of the application under Ss. 105 and 106, Ben. Ten. Act. I am of opinion therefore that the present case does not in fact attract the operation of S. 109, Ben. Ten. Act at all.

Even if this view be regarded as incorrect, I am of opinion that it cannot be disputed that the plaintiffs are saved by the proviso to the section. The learned Judge has observed that the proper view to take of the proviso is that it merely removes a bar and that it cannot affect any right already accrued to the party in whose favour the section itself operated before the proviso was introduced. This view, has been sought to be supported to a certain extent by certain observations which are to be found in a decision of this Court to which my attention has been drawn: the case in 35 C W N 1147 (1). That was a case where the suit to which S. 109, Ben. Ten. Act as amended by the Bengal Act 4 of 1928 was sought to be applied had been instituted prior to the introduction of the proviso and it was held that the amendment had no retrospective operation so as to affect proceedings pending at the date of the amendment and that such S. 109 as it stood before the amendment would apply. The decision therefore was a decision in respect of a case which was very different on facts from the present case. But the observations which at first sight seem to be in support of the learned Judge's view run in these words:

There seems hardly room for doubt that S. 109 did not merely lay down the procedure but by taking away the ordinary right of suit of the plaintiff, conferred a very valuable right on the defendant in some cases. The immunity from a civil suit thus gained by the defendant is a substantive right inasmuch as it enabled him to hold the property in the right mentioned in the record-of-rights without further litigation. In essence it is difficult to distinguish such a right from a right of appeal. If no right of appeal is given by statute at the date of the suit, the successful party acquires a certain right under the decision of the suit which is not open to challenge in appeal. In a case under S. 109 (old Act) where an application is made and withdrawn, the defendant obtains the rights to hold the property as recorded in the record-of-rights without further risk of litigation. I accordingly hold that the right which the defendant in this case obtained under S. 109 (old Act) is a substantive right which cannot be affected, except by express words, by subsequent alteration of the law.

There is no question, under the terms of the section as it stood before the amendment, of anybody acquiring any right: the section imposed a disability on intending suitors of which their opponents could undoubtedly take advantage. Such disability lasted only so long as the section itself lasted in its old state. The proviso enacted an express provision removing the disability in certain circumstances. And if it be held, as it must be held in the absence of anything in the Act to the contrary, that the proviso came into operation at the same time as all the other amendments did, there cannot be the slightest doubt that the legislature by express words created in favour of an intending plaintiff a right which inferentially took away any other right which the defendant may have acquired by reason of the disability which the section, as it stood before its amendment, had placed on the plaintiff. To adopt the respondents' contention or the view of the learned District Judge would necessitate our holding that the amended Section would come into play only in respect of proceedings under Ss. 105 to 108 instituted after the amended Act came into force. Such a position is untenable. I am clearly of opinion that the view which the learned Judge has taken of this matter cannot be supported and that the suit, having been instituted at a time when the proviso had already come into operation, was to be governed by the section as it stands now together with the proviso contained in it; the ordinary law being that the rights of the parties with regard to a suit should be determined upon the law as it stands at the date of the institution of the suit.

For these reasons, the view which the learned Judge has taken cannot, in my opinion, be supported. In view of the fact that the learned Judge has upheld the learned Munsiff's decisions with regard to the other matters that have arisen in the case, it follows that the appellants are entitled to a decree from this Court setting aside the decree of the learned District Judge and restoring that of the learned Munsiff. The result is that the appeal should be allowed, and the decision of the learned District Judge being set aside, that of the learned Munsiff should be restored with costs in this Court and in the Court of appeal below. Leave to prefer an appeal under the Letters Patent asked for by the respondents is refused.

Appeal No. 1169 of 1932, Decided on 10th December 1934, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, 3rd Court, Mymensingh, D/- 29th January 1932.

(a) Practice—New case—Court should not make new case for defendant in appeal and dismiss plaintiff's suit on plea not taken at proper stage.

The appellate Court should not make a new case for the defendant in appeal and dismiss plaintiff's suit on a plea which was never taken by the defendant at a proper stage of the suit.

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 44 (c)—Lands of old tenancy not included in subsequent deed—Rent fixed quite out of proportion to old rent—Period fixed and option given to tenant to continue for another term in case he complied with certain demands—Landlord entitled to evict tenant even before expiry of period in case tenant transfers land—Tenant held liable to be evicted on expiry of term and could not claim occupancy right.

In a subsequent deed the lands of the old tenancy were not included but only some and the rent which was fixed for the land was quite out of proportion to the old rent. The period was fixed by the deed and an option was given to the tenant to remain for another period only in case he complied with certain demands of the landlord. There was a further clause that on transfer by the tenant either by way of sale or usufructuary mortgage of the whole or part of the demised land or on building substantial structures on the land there would be an end to the tenancy and the landlord would be entitled to re-enter even within the period:

Held: that the deed created a new tenancy and the landlord was entitled to evict the tenant on expiry of period and that the tenant could not claim occupancy right. [P 178 C 1]

Judgment.—The plaintiffs appeal from the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Mymensingh by which their suit for ejectment has been dismissed. It appears that three plots of land constituted a holding formerly held by two persons, Raghunath Garo and Labanga Garani under the plaintiffs at the rate of Rs 30-11-9 per year. The area of the three plots is 7.18 acres. It is admitted that Raghunath Garu and Labanga Garani had occupancy rights in these three plots of land and that there is no custom of transferability of occupancy holdings in the locality. On 30th Sravan 1325 B. S. Raghunath and Labanga sold the entire holding to the defendant but the plaintiffs refused to recognise this transfer. The defendant remained on the land from the date of his purchase till the year 1334 B. S., the landlord refusing to do anything with him. In Baisakh 1335 B. S., the defendant executed a kabuliati in favour of the plaintiffs in respect of a portion of the lands of the holding of Raghunath and Labanga. The area in respect of which the kabuliati was taken is 4.31 acres and the rent that is reserved is Rs. 23-10-3. This kabuliati was for a term of three years and in Cl. 11 of the same it is provided that on the expiry of the term of three years the tenant would be allowed to remain on the land for another period of three years if he chose to accept the rent the landlords then demanded. On the expiry of this kabuliati the landlords instituted the present suit asking the defendant to vacate under S. 44, Cl. (c) Ben. Ten. Act, that is to say, the plaintiffs have taken the position that the defendant is a non-occupancy raiyat admitted to occupation under a registered kabuliati of Baisak 1335 and as his lease had expired he was not entitled to remain on the land. The defence as contained in the written statement raised one point and one point only, namely, that he the defendant, was then an occupancy raiyat, that is to say, the contention seems to be this that the defendant's occupation as raiyat must be taken from the date of his purchase in 1325 to the date of the suit which was instituted on 14th March 1931, corresponding to Chait 1337. Secondly, his contention rests on the ground that the kabuliati of the year 1335 is really the recognition of the transfer to him by Raghunath and Labanga and in law therefore the old occupancy holding must be taken to continue in his ownership and possession by reason of the landlord's recognition.

The Court of first instance gave effect to these two contentions and dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs on the footing that the defendant was not a non-occupancy raiyat but had acquired a right of occupancy of the land. On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge disagreed with the learned Munsif on these points. He held that the occupation of the defendant from the date of his purchase till the end of the year 1334 was that of a trespasser and the document of 2nd Baisakh 1335 above referred to created a new tenancy in his favour. He accordingly held that the plaintiffs would prima facie be entitled to get possession from the defendant but he dismissed the plaintiff's suit on a ground which he admits was not taken by the defendant either in his written statement or in the lower appellate Court. He said that Cl. 11 of the kabuliati of the year 1335 conferred an option of renewal for a period of three years on the defendant. The defendant therefore according to the Subordinate Judge is entitled to fall back upon this clause and say that he has exercised the option. By reason of this clause, says the learned Subordinate Judge, the defendant would be entitled to remain on the land up to the year 1341 and the suit which was instituted before the year 1341 was premature. In my view, the learned Subordinate Judge was not right in making a new case for the defendant in appeal. A determination of the questions that would arise on Cl. 11 of the kabuliati would have entitled an investigation into facts, one of them being whether the landlord had offered a fresh tenancy to the defendant and whether the defendant had refused it or not had this defence been taken in the written statement. I am clearly of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was not right in dismissing the plaintiffs' suit on a plea which was never taken by the defendant at a proper stage of the suit.

Mr. Roy who appears on behalf of the defendant-respondent, however, contends that the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge that the tenancy for the first time was created in favour of the defendant in the year 1334 is wrong. He contends that the kabuliati of that year which is Ex. 1 is merely a recognition of the transfer to the defendant by the old tenants effected in the year 1325 and if this be so the defendant could acquire a right of occupancy by reason of S. 20, Ben. Ten. Act; secondly he says that the old occupancy holding would be still subsisting in the hands of the defendant and S. 44 (c) would not apply because the defendant would not be taken to be admitted into occupation under a registered document. All these contentions raised by Mr. Roy depend upon one cardinal fact, and that is, what is the nature and effect of Ex. 1? I have gone through Ex. 1. There is no recital in that document of the purchase of the defendant from Raghunath and Labanga. The recital indicates as if a new settlement is being conferred and there are at least three circumstances which would tell against the contention that the kabuliati was only a confirmatory kabuliati in recognition of the transfer to the defendant by the old tenants. First of all, all the lands of the old tenancy are not included in this document but only some and the rent which is fixed for the lands is quite out of proportion to the old rent. It indicates an enhancement of more than 2 annas in the rupee which the landlord would have been entitled to get at the most if the old tenancy continued. Secondly, the period of three years fixed by Ex. 1 coupled with the option of the tenant to remain for another period of three years only, in case he complied with certain demands of the landlord, is quite inconsistent with the continuance of the old occupancy holding of the Garoes.

Thirdly, the clause in the lease that on transfer by the tenant either by way of sale or usufructuary mortgage of the whole or part of the demised land or on building substantial structures on the land there would be an end to the tenancy and the landlord would be entitled to re-enter even within the period of three years is also against the contentions of the respondent. Having regard to these terms of the documents, I am of opinion that a new lease was created in favour of the defendant by Ex. 1 and the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge on this part of the case is correct.

I accordingly set aside the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge inasmuch as he had no business to make a new case for the defendant and direct that the plaintiffs' suit for khas possession be decreed. The result is that the appeal is allowed and the plaintiffs' suit for khas possession is decreed with costs throughout.

CUNLIFFE AND HENDERSON, JJ.

Ramesh Chandra Guha — Plaintiff — Appellant.

Dinanath Mestari and others— Defendant 1—Respondents.

Appeal No. 198 of 1933, Decided on 6th December 1935, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, Second Court, Bakarganj, D/- 19th September 1932.

(a) Landlord and Tenant—Rent — Holding sold in execution of decree in favour of landlord purchased by P and possession obtained — Interest of one of tenure-holders previously sold in execution of money decree and purchased by K — Sale in favour of K confirmed after P's purchase — Interest of one D annulled by P by service of notice under S. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act — D contending that only right of judgment-debtors passed to P—D held not entitled to raise the defence, having no interest in the matter—D held not entitled to defeat P's claim merely by asserting that K had interest in holding without obtaining declaration to that effect.

A holding was put to sale in execution of a decree in a suit by the landlords against the recorded tenant and was purchased by P, who obtained possession of it. The interest of one of the tenure-holders had been put up to sale in execution of a money decree and had been purchased by one K before the institution of the suit by the landlords, but the sale was not confirmed till after P's purchase and K obtained delivery of possession later on. One D had an interest which was annulled by P by a service of notice under S. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act. The landlords did not know of K's purchase. D contended that only the right and title of the judgment-debtors passed to P :

Held: that it was not open to D to raise that defence as D did not claim through K. D had no direct interest in the matter but merely put K as a shield. [P 179 C 2]

That D could not defeat P's claim by mere assertion that K had an interest in the holding without obtaining a declaration to that effect in presence of both P and K that K had an interest in the tenure and was liable for rent. [P 180 C 1]

(b) Landlord and Tenant—Rent — Suit for — Landlord must implead those persons who are actually tenants — Impleading recorded tenants only is not enough—Obiter.

Obiter.—In order to obtain a rent decree, it is not enough for the landlord to implead the recorded tenants, if, in fact the interest of any of them has passed to a third person, unless there are circumstances to show that the tenants impleaded represent the whole estate. The landlord must sue all the actual tenants: 1929 Cal 452, Foll. [P 179 C 2]

(c) Second Appeal—Finding of fact—Lower appellate Court not properly reversing finding of fact of trial Court—Its finding is not binding in second appeal.

Where the final Court of fact does not properly reverse the finding of the trial Court, by reason of his failure to consider certain evidence, the finding not having been arrived at properly, is not binding in second appeal.

Henderson, J. — This is an appeal against the decree of the lower appellate Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit for khas possession. It was originally argued before R.C. Mitter, J., and it has now come before us on a reference by him. The substantial point urged before us is whether a decree in execution of which the plaintiff alleges that he purchased a certain tenure was a rent decree or a money decree. The landlords instituted the suit against the recorded tenants on 15th April 1920. They put up the holding to sale and it was purchased by the plaintiff on 7th April 1922. He obtained possession on 21st July 1922. It appears that the interest of one of the tenure-holders, Sashi was put up to sale in execution of a money decree and purchased by one Kunja on 12th November 1919. The sale however was not confirmed till 7th September 1922, (that is to say, after the plaintiff's purchase) and he did not obtain delivery of possession until 2nd December 1922. The contesting defendant 1 had an interest which was annulled by the plaintiff by the service of a notice under the provisions S. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act.

Now it is not suggested that the landlords knew of Kunja's purchase in the execution sale. It has accordingly been contended on behalf of the appellant that inasmuch as the recorded tenants were all made parties to the rent suit, the tenure passed at the sale. In support of this contention reliance was placed upon the decision reported in 23 C W N 590 (1). On the other hand it is contended on behalf of the contesting respondent that only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors passed on the authority of the case reported in 56 Cal 462 (2). It is to be observed that although

Kunja's purchase took place before the institution of the rent suit, the sale was not confirmed until long after. But the property vests in a purchaser from the date of the sale and not from the date of the confirmation and he would be liable for the rent from the date of the sale. The point at issue is whether the landlord, in order to obtain a rent decree must sue all the actual tenants or whether it is enough if he sues those whose names are recorded in his Sherista. The case of 23 C W N 590 (1) which was decided by N. R. Chatterjea and Newbould, JJ., is an authority in favour of the appellant. The learned Judges observed as follows :

The property sold was described as an entire tenure ; and as the decree was obtained by the plaintiff against the recorded tenants, we think that what was intended to be sold and was sold was the tenure itself, and not merely the interest of defendants 1 to 5 We are of opinion that the entire tenure including the interest, if any, of defendant 6 passed by the sale to the plaintiff.

On the other hand the case of 56 Cal 462 (2) which was decided by Rankin, C. J., and Page, J., lays down that it is not enough for the landlord to implead the recorded tenants if, in fact, the interest of any of them passed to a third person unless there are circumstances to show that the tenants impleaded represented the whole estate. In this connexion we need only say that as at present advised we should be disposed to agree with the judgment of Page, J. But in our opinion it is not necessary to pursue the matter any further or to consider whether we should refer the case to a Full Bench, as we are not satisfied that it was open to defendant 1 to raise this defence at all. Defendant 1 does not claim through Kunja. The effect of the decision of the lower appellate Court is that Kunja is liable for the rent, although Kunja was not a party to the suit. Defendant 1 has no direct interest in the matter and merely wishes to put forward Kunja as a shield.

Now there is a most important question on which the Courts below differed. The contention of the plaintiff is that Kunja was a mere benamidar and the learned Munsif found in his favour ; but this decision was reversed by the learned Subordinate Judge. No doubt the question whether the transaction was benami or not is a question of fact. But we find it difficult to say that the judgment of the learned Judge is a proper judgment of reversal. All he says is this:

I am afraid there is no evidence in the circumstances to hold that Kunja was a benamidar for Sashi.

There was certainly circumstantial evidence to justify an inference that Kunja was a mere benamidar, and unless the final Court of fact considers that evidence, it cannot be said that he has properly reversed the decision of the trial Judge. It is therefore not possible to hold that this question of fact has been properly determined. Had it been necessary to decide the point, we should have been compelled to remand the case for further consideration. There can be no doubt that if the finding of the learned Munsif is correct, the tenure passed to the plaintiff. The delivery of possession to Kunja was only symbolical and he could not recover possession from the plaintiff without instituting a suit for a declaration of his title. It does not appear that he has even attempted to do so and it may well be that such a suit has now become barred by limitation. In these circumstances, it would be rather strange if defendant 1 could defeat the plaintiff's claim by a mere assertion that Kunja has an interest in the holding.

We are of opinion that without obtaining a declaration in the presence of both the plaintiff and Kunja that Kunja has an interest in the tenure and is liable for rent, such a defence is not open to him. The result is that this appeal must be allowed, the decree of the lower appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. Defendant 1 will pay the costs to the appellant in all Courts.

Appeal No. 450 of 1934, Decided on 28th June 1935, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Khulna, D/- 30th May 1934.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), Ss. 30 and 37—Enhancement under S. 30, Cls. (a) and (b) is subject to limitations in S. 37—But such limitations do not apply to claims for additional rent for excess area.

Landlord's right to claim enhancement under Cls. (a) and (b), S. 30, are subject to the limitations laid down in S. 37. These limitations however do not apply to a claim for additional rent for an excess area inasmuch as rent is money payable by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant. [P 181 C 1]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 30 (b)—“During currency of present rent”, meaning.

The words “during the currency of the present rent” in S. 30 (b) mean “during the currency of the rent which the raiyat has been actually paying or was liable to pay for the use and occupation of the land held by him”: 29 Cal 247, 6 C W N 360 and 1929 Cal 47, Ref.

(c) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), Ss. 52 and 30 (b)—Prior suit for alteration of rent under S. 52 decreed—Subsequent suit for enhancement under S. 30 (b) is not barred.

There is a distinction between enhancement of rent and alteration of rent on alteration of area. Even though a landlord can unite two causes of action, viz. for enhancement of rent and alteration, in one suit, he is not bound to do so. Hence where he obtains a decree in a suit under S. 52 that does not preclude him from asking the Court for enhancement of the rent altered under S. 52: 11 C W N 1154, Rel. on. [P 181 C 1, 2]

Panchanan Ghosal—for Appellant.

Sris Chandra Dutta—for Respondents.

Nasim Ali, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was for recovery of arrears of rent and for enhancement of rent under S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act. In the present appeal, however, I am concerned only with the question of enhancement. The holding is admittedly an occupancy holding. The claim for enhancement is also not hit by S. 37 of the Act. The learned Munsif rejected the plaintiffs' prayer for enhancement under S. 30 (b) on the ground that there had been a fall in the price of staple foods since the rent was adjusted by a decree under S. 52 of the Act in the year 1929. The lower appellate Court however has reversed that decision and has remanded the suit to the trial Court. Hence this appeal by the tenant. By S. 30 (b) the landlord of an occupancy holding held at a money rent, is entitled, subject to other provisions of the Act, to institute a suit to enhance the rent of the holding on the ground that there has been a rise in the average local prices of staple food crops during the currency of the present rent.

The learned Munsif took the date of the decree under S. 52 as the date from which the present rent was current. I am unable to agree with him in this view of the matter. The decree under S. 52 did not enhance the rent but simply altered it for excess area already in the use or occupation of the tenant. The Act makes a distinction between enhancement of rent and alteration of rent on alteration of area. The landlord cannot claim back rent in a proceeding for enhancement (S. 154 of the Act). Further his right to claim enhancement under Cls. (a) and (b), S. 30 are subject to the limitation laid down in S. 37. These limitations however do not apply to a claim for additional rent for an excess area inasmuch as rent is money payable by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant. "Present rent" in S. 30 (b), "previous rent" in S. 32 (b) and "existing rent" in S. 105, Cl. (4) have been used in the Act in the same sense:

It is possible that the landlord for some reasons or other may not have realised the full rent. It is also possible that the landlord may not have realized any rent at all. In the latter case it is hardly reasonable to say that by existing rent is meant no rent : 32 C W N 999 (1).

The right to recover additional rent for excess area is a recurring one. A landlord is entitled to exercise it whenever he finds it necessary to do so: 6 C W N 360 (2). There is nothing to prevent the landlord from claiming back rent for any additional area in the use and occupation of the raiyat provided the claim is not barred by limitation: 29 Cal 247 (3). The words "during the currency of the present rent" in S. 30 (b) must therefore mean during the currency of the rent which the raiyat has been actually paying or was liable to pay for the use and occupation of the land held by him.

By the decree in the previous suit under S. 52 the landlord obtained a decree for rent for the back period for the excess lands in the occupation of the tenant at the rate mentioned in the kabuliat of the year 1901 on the basis of which he came to possess the holding. In the previous suit the rent was not enhanced but simply altered. The landlord could have united the two causes of action in the previous suit and could have asked the Court under S. 30 (b) to enhance the rent altered under S. 52 see 11 C W N 1154 (4). But he was not bound to do. In the present case; he is therefore entitled to ask the Court to enhance the rent altered under S. 52. The decree under S. 52 does not preclude him from doing so, and the date of the said decree cannot be taken as the date from which the present rent is current. Whether he will get any enhancement in view of the economic depression is entirely a different matter. S. 35 of the Act leaves the matter to the discretion of the Court. If the learned Munsif had not taken the date of the decree as the date from which the present rent was current, and had refused to decree enhancement by exercising his discretion under S. 35 on the ground that it would be unfair or inequitable in view of the fall in the price of staple foodcrops, the position might have been different. But he rejected the landlord's prayer for enhancement on an erroneous view of the effect of the decree under S. 52. I am not prepared to say therefore that the order of remand by the lower appellate Court is wrong. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by defendant 1 in a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff lands are not saleable in execution of a rent decree and for obtaining a perpetual injunction restraining defendant 1 from putting that land to sale in execution. The plaintiffs' case briefly stated is as follows :

The disputed land previously belonged to the pro forma defendant 1 in tenancy right under Kumar Protiva Nath Roy, defendant 1. The latter in execution of a rent decree against the pro forma defendant 2 put the suit land to sale and one Jatin Saha purchased the same. The landlord again put the disputed land to sale in execution of a decree against Jatin Saha and this time Krishna Nath Ghose purchased the tenancy. Defendant 1 again put the suit land to sale in execution of a rent decree against Krishna Nath Ghose and plaintiff purchased the disputed land at that sale and took delivery of possession through Court : that thereafter defendant 1 brought a rent suit against the pro forma defendants 2 and 3, obtained a rent decree against them and is taking steps to put the disputed land to sale in execution of the said rent decree. Defendant 1, that is the appellant before me, resisted the claim of the plaintiff on the following grounds : (1) that in the settlement records which were prepared with the knowledge of the plaintiff, the names of the pro forma defendants were recorded with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff ; (2) that in the rent suit in which the rent decree in question was obtained the plaintiff made Tadbir on behalf of the pro forma defendants and deposed that Jatin Saha, Krishna Nath Ghose and the plaintiff were in fact the benamidars of the pro forma defendants, and (3) that the plaintiff was never in possession of any portion of the disputed land after his auction purchase.

The trial Court on a consideration of the evidence found that the plaintiff's title to the property was not at all affected by the sale. The trial Court found that the plaintiff did not know anything about the settlement operation. It was also found by the trial Court that the purchase in auction by the plaintiff was not a benami or mala fide one. The plaintiff's possession after the auction-purchase was also found. The trial Court also came to the conclusion that the conduct of defendant 1 in the rent suit in which the decree in question was obtained would go to show that defendant 1 himself was in collusion with the pro forma defendants 2 and 3. In this view of the matter the trial Court decreed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal the decree of the trial Court has been affirmed. Hence the present appeal by defendant 1.

Four points have been urged by the learned advocate for the appellant in support of the appeal, namely, (1) that S. 104-H, sub-cl. (8) is a bar to the present suit, (2) that in view of the facts admitted and found the plaintiff is estopped from contending that the decree is not binding on him, (3) that the prayer for perpetual injunction being discretionary, in view of the facts and circumstances of the case the Courts below did not exercise their discretion properly in granting plaintiff's prayer for perpetual injunction in this case; and (4) that in view of the provisions of S. 56, Cl. (i), Specific Relief Act, this is not a fit case in which perpetual injunction should be granted, inasmuch as the plaintiff had equally efficacious relief for putting a stop to the sale by depositing the decretal amount in Court.

As regards the first contention, the obvious answer is that this is not a suit in respect of any rent or omission to settle any rent under Ss. 104-A to 104-F.

As regards the second point, the issue about estoppel was decided against the appellant in the trial Court. As has been already pointed out the trial Court definitely found that the plaintiff was not at all aware of the settlement operation and consequently it was not possible for him to represent to the Settlement authorities that pro forma defendants 2 and 3 were to represent the tenancy in the settlement papers. In fact the finding of the trial Court that defendant 1 himself was in collusion with the pro forma defendants 2 and 3 would show conclusively that the defendant 1 was not misled in any way by any act or representation on the part of the plaintiff. Again when the appeal was taken to the lower appellate Court it appears that no such ground was specifically taken before the lower appellate Court. Again the ground of estoppel was also not taken in the memorandum of appeal to this Court. Estoppel is not a pure question of law. Certain necessary facts have got to be found out in order to enable the Court to apply the doctrine of estoppel. The plea of estoppel, as has been stated above, was no doubt taken in the trial Court, but the finding of the trial Court was against the defendant. That finding was not apparently challenged before the lower appellate Court. Under these circumstances, there appears to be no substance in this contention.

As regards the third point it may be observed that according to the findings of the Courts below the decree is a collusive decree and the plaintiff's right is not at all affected by the decree and cannot be affected by the sale which will be held in execution of that decree. In these circumstances, the defendant is threatening to invade the plaintiff's right to the property and the Court therefore acted properly in restraining the defendant from selling the property. Reliance was placed by the learned advocate for the appellant on S. 56 (a), Specific Relief Act, which lays down that :

An injunction cannot be granted to stay a judicial proceeding pending at the institution of the suit in which the injunction is sought unless such restraint is necessary to prevent the multiplicity of proceedings

Now what would be the effect if the defendant be not restrained from selling the property at this stage? The property would be sold and in due course the auction-purchaser would get possession of the property through Court. Both the plaintiff and the purchaser will claim possession. The result would be that there would be a multiplicity of proceedings in future. It is therefore absolutely necessary that before the matter goes further, the dispute regarding title to this property should be settled once for all. It cannot be seriously disputed that as the plaintiff's right has been established the property is going to be wrongfully sold; the plaintiff's right to restrain the defendant from selling the property therefore follows as a matter of course. In view of the concurrent findings of the Courts below that the decree which the defendant is trying to execute is a collusive decree and cannot in any way affect the interest of the plaintiff, it cannot be said that the order for injunction passed by the Courts below is not proper.

As regards the fourth point, it is very difficult to appreciate the argument of the learned advocate. It is argued that the plaintiff has an equally efficacious remedy for preventing the sale of his property, as he can pay up the decretal amount and prevent the sale. No authority in support of this contention was cited before me and I am not aware of any principle or precedent which compels a person whose interest is not at all affected by a decree and against whom the decree is not at all binding to satisfy that decree. Under these circumstances, I cannot accept the contention of the learned advocate, that the plaintiff's prayer for injunction should be refused unless he pays the decretal amount. The point taken by the learned advocate for the appellant therefore fails. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal under S. 15, Letters Patent, has been asked for in this case and is refused.

Lort-Williams, J.—This is an appeal by the Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal, on behalf of the Government of Assam, against a decision of the Extra Assistant Commissioner of Dibrugarh, acquitting the respondents of an offence under S. 13, Public Gambling Act (Act III of 1867). It appears that on some carnival ground in Dibrugarh, a kind of game was played which, the prosecution alleged, was a gambling game. There were employed in the game an ordinary dart board with numbers upon it, another board with corresponding numbers in rows, and a table with corresponding numbers upon it. It was alleged that people bought tickets, which they placed upon one or other of the numbers upon the table. Then one of them was given a dart or darts which he aimed at the dart board and, according as the darts hit particular numbers on the dart board which corresponded with the same numbers on the table, the person who had placed tickets on the table won or lost, that is to say, the winners received some payment from the person who was the owner and organiser of the game and the implements used for carrying it on. The evidence shows that such a game was carried on in this carnival grounds, and that the respondent Renny was either the owner of the implements or the organiser of the game, and that the other two respondents, in some way or other, assisted him in carrying it on. All this evidence is rather vague and insufficient in its present form. Before the prosecution can succeed in proving the case alleged they must bring home clearly to the three accused persons that they were responsible for carrying on the game and, therefore, were gambling at the time when this offence is alleged to have been committed. There is also evidence to show that certain persons bought tickets and placed them on the table, and that one or other of them threw a dart. There is no evidence to show that any of these persons won anything on this occasion. But there is a suggestion that, according to the rules, if a dart had hit some particular number or numbers, then the persons who paid for the tickets and placed them on the table would have received money, that is to say, would have won their bets.

The evidence leads me to think that the police stepped in too soon and before they had obtained sufficient evidence to prove the case against these three accused persons. But Mr. Khundkar has suggested that the note of the evidence, which we have, may not be complete. The case was tried summarily and consequently the Magistrate may not have taken down every word that was given in evidence. He has, however, recorded a fairly full note. Thus, Mr. Khundkar suggests, and has supported his suggestion by an affidavit sworn by a Sub-Inspector of Police, that witness 4 Shamsul Huda deposed that Suren and Renny used to give prizes to the winners including himself. Whether that ought to be considered to be sufficient evidence to prove that the backers, so to speak, had a chance of winning money, will have to be decided hereafter. The learned Commissioner seems to have misdirected himself in law, and has acquitted the accused, not because the evidence was defective, but upon the ground that what was described by the Inspector did not amount to gambling within the meaning of S. 13, Act III of 1867. I think that he was misled by certain decisions of this Court upon the question whether the dart game is a gambling game or a game of skill. It was decided in the case of 37 C W N 24 (1) that the dart game is not a gambling game because it is a game in which there is a considerable element of skill. But that decision was not altogether relevant upon the question which had to be decided in this case. The accused were not charged with gambling by playing the dart game, but with gambling by side betting upon the result of throwing the darts in the manner described by the witnesses, coupled with other elements in the game arising from the employment of the second board and the table upon which the tickets were placed. The fact that the dart game itself cannot be said to be a gambling game, does not in any substantial way affect the question whether what these people are alleged to have been doing amounted to gambling or not. It seems, therefore, that the learned Commissioner was misled by the decision to which I have referred, and did not apply his mind to the different facts of the present case, and the different way in which it is alleged that the respondents committed an offence under the Public Gambling Act. The case therefore must go back to be retried, and the order of dismissal must be set aside. The prosecution must appreciate what are the essential facts which must be proved bearing in mind the points to which I have drawn attention. The accused, who are on bail, will remain upon the same bail.

Criminal Revn. No. 1282 of 1934, Decided on 29th January 1935.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 520—"Court of appeal" means any Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from decision of Magistrate by whom case was tried.

The Court of appeal mentioned in S. 520 is a Court of appeal as contemplated by Ch. 31. The words "Court of appeal" in S. 520 do not mean only a Court to which either of the parties to the criminal case has appealed or could appeal. The Court of appeal is any Court which has powers of appeal, that is any Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the decision of the Magistrate by whom the case was tried: 3 Cal 379; 1929 Rang 97 (F B); 9 Mad 448 and 1932 Bom 534, Ref. [P 185 C 2; P 186 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 9 and 520—Additional Sessions Judge is Court of Session and Court of appeal within meaning of S. 520.

An Additional Sessions Judge is also a Judge of the Court of Session and is a Court of appeal within the meaning of S. 520: 1931 Cal 190, Ref. [P 186 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 520—Sessions Judge or Additional Sessions Judge is not Court of revision within meaning of S. 520.

A Court of revision within the meaning of S. 520 must be a Court of revision as contemplated by Ch. 32 of the Code. A Sessions Judge or Additional Sessions Judge is not a Court of revision within the meaning of S. 520: 1935 P C 35 and 1932 Bom 534, Rel. on. [P 186 C 1, 2]

Holiram Deka—for Petitioner.

Gopal Chandra Banerjee—for Opposite Party.

Order.—This Rule was issued against the Deputy Commissioner of Sibsagar and the complainant opposite party in a certain criminal case to show cause why the order of the Additional Sessions Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, in Criminal Appeal No. 12 of 1934, dated 10th October 1934, setting aside under S. 520, Criminal P. C., an order of a first Class Magistrate of Golaghat, under S. 517 of the Code and restoring a certain elephant to the complainant opposite party, should not be set aside on the ground that the Additional Sessions Judge was not the Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision within the meaning of S. 520, Criminal P. C. S. 520 is in these terms:

Any Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision may direct any order under S. 517, S. 518 or S. 519 passed by a Court subordinate thereto, to be stayed pending consideration by the former Court, and may modify, alter or annul such order and make any further orders that may be just.

Evidently the Court of appeal mentioned in the section must be a Court of appeal as contemplated by Ch. 31. There is nothing in terms of S. 520 justifying the view that the words "Court of appeal" in that section means only a Court to which either of the parties to the criminal case has appealed or could appeal: see 3 Cal 379 (1) and 7 Rang 345 (2). The wording of the section rather indicates that the Court of appeal is any Court which has powers of appeal, that is any Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the decision of the Magistrate by whom the case was tried: see 9 Mad 448 (3) and 56 Bom 369 (4). It is not disputed by the learned Advocate for the petitioner that the Court of Session is the Court of appeal in the present case. Under S. 9, Criminal P. C., the Local Government is empowered to establish a Court of Session for every Sessions division and to appoint a Judge of such a Court and Additional Sessions Judges and Assistant Sessions Judges to exercise jurisdiction in such Court and to direct at what place or places the Court of Session shall sit.

Now :

There is only one Court of Session in each sessional division, sitting at different places and manned by a number of Judges. The Court is the Court of Session. It is not accurate to refer to the "Court of the Sessions Judge" and the "Court of the Additional Sessions Judge" and so on, except colloquially: see 58 Cal 1117 (5).

Therefore an Additional Sessions Judge is also a Judge of the Court of Session. Consequently the Additional Sessions Judge of the Assam Valley Districts sitting at the time at Jorhat was the Court of appeal in the present case within the meaning of S. 520, Criminal P. C. It may be pointed out here that when the petitioner appeared before the Additional Sessions Judge after he got notice about this case, he did not raise the question that the Additional Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal or that he was not authorized by the Sessions Judge to hear the appeal. Again the Court of revision within the meaning of S. 520 must be a Court of revision as contemplated by Ch. 32 of the Code. Under S. 535, Criminal P. C., the Sessions Judge can call for the record in the case. Under S. 436 he can order further enquiry. Under S. 438 he can refer the matter to the High Court after examination of the record. In 56 Bom 369 (4), Beaumont, C. J., observed as follows:

The Sessions Court has no general power of making orders in revision. It can only under S. 435 enquire into the matters, before Subordinate Courts and if necessary refer to the High Court for orders under S. 438. But S. 520 seems to make it unnecessary for a subordinate Court of revision to adopt that course in matters within that section. If an application is made to the Sessions Court as the Court having powers of revision in respect of the trial Court in regard to orders relating to property made under S. 517, 518 or 519, then in my opinion the Sessions Court can itself make a proper order and need not refer the matter to the High Court.

In Chunbiya v. King-Emperor (6) decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee on 6th December 1934, Lord Atkin has made the following observation :

The powers relating to appeals under S. 423, Criminal P. C., are given to the appellate Court and the appellate Court may include a Court subordinate to the High Court and the appellate Court as such has no power to enhance the sentence differing from the provision which was in the old Criminal Procedure Code of 1872. On the other hand the powers of revision are given to the High Court alone and the powers of revision are given to the High Court in the case of any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders or which otherwise comes to his knowledge.

In view of the observations of the Judicial Committee it is difficult to hold that Sessions Judge or Additional Judge is a Court of revision within the meaning of S. 520. But as I have held that the Additional Judge is a Court of appeal within the meaning of S. 520 of the Code, I discharge the rule.

The Judge should give the jury the help and guidance which they are entitled to expect from the Judge, and which it is his duty to give. The charge should not consist of a long, rambling repetition of the evidence, without any attempt to marshall the facts under appropriate heads, or to assist the jury to sift and weigh the evidence, so that they will be in a position to understand which are the really important parts of the evidence and which are of secondary importance. The Judge should deal with the case of each of the accused separately, that is to say, he must point out to the jury exactly the evidence against each of the accused separately, and it is not sufficient if he simply asks the jury to consider. It is his duty to consider the case of each accused separately and to describe to the jury the evidence against each of the accused. It is, of course, necessary in every criminal case for the Judge carefully, properly and efficiently to charge the jury, but if there is any case in which it is more important that this duty should properly be performed, it is in a case of murder. He should not go into unnecessary details with regard to such aspects of the case, which are really of very little importance. [P 187 C 2]

(b) Criminal Trial—Jury trial—Charge of conspiracy to murder—Letter by some person to complainant that certain accused were conspiring to kill him and had offered him bribe to murder complainant—Judge not explaining evidential value of this letter but leaving jury to imagine it to be substantive evidence of conspiracy to murder—Non-direction held amounted to misdirection.

Where in a trial by a jury into a charge under S. 302 read with S. 120-B, the Judge did not explain the proper evidential value of a letter written by certain person to the complainant that the accused were conspiring to kill him and had offered him (writer) money to murder complainant, but left the jury to imagine that this was substantive evidence of the conspiracy to murder the complainant:

Held: that this by itself was a non-direction which amounted to a misdirection. [P 188 C 1]

(c) Criminal Trial—Jury trial—Judge should make reference to specific accused person and not merely use word accused.

In his charge to the jury the Judge should not merely use the word accused leaving the jury in considerable doubt as to which accused he refers. He should make reference to specific accused persons. [P 189 C 1]

Sures Chandra Talukdar and Radhika Ranjan Guha—for Appellants.

Harideo Chatterji—for the Crown.

Lort-Williams, J.—In this case the appellants were charged with two others under Ss. 364 and 302/120-B, I. P. C. Two of the accused were acquitted by the jury and the others, who are the present appellants, were found guilty under both sections by a majority of 6 to 3. This is a case in which, though it cannot be said that there is any actual misdirection of the jury, the Judge has failed almost entirely to give the jury the help and guidance which they are entitled to expect from the Judge, and which it is his duty to give. The charge consists of a long, rambling repetition of the evidence, without any attempt to marshall the facts under appropriate heads, or to assist the jury to sift and weigh the evidence, so that they will be in a position to understand which are the really important parts of the evidence and which are of secondary importance. Especially, the learned Judge has failed altogether to deal with the case of each of the accused separately, that is to say, he has omitted to point out to the jury exactly the evidence against each of the accused separately. Almost the last words of his charge were that they would consider the case of each accused separately. That however is not sufficient. It is his duty to consider the case of each accused separately and to describe to the jury the evidence against each of the accused. It is of course necessary in every criminal case for the Judge carefully, properly and efficiently to charge the jury, but if there is any case in which it is more important that this duty should properly be performed, it is in a case of murder, and especially, in this case was great care necessary on the part of the Judge, because it was a case in which the police had originally reported against any proceedings being taken, and after a Naraji petition had been filed, the case was inquired into by a Deputy Magistrate who dismissed it under S. 203, Criminal P. C. Thereupon the complainant moved the Sessions Judge and it was not until the third attempt made by the complainant that he succeeded in getting the case sent back for a fresh inquiry out of which the present prosecution resulted.

In addition to failing to give any assistance to the jury, the learned Judge handicapped them by going into unnecessary details with regard to certain aspects of the case, which were really of very little importance. Yet he told the jury that it was necessary for them to come to a finding with regard to these secondary matters. With regard to the evidence generally, all that the learned Judge did was to repeat shortly what each witness had said, and then to tell the jury again and again ad-nauseum that it was for them to consider whether they would believe or disbelieve that witness, without attempting to guide or help them in considering what facts there were in his evidence which would lead them either to one conclusion or the other.

The facts shortly were that Kazi Sarip Hossain was a Collectorate Amin and he was the complainant. He had purchased a property and a rent decree against the accused Nabi Khan and had purchased Nabi Khan's homestead in execution and attached his moveables. There had been resistance to the peon who went to attach the goods, and Nabi Khan, Mofez, Ful Khan and others were implicated in a criminal case for resisting the peon, and Nabi Khan, Mofez, Chinta Haran Das and one Kasemali had threatened the complainant. This Kasemali seems to be intended for the accused Hashemali, though there is no explanation in the charge about this discrepancy. The complainant's son, Momin, gave evidence against these accused in the criminal case. After stating these facts to the jury, the Judge then went on to describe certain letters written by one Abdul Kader to the complainant, in which he stated that Nabi Khan, Mofezaddi, Khorshed and Chintaharan, the accused, and others were conspiring to kill him. These letters were admissible only in corroboration under S. 157 of the statement of Abdul Kader, that some of the accused had offered him money to murder the complainant. Nowhere in the charge has the Judge explained this to the jury. He has left them to imagine that this was substantive evidence of a threat by these accused to murder the complainant, or substantive evidence of a conspiracy on their part to murder him. This, in itself, was a non-direction which amounted to misdirection.

On 7th December 1933, the complainant's son, Momin, went out to buy some provisions and his father became anxious about him when he did not return by nightfall. The complainant and his sons went out and searched in the neighbourhood and discovered that Momin had been to the shop and purchased the things he was sent to get. This was at about 8 o'clock at night. When near Ful Khan's house the complainant heard whispers in the houses of Hashem and Ful Khan and, in the light of the room, he saw all the accused in the yard, carrying lejas and lathis. He also heard a groaning sound coming from Hashem's ghar. The learned Judge, throughout the charge, repeatedly told the jury that the complainant heard the voice of his son Momin groaning in Hashem's bari. There is no evidence to show that it was Momin groaning. It was a mere inference to be drawn from other evidence. But the statement repeated to the jury that it was actually Momin who was heard groaning, was undoubtedly sufficient to mislead the jury upon this part of the evidence. After that the learned Judge went into a somewhat rambling account of the attempts of the complainant to get the police to take the matter up, and a great deal of unnecessary detail was gone into by him in describing the various steps by which the complainant eventually got the police to take up the enquiry.

There was a great deal of evidence to show that the police were very negligent over the matter, and their negligence may have been one of the causes of the death of this unfortunate man, because if it be true that Momin was groaning when the complainant was outside Ful Khan's house, there might have been time to save him if the police had taken action immediately. But this was not a matter for the jury to enquire into. The learned Judge however told them that they would have to decide whether the police had been negligent in the matter, a question which it was quite unnecessary for them to consider, except perhaps upon the point whether the complainant was guilty of any delay in making a complaint. On the next morning, one of the accused, Chinta Haran Das, made a complaint at the thana that there had been a burglary in his house and that he had stabbed a thief with a dao. On the following Sunday morning, a dead body was found floating in the Kalijira river, and later some blood was found near Hashemali's bhita, and two legs were found amputated at the knee near Kashemali's bhita, which were identified by the complainant as those of his son, Momin. The learned Judge then went on to say that these accused were parties to a criminal conspiracy, meaning all the seven accused. Immediately afterwards, he stated the evidence in the case shortly and said that Kashemali and Apserali saw these accused throwing a gamcha around Momin's neck and dragging him towards Hashem's house. Presumably, he meant all the seven accused.

This Kashemali was a witness, but no attempt was made to draw a distinction between Kashemali, mentioned as an accused, and Kashemali, the witness. Another witness saw Momin being assaulted in the house of Hashemali in the evening. The Judge does not say by whom the assault was made. One Baseraddi saw the accused Tomejuddin and Mofez carrying a dead body near Majid, and Amjadali saw these accused, (presumably, the Judge meant Tomejuddin and Mofez, carrying a dead body in a boat and going towards Raipura. All this kind of description appears to have been very carelessly done, and lacks the precision which is most necessary in a criminal case and, especially, in a case of murder. It leaves me, and probably left the jury, in considerable doubt about which of the accused were referred to, whenever the Judge mentioned the word 'accused', without making any reference to specific accused persons. It is unnecessary for me to describe the case in further detail. I have indicated sufficient to show that the learned Judge failed properly to direct the jury. There was however considerable evidence upon which if a proper direction had been given and, if believed by the jury, these men or some of them might have been convicted under these charges. In these circumstances, the only appropriate course is to set aside the convictions and send the case back for retrial.

Mahommed Mayenuddin Mea and others—Defendants—Appellants.

Prodyot Kumar Tagore and others—Plaintiff—Respondents.

Appeal No. 143 of 1930, Decided on 8th April 1935, from original decree of Sub-Judge, 3rd Court, Mymensingh, D/- 22nd April 1930.

Landlord and Tenant—Tenancy—Nature of—Purpose for which tenancy was originally acquired should be determined—Tenancy existing prior to Bengal Tenancy Act—It must be found that tenant was in occupation by cultivation and payment of rent—If nothing is known, except that tenant was in cultivating possession of portion of land for few years and then went on increasing cultivation, at same time letting in sub-tenants in rest of land, position is different—All other circumstances must be investigated to find whether such person was ryot or tenure-holder—It may be profitable to examine subsequent use of tenancy—Use during entire period of tenancy should be taken into account—Presumption under S. 5(5) is statutory presumption under Act—It has existed even prior to Act as presumption of fact.

Where the question is as to the nature of the tenancy, under the Bengal Tenancy Act, what has to be seen is the purpose for which the right of tenancy was originally acquired. And as regards a tenancy which existed from before, there having been no definition of 'ryot' in any earlier enactment, to give a person the status of a ryot, it will have to be found that he was in occupation by cultivation and payment of rent (vide: S. 6, Act 10 of 1859 and S. 6, Act 5 of 1869), a contract conferring the status of a ryot being deducible from such circumstances. It is possible that with reference to a tenancy of the latter kind if nothing else is known than that the entire tenancy since its inception was in the cultivating possession of the tenant for a number of years, the tenant was a ryot even though he may have subsequently let in sub-tenants in portions of the lands of the tenancy. But if all that can be gathered in respect of an old tenancy of unknown origin is that during the first few years the tenant was in cultivating possession of a portion of lands of the tenancy, and then went on increasing his own cultivation and at the same time letting in sub-tenants on the rest of the lands, the position is very different and it would require investigation of all other attendant circumstances in order to find out whether such a person was a ryot or a tenure holder. There may also be cases where it would be profitable to examine the subsequent use of the tenancy but only to the extent that such use throws light upon the attendant circumstances and in that way on the original purposes of the tenancy. And where such examination is justified, the use during the entire period of the existence of the tenancy has to be taken into account. In the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 there is the presumption contained in sub-s. (5) of S. 5. It is a statutory presumption under that Act; but a presumption depending upon the largeness or smallness of the area of the tenancy, being founded on reason, had all along existed even before that Act as a presumption of fact.

Bijan Kumar Mukherjee, Gopendra Nath Das, Hemendra Chandra Choudhury, Hira Lal Chakravarty and Satindra Nath Chatterjee—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The whole controversy in this appeal turns on the question of the status of the defendants who are the appellants and who claim to be occupancy raiyats as against the contention of the plaintiffs respondents which ascribe to them the status of non-permanent tenure holders holding over on the expiry of their lease. The defendants have to start with a double presumption against them. They have been recorded in the record of rights, finally published in 1913, as possessors of Fazal Jote Joynal Abedin, tenure holders—non-permanent, enhancible: the subordinate interests are recorded as Chukani; the total area of the lands let out to tenants is stated to be 539 acres, and the total area in direct possession as 11.96 acres of which about 5 acres consist of low lands and bunds and the rest are in the possession of the public as Halots. And the total area of the tenancy is 550.96 acres. The question to be considered is: "Has the presumption been rebutted?" The area consists mostly of Chur lands in Mouzah Gaibandha in the District of Mymensingh which are subject to fluvial action of the river Brahmaputra. The last lease in favour of the defendant's predecessor, one Joynal Abedin, was dated 1313 (1907). It was a dowl settlement. A prior lease, also a dowl, dated 1282 (1875) is also in evidence. Each of these dows was for seven years, the description being that it was a Fazal Dowl or Dowl of Fazal land. In the prior one the area of the land, as on measurement, was stated to be 1262 Big. 4 Cottas and rent Rs. 858-8-0; and in the later one the area as measured was given as Bigha 1399-11 Cottas 1 Chhitak out of which 8 Cottas with rent As. 4 was said to be Hajat and the rest of the area was assessed with a rental of Rs. 990-2-0. No particulars as regards the nature of the tenancy can be gathered from the terms of either of these documents except that the Jote was a Fasal Jote which evidently means 'for purposes of cultivation' nor any as regards the status of the tenant except that in the dowl of 1313 (1907), Joynal Abedin, the person in whose favour the settlement was made, was described as Malguzardar or rent paying holder.

It has been found, and about that matter there is no longer any dispute, that the origin of the tenancy is lost in obscurity. Unknown though its origin is, it has been alleged on behalf of the defence that the jote was first taken some 150 years ago by the great great grand-father of defendant 1 Maynuddin. The pedigree of the defendants helps us to find out who the successive holders of the jote could have been; and taking the evidence on the defendants' side to be true they must have been defendant 1's great great grand-father Anwar Sheikh, great grand-father Abdul Mati Sheikh, grand-father Khajeru-uddin, father Joynal Abedin, and then the present defendants. Khajeru-uddin died in 1280 or 1281 B. S. and Joynal Abedin died in 1315 B. S. No document of Khajeru-uddin's time has been produced and the Judge below is correct in observing that if any history prior to 1280 B. S. is to be gathered the oral evidence that has been adduced is all that one has to look to. Of such papers that have been produced on behalf of the parties of Joynal Abedin's time and later, the only two documents of any importance as bearing on the question before us are two Chittas, one of 1286 B. S. (Ex. 24) and the other of 1309 B. S. (Ex. 12). A good deal of discussion appears to have been let in in the Court below on the question of the truth or sufficiency of the defendants' explanation for non-production of papers of any earlier dates, the explanation being that there was a fire and also an earthquake, and such discussion has also been repeated before us to some extent. But nothing has been made out which would justify us in holding that the explanation is untrue or that it is not adequate. Nor, on the other hand, are we satisfied, as apparently the Court below also was not, that the plaintiff has withheld any relevant papers. The fact remains, but only as a fact, that there are no earlier papers to go upon. The learned Judge has come to a finding on the evidence as regards the origin of the jote which he has recorded in these words:

From the evidence and from the Chitta of 1286 it may safely be inferred that the jote was of Khajeru-uddin's time. But there is absolutely no dependable evidence in the record to show that the jote existed from before Khajeru-uddin's time. Any statement to that effect is merely speculative.

The finding is unassailable, if dependable evidence in the shape of documentary evidence is meant, and oral evidence of matters relating to such ancient times is recorded as speculative. Mr. Sen in his arguments on behalf of the appellants has strenuously sought to make a great point of the fact that in no papers of the plaintiff prior to 1327 B. S. were the defendants described as tenure holders and that it was only in that year and later that in the talab bakis and the dakhilas the tenancy was described as a non-permanent tenure: (vide Ex. 2 Series Dakhilas, one of which Ex. 2-D, appears to have been received by defendant 1 himself, his signature appearing on the original though not in the paper as printed; and Ex. 3 Series Talab Bakis, one of which, Ex. 3, has been wrongly printed.) From this he has argued that the plaintiff was not bold enough to put forward such a case as regards the defendants' status. We see no force whatsoever in this argument, for long prior to that date the record-of-rights had declared the defendants as non-permanent tenure holders, and it is idle to suggest that the defendants were not aware of that fact.

Another argument which was addressed to the Court below and also to this Court was based upon the use of the word 'Chasak' as regards some of the plots of the tenancy, the Chittas of 1286 B. S. and 1309 B. S. The Chitta of 1286 B. S. is called an Ekandaj Chitta, which means Chitta of an entire village, in this case of village Gaibandha, in which the tenancy is situate. The portion which was available and has been produced is only a fragment, torn and worm eaten; and it is said that there are references in it to earlier Tankhi Chittas, that is to say, Chittas of parts of the village dated 1267 B. S. and later. In most of the entries in the Chitta of 1286 B. S. and in a few of the entries, the Chitta of 1309 B. S. the occupants are called 'Chasak' while many of those who are called 'Chasak' in the former Chitta are differently described by the use of the word 'Abad' in the latter Chitta. It was contended on behalf of the defendants that the word 'Chasak' means that the occupants were Bargadars or servants or hired labourers while the word 'Abad' signifies cultivation by ryots. On behalf of the plaintiff on the other hand it was contended that both words referred to cultivators. The learned Judge has accepted the plaintiff's contention and has explained the use of the two words in the above mentioned way by suggesting that by the date of the latter Chitta the word 'Chasak' had gone out of use, and the word 'Abad' having come into use, found more frequent mention.

The defendants have given some oral evidence as regards the meaning of the word 'Chasak', but that evidence is obviously unreliable, as the learned Judge has pointed out. Whether there was any real distinction between the two words, even though both may have implied cultivation, one cannot say with certainty. But it is obvious, on a close examination of the two Chittas, that the meaning which the defendants seek to put upon the word 'Chasak' cannot be its true meaning. For this view several reasons may be given. In the paper book a comparative table has been printed, which is very much misleading, being incomplete and intended to help only the appellants themselves. Even there are entries showing that the same persons, with reference to whom the word 'Chasak' was used in Chitta of 1286 B. S., were described by the use of the word 'Abad' in the Chitta of 1309 B. S., a state of things which upon the defendant's interpretation can only be explained on the supposition which is highly improbable, that during the interval that elapsed between the two Chittas the same person had transferred himself from a Bargadar or servant or hired labourer to a tenant. Again in that table there is one entry showing that certain persons with reference to whom 'Chasak' was used in the Chitta of 1286 B. S. were described in the Chitta of 1309 B. S. as former tenants in respect of the plot. Furthermore Mr. Mukherjee has drawn our attention to the fact that there are innumerable entries in the Chitta of 1286 B. S. describing the plots as "Fasal Ijara Joynal Sheikh Chasak so and so" clearly showing that Joynal Sheikh was Ijaradar and not a ryot. The contention of the defendants based upon the Chitta of 1286 B. S. that at that date Joynal Abedin, the holder of the tenure was a cultivating ryot and not a tenure holder, cannot be regarded as valid.

On the question of the nature of the tenancy, it cannot be disputed that under the Bengal Tenancy Act 1885 what has to be seen is the purpose for which the right of tenancy was originally acquired: vide S. 5, sub-s. (4), Cl. (b), Beng. Ten. Act. And as regards a tenancy which existed from before, there having been no definition of "ryot" in any earlier enactment, to give a person the status of a ryot, it will have to be found that he was in occupation by cultivation and payment of rent: vide S. 6 of Act 10 of 1859 and S. 6 of Act 8 of 1869; a contract conferring the status of a ryot being deducible from such circumstances. It is possible that with reference to a tenancy of the latter kind, if nothing else is known than that the entire tenancy since its inception was in the cultivating possession of the tenant for a number of years, the tenant was a ryot even though he may have subsequently let in sub-tenants in portions of the lands of the tenancy. But if all that can be gathered in respect of an old tenancy of unknown origin is that during the first few years the tenant was in cultivating possession of a portion of lands of the tenancy, and then went on increasing his own cultivation and at the same time letting in sub-tenants on the rest of the lands, the position is very different and it would require investigation of all other attendant circumstances in order to find out whether such a person was a ryot or tenure holder. There may also be cases where it would be profitable to examine the subsequent use of the tenancy but only to the extent that such use throws light upon the attendant circumstances and in that way on the original purposes of the tenancy. And where such examination is justified, the use during the entire period of the existence of the tenancy has to be taken into account. In the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 there is the presumption contained in sub-s. (5), S. 5. It is a statutory presumption under that Act; but a presumption depending upon the largeness or smallness of the area of the tenancy, being founded on reason, had all along existed even before that Act as a presumption of fact.

Bearing these principles in mind we have now to examine the oral evidence that is on the record, for there is no document by reference to which the terms of the tenancy may be ascertained, and such documentary evidence as is on the record, the earliest of which as already stated in Chitta of 1286 B. S., far from showing that the defendants or their predecessors were ryots, point clearly to their having occupied the status of tenure holders. The defendants rely on such oral evidence as they have been able to adduce as regards the user of the tenancy in the time of Khaje-ruddin, who died in 1280 or 1281, B. S., and of his predecessors, Bishu, Abdul Mali and Anwar. This evidence consists of the testimony of defendant 7 Sonabhan Bewa, who is a daughter of Khajiruddin, and of six other witnesses, viz. D. Ws 4, 5, 6, 9, 20 and 21, who are the older amongst the witnesses in this case. The learned Judge has examined the evidence of each one of these witnesses with care and has expressed the view that the evidence is of a very unsatisfactory and unconvincing nature. No other view indeed is possible. Sonadban Bewa herself has made a statement which, if it is taken to be true, goes against the case which the defendants seek to make out, namely that it was only after Joynal Abedin came in that tenants began to be settled on the lands and that up to Khajiruddin's time, the lands used to be cultivated in Barga. She said:

Abdul Mali settled some tenants at first. The lands proved too large in extent for cultivation. So some tenants were settled. He brought the tenants at his own expense and settled them; they did not come and settle themselves.

But perhaps this statement is just as untrue as the rest of her evidence where she endeavoured to establish that her grandfather Bishu cultivated the lands with his own ploughs and cattle and with 30 or 40 servants. She admitted that Bishu Mandal died when she was a child, and that her knowledge of what used to be done in Bishu Mandal's time was acquired from what her father Khajiruddin had told her. As regards her father's time she has deposed that her father's officers used to bring paddy and rice of the Abad and to realise rents also, which latter fact must mean that there were tenants on the land. P. W. 4 Abdul Majid Mandal, P. W. 5 Mandu Sardar, and P. W. 6 Abdul Alim Sardar, have taken advantage of their ages to attempt to support the story of Khas cultivation in Khajiruddin's time, but as the learned Judge has demonstrated in his judgment, their evidence cannot be trusted. The same remark applies to P. W. 9 Darbari Mandal who has made it clear in his cross-examination that he really knew nothing about the tenancy. D. W. 20 Kanai Sarcar is an old officer of the defendants who entered their service in 1284 B. S., but has spoken of large cultivation prior to that date, and in Khajiruddin's time. He has tried his very best to support his master's cause, but it is unthinkable to rely on his evidence. D. W. 23 Mayenuddin is defendant 3 himself. He has of course deposed that the Jote was taken for cultivation and that his predecessor had all along cultivated the lands in Barga or by servant until 1285 or 1286 B. S., when tenants first began to be settled. But such evidence as he himself has given, in the absence of any reliable corroboration, would hardly suffice to prove the case which he has sought to establish.

There are a few other matters worth mention. In the plaint of a suit instituted in 1922 on behalf of the plaintiff against the present defendants for rent of this tenancy, it was most definitely asserted that they are ordinary non-permanent tenure holders at a variable rent (Ex. D). In their written statement in that suit (Ex. 25) the defendants controverted that assertion by saying: "The rent land is not a permanent tenure. It is permanent and rent thereof is not enhancible." The suit ended in a compromise in which the settlement records were referred to without challenge and the rent was admitted to be variable (Ex. 40). Here was a definite assertion of the defendants' status which was not repudiated. Then again in 1913 defendant 3 had deposed in a certain proceeding that his father, that is to say Joynal Abedin, had no Khamar land at any time. This last-mentioned fact of course is not conclusive and is perhaps capable of being explained; but there it is. On a consideration of all evidence that the defendants have adduced or called in their aid, it is impossible to hold that the presumption which they have to meet has been rebutted. The result is that we must hold that the appeal cannot succeed. It is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Nilratan Adhikary—Defendant.

O. O. C. J. Suit No. 2204 of 1932, Decided on 27th August 1934.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 1, R. 9—Necessary party to suit not brought on record—Defendant taking objection at earliest moment—No amendment asked for by plaintiff—Suit must be dismissed—Suit on promissory note —Widow of deceased executant governed by Bengal School of Hindu Law is necessary party.

1936 O/25 & 26

Order 1, R. 9 does not do away with the necessity for bringing a necessary party on the record. If a necessary party is not on the record the proper course is to apply to have him joined. If he is not brought on the record at all, or if when he is brought on the record the suit as against him is barred by limitation, the suit will be dismissed especially where the defendant has taken the objection even at the earliest possible moment and the plaintiff has not asked for amendment of the plaint for bringing on record such party: 1914 Cal 132, Applied; 1930 Mad 930, Disting.; 1921 Cal 622, Rel. on. [P 195 C 2]

An executant of a promissory note governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law died leaving two widows. Plaintiff impleaded one of them as defendants in his suit on the note. Even at the earliest moment, the impleaded widow pleaded that the other widow was a necessary party but the plaintiff did not implead her:

Held: that she was a necessary party and as she was not on record, the suit should be dismissed. [P 195 C 2]

Judgment.—The plaintiff in this suit seeks to obtain a decree for a sum of Rs. 6,866 against the estate of Krishna Kishore Adhikary, deceased, in the hands of the persons whom he has impleaded as defendants. On 25th September 1929 Krishna Kishore Adhikary executed a promissory note for the sum of Rs. 5,000 payable to the plaintiff on demand with interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum. On 29th April 1930 Krishna Kishore died leaving two widows as his heiresses. In his suit the plaintiff states in para. 2 of his plaint that Krishna Kishore had died leaving defendant 3, his widow, surviving him. He then states in para. 3 that he is informed that Krishna Kishore had left a will and appointed defendant 2 as his executor. In para. 4 he says the plaintiff has ascertained that defendants 1 and 2, the brothers of the deceased and defendant 3, his widow, are in possession of the assets of the deceased. He then sets out particulars of his claim and asks for a decree against the assets in the hands of the defendants, and if necessary, for administration. The plaint was filed on 14th November 1932. The brothers Nilratan Adhikary and Gopesh Chunder Adhikary filed a written statement in which they deny knowledge of execution of the promissory note and state in para. 2 of their written statement that Krishna Kishore died intestate leaving him surviving two widows as his heiresses and legal representatives under the Bengal School of Hindu Law by which he was governed. They deny that they or either of them is in possession of the assets, but they admit that they are in possession of certain properties which were formerly their joint properties and which they say no longer form part of the assets of their deceased brother. In para. 5 of their written statement they take a definite plea that the second widow, Sm. Indumati Debi is a necessary party to the suit and that the suit is bad as framed.

The widow Sm. Saratbala Debi, who has been impleaded, has put in no defence. The defendant Nilratan Adhikary, one of the brothers, has died and there has been no substitution of his heirs on the record. Issue 1 which was framed was: "Is the suit bad for non-joinder or misjoinder of parties?" and this matter has been argued by way of demurrer. On behalf of the plaintiff, it is urged that the suit has been brought bona fide against those persons whom he thought were representing the estate. He admits that he has not used the word "representative," but he contends that from the way in which his plaint is framed and the allegation that defendant 3, the widow is in possession of part of the assets that widow is sued in a representative capacity. It seems to me that this is stretching the language a great deal further than is legitimate. In support of his contention he relies on 54 Mad 212 (1). That case however is not really an authority for the proposition which the plaintiff is trying to set up here, for in that case a creditor had brought a suit against the widow whom he considered to be the sole legal representative of the debtor and had obtained an ex parte decree for the payment of the debt out of the assets in her hands and the Court held that the widow sufficiently represented the estate to make the decree binding on a residuary legatee under the debtor's will. One of the learned Judges in that case in delivering his judgment says at p. 232:

I do not think it necessary to discuss cases of the Bombay High Court or other Courts which adopt the view that the crucial question is whether the right heir or successor is on record, not whether the deceased's estate is sufficiently represented. And to my mind the question whether a representative on record is actually in possession of any of the deceased's property is not of importance, except as throwing light on the question of the plaintiff's good faith.

The learned Judge then considers the argument which has sometimes been put forward that a change has been brought about by the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908 and that some of the older cases are therefore not in point. He says:

The words of the Code of 1882 and that of 1859 may perhaps be taken to have given more freedom to a plaintiff in bringing on record the representatives he chooses and the words of the present Code to throw more responsibility in the matter on the Court. But that certainly cannot make a decree obtained after impleading a representative approved by the Court of less effect against the deceased's estate.

Those final words make it quite clear that the matter which that Court was considering was not a matter such as is being considered here, namely whether the proper parties have been impleaded before the decree is sought, but that the Courts were considering whether after a decree had been obtained and a representative approved by the Court had been impleaded the deceased's estate would be bound. The question here is whether a plaintiff who knew more than a year before his suit came to trial that he had impleaded the wrong parties should be entitled to continue his suit in spite of that knowledge. The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code which are really in point are contained in O. 1, R. 3; 8, 9 and 10. R. 3 mentions the persons who may be joined as defendants, and R. 8 states that one person may sue or defend on behalf of all in the same interest. R. 9 says that no suit shall be defeated by reason of misjoinder or non-joinder of parties, and R. 10 provides, that the Court may strike out or add the name of any party who ought to have been joined as plaintiff or defendant or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit. Sub-R. 4, O. 1, R. 10, states that where a defendant is added the plaint is to be amended, and sub-r. 5 says :

Subject to the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, S. 22, the proceedings as against persons added as defendants shall be deemed to have begun only on the service of the summons.

1. Chaturbhujadoss Kushaldoss & Sons v. Raja Manicka Mudali, 1930 Mad 930=129 I O 469 =60 M L J 97=54 Mad 212.

It was suggested early in the hearing that it would be advisable for the plaintiff to amend his suit and bring on the record persons who appeared from the written statement to be the proper persons representing the estate of the deceased debtor. It was then admitted by the learned counsel for the plaintiff that there was a difficulty in his way because the suit had been brought only shortly before the period of limitation expired and were the amendment to be made the suit would be barred. The question which now arises is whether the persons on the record are the proper persons, and whether all the necessary parties have been brought on the record. The matter which the Court has to consider is whether an effective decree can be passed against those persons who are on the record. The defendant points out that he took the objection as to parties at the very earliest moment as he is called upon to do under O. 1, R. 13, Civil P. C., that is to say, he took the objection on 16th January 1933 when he filed his written statement. In support of this contention, that the Court cannot pass a decree against the estate in the absence of the legal representatives, he has referred me to the judgment of this Court in 25 C W N 249 (2), which was a suit for a declaration of a right of way, and one of the persons interested in the servient tenement had not been made a party to the suit. In that case it was pointed out that although under the provisions of O. 1, R. 9, Civil P. C., it is provided that no suit shall be defeated by reason of misjoinder or non-joinder of parties yet the Court will not in certain cases proceed to make a decree if that decree when made will be infructuous. Reliance was also placed on the case of 18 C W N 464 (3). That was a suit for accounts of a partnership in which the plaintiff and defendants 1, 2 and 4 had been members; the remaining partner died after the partnership business came to an end but before the suit was brought and left two sons who were defendants 3 and 5. Of those two sons only defendant 3 was originally impleaded and objection was taken in the written statement, as has been done in this case, that the deceased partner was not properly represented. The plaintiff after waiting some time then brought the other son of the deceased partner on the record and by that time the period of limitation prescribed for such a suit had expired.

In that suit it was held that all the partners or their representatives were necessary parties, and further, on the facts of that case, it was held that the two sons of the deceased partner were both necessary in order to represent the estate of their deceased father. Referring to O. 1, R. 9, the learned Judges said :

That rule, however, properly understood (O. 1, R. 9,) does not do away with the necessity for bringing a necessary party on the record. If a necessary party is not on the record the proper course is to apply to have him joined. If he is not brought on the record at all, or if when he is brought on the record the suit as against him is barred by limitation the suit will be dismissed.

They held that the plaintiff there ought to have impleaded all the legal representatives of the deceased defendant and that in the absence of one of the sons of the deceased partner the estate was not fully represented and the suit was not properly brought and must be dismissed. The reasoning in that case seems to me to be entirely applicable here. It is true that this is not a question of partnership, but the circumstances are much the same. As I have already pointed out the defendants took the objection at the earliest possible moment and definitely pleaded that the other widow was a necessary party to this suit. In my opinion, that was a correct submission, and in view of the fact that no amendment has been asked for, and that the necessary parties are not on the record, the suit must be dismissed. The defendants are entitled to their costs on scale No. 2.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent in respect of land situated within the Municipality of Chittagong, on the basis of a registered kabuliati. The case of the plaintiffs in the suit was that the Chittagong Cotton Mills, Ltd., the defendant in the suit, by their Managing Agents, the Chittagong Trading Company, Ltd., and two of its Directors took a lease of the lands described in the plaint, by executing a kabuliati on 8th October 1926, and have been in possession as lessees thereafter. That in spite of repeated demands there was failure on the part of the defendant to pay rent due; and that the defendants were in terms of the lease liable for rent due at the date of the institution of the suit with interest at 25 per cent per annum till realization. The claim of the plaintiffs was resisted by the defendant; and on the pleadings of parties, five distinct issues were raised on the merits of the case before the Court. The learned Subordinate Judge appears to have considered three issues bearing upon the merits of the claim by the plaintiffs together, and the other two issues separately. The decision of the Court below was arrived at on the material points involved in the case, disallowing questions during the cross-examination of one of the principal witnesses examined on the side of the plaintiffs. The decision of the lower Court was in favour of the plaintiffs, so far as the liability of the defendants in the suit for rent was concerned, but the rate of interest claimed by the plaintiffs was reduced to 12 per cent from 25 per cent as provided in the lease. The defendant appealed to this Court and the plaintiffs preferred cross-objections.

It appears to us to be clear that the procedure adopted by the Court below in disallowing questions in cross-examination was wholly unjustifiable, regard being had to the nature of the issues raised in the suit; furthermore, the Judge's manner of dealing with the points arising for consideration in the case, on the pleadings of parties, and on the issues raised for determination in the suit was wholly unsatisfactory. The two issues, Nos. 1 and 2, raised questions relating to the validity of the lease which was the basis of the claim before the Court and the right of plaintiff 1 to bring the suit. These issues were raised in view of the statements of the defendant before the Court, contained in paras. 8 and 4 of their written statement, in which the validity of the lease and the right to claim rent were distinctly challenged. In the written statement, there was a specific claim for abatement of rent on grounds stated. In our judgment none of the material points arising for consideration in the case, in view of the averments made by the defendants in their written statement, were properly considered by the Court below, and that the decision given by the Court followed upon the unjustifiable procedure of shutting out material evidence in the case. It may also be mentioned that the reason given by the Judge in the Court below for reducing the rate of interest from 25 per cent to 12 per cent simply on the ground of equity and justice does not commend itself to us, in view of the clear stipulations contained in the lease, as to payment of interest on arrears of rent.

In the above view of the case, before us, the appeal by the defendant and the cross-objections preferred by the plaintiffs must be allowed; and we direct accordingly. The decision and decree of the Court below are set aside, and the case is remanded to the lower Court for a retrial of the same in accordance with law after the parties concerned have been given opportunity of placing further evidence before the Court if they desire to do so. The costs in the case, including the costs in this appeal, will abide decision after remand.

The deposit which is required to be made under the provisions of proviso (b), to sub-s. (3) of S. 174, Ben. Ten. Order.—This rule is directed against an order of the learned District Judge of Birbhum dated 7th March 1935 passed in Misc. Appeal No. 141 of 1934. The appeal was directed against an order of the learned Munsiff dated 4th October 1934 made on an application filed under the provisions of S. 174 (3), Ben. Ten. Act. The following facts are material for the decision of this rule. Opposite party No. 1 was a tenant in respect of a holding held under opposite parties Nos. 2 to 7. On the same day three sets of the co-sharer landlords filed three suits for rent for the same period, viz., suits Nos. 1608/32, 1616/32 and 1628/32. All these suits were filed under the procedure laid down in S. 148-A, Ben. Ten. Act, that is to say, the co-sharer landlords who had not joined as plaintiffs were made defendants. All the suits were taken up on the same day and decreed on 29th November 1932. It does not appear that any of the defendants appeared and the decrees were ex parte. The decree in suit No. 1616 was executed first but opposite party No. 1 paid down the money and that decree was satisfied on 19th June 1933. Then the decree in suit No. 1628 was put in execution on 23rd February 1934, the execution case being No. 333/34. The tenancy was sold on 5th June 1934 and purchased by the petitioner before me for Rs. 250. On 4th July 1934 opposite party No. 1, the judgment-debtor, filed an application under S. 174 (3), Ben. Ten. Act, to set aside the sale. The application was not accompanied by a deposit in Court of the decretal amount. The case of the opposite party No. 1 was that the decree passed in the rent suit No. 1628/32 was not a rent decree and the sale was not a rent sale under the provisions of Ch. 14, Ben. Ten. Act. This question was taken up as a preliminary point by the learned Munsiff and by his order dated 4th October 1934 he held that it was a rent decree. He did not consider the question as to whether there was any irregularity in the sale or not. The learned Munsiff held that the decree was a rent decree and the sale was a rent sale and he made an order in the following terms:

that the judgment-debtor Panchkari Mandal be called upon to deposit the decretal dues by 6th October 1934 or else the application filed for setting aside the sale shall stand dismissed.

Against this order Misc. Appeal No. 141/34 was preferred by the judgment-debtor to the District Judge. At the time of the hearing of the appeal, a preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lay inasmuch as the suit in which the decree was passed was valued at less than Rs. 50 and the Munsiff had final jurisdiction under S. 153, Ben. Ten. Act. On that the learned District Judge treated the memorandum of appeal as an application in revision under the provisions of S. 153 and heard the matter as a civil motion. He held that the provision of S. 148-A, sub-s. (9), was a mandatory provision, that the co-sharer landlords, plaintiffs in suit No. 1628/32, were bound to claim rent due to their share by only becoming co-plaintiffs in one or the other of the rent suits No. 1608, or 1616. He held that the decree passed in suit No. 1628/32 was a nullity because it was against the clear statutory provisions contained in sub-s. (9) of S. 148-A. He further held that the said decree being a nullity the proceedings in execution of that decree were nullities and the sale in execution thereof was a nullity. In my judgment both the orders of the learned District Judge and of the learned Munsiff are wrong and must be set aside. The question of compliance or non-compliance with the provision of sub-s. (9) cannot be raised at this stage. After the decree had been passed in the rent suit No. 1628/32, the decree became final as between the parties. Even a suit to have a decree declared as a nullity would not lie. This is what I gather to be the principle laid down in 40 C W N 289 (1). For these reasons, I hold that the decision of the learned District Judge is erroneous. I do also hold that the order passed by the learned Munsiff is erroneous.

Apart from the dissentient note in one of the judgments of this Court, the course of decisions of this Court is that the deposit which is required to be made under the provisions of proviso (b) to sub-s. (3), S. 174, Ben. Ten. Act, has to be made not along with the application under S. 173 (3), but has to be made before that application is allowed, that is to say, the proper time for the Court to call for the deposit under that provision is after the Court has come to the conclusion that the sale ought to be set aside. Then the Court should make a conditional order requiring the applicant to put in the money required under the said provisions within certain time and on the money being put in, make the final order setting aside the sale, but in default to reject the application. I accordingly set aside the orders of both the Courts below, and in substitution of the order of the learned Munsiff, make the following order: that the learned Munsiff is to go into the merits of the controversies between the parties and if he is of opinion that the sale ought to be set aside he will then make an order requiring the deposit of the decretal amount to be made by the applicant within a certain time. If the applicant complies with the order the final order for setting aside the sale will be made. If the order is not complied with the final order will be to dismiss the application. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the sale ought not to be set aside, no such preliminary order is to be made. The result is that the rule is made absolute on these terms, and the case is sent back to the learned Munsiff for trial on the merits. There will be no order for costs of this Court.

Appeal No. 1296 of 1933, Decided on 5th February 1936, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Hughli, D/- 28th February 1933.

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (11 of 1859), S. 33—Suit for declaration by reversioner that sale did not affect his reversionary interest—Fraud alleged—Suit is not barred.

Section 33 does not bar a suit by a reversioner for a declaration to the effect that the revenue sale held under the Act did not affect his rights as reversioner in respect of the property sold, when such a suit is based on the allegation that the sale was a fraudulent transaction, and the reversioner will be entitled to the relief if he proves that fraud had been committed and the reversionary right residing in him had been adversely affected: 1930 Cal 621, Foll. [P 199 C 2]

Edgley, J.—Defendant 1 is the appellant in this case and the appeal arises with reference to a suit brought by Kali Das Ghosh, the original plaintiff, for setting aside a revenue sale and for a declaration to the effect that the sale in question did not affect adversely his rights as reversioner in respect of certain property. The plaintiff alleged that his sister-in-law Rajanibala Dasi, in order to defeat his reversionary rights, had defaulted in the payment of Government revenue in respect of Tauzi No. 305/1 of the Hughli Collectorate and that in consequence this property was put up to auction and purchased by her Gomasta

Ashutosh Sanyal who acted as her benamidar with reference to this matter. It was contended that the sale was fraudulent and collusive and was a benami transaction. The suit in the Court of first instance was contested by defendant 1 Ashutosh Sanyal, and his case was supported by defendant 2 Rajanibala Dasi. They maintained that the sale was a bona fide transaction. It was held by the first Court that the sale which took place on 25th March 1925 could not be set aside, but the plaintiff was granted a declaration to the effect that it was a collusive and benami sale and would not be binding on the reversioner upon the death of Rajanibala Dasi. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge accepted the findings of the Court of first instance and dismissed the appeal.

It has been contended before us by the learned Advocate for the appellant that, having regard to the provisions of S. 33, Act 11 of 1859, the declaration granted by the Court of first instance and affirmed by the lower appellate Court should not have been made inasmuch as such a declaration really has the effect of nullifying the revenue sale which was held on 25th March 1925. The learned Advocate also placed reliance upon an order passed by the Commissioner dated 8th June 1925 in which it was held that the plaintiff, who was the appellant in that case, had no locus standi in the matter of setting aside the revenue sale. With regard to this point however it must be remembered that the revenue sale dated 25th March 1925 has not actually been set aside although the plaintiff has obtained a declaration to the effect that the sale was benami and not binding on him in his capacity as reversioner. It is further urged by the learned Advocate for the appellant that no allegation to the effect that the sale was a fraudulent transaction was made until the plaint was amended as a result of an application which was filed on 13th July 1928. The relevant portions of the pleadings have, however, been placed before us and it seems to be clear that, when the case first went to trial the plaintiff's case was that the sale, to all intents and purposes, was a fraudulent, collusive and a benami transaction and adversely affected the plaintiff's reversionary rights. The law with regard to this matter has been clearly stated in the judgment of Mr.

Justice Costello, in 34 C W N 809 (1), the facts of that case being very similar to those connected with the case which is now before us. In Anantlal's case (1) Mr. Costello pointed out that:

It does not appear upon the authorities that a person who has a substantial interest which is liable to be affected by the sale is debarred from bringing a suit by anything which appears in S. 33, Act 11 of 1859.

He further held that when such a suit was based on a definite allegation of fraud that was of itself sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to relief provided that he proved that fraud had been committed and that the plaintiff's right residing in him had been adversely affected. Having regard to the state of the pleadings in the case out of which this appeal arises and the findings of both Courts, it is clear that the plaintiff had an interest in the property which was sold on 25th March 1925 and that this interest was adversely affected by the sale. It is also clear that he based his case on the allegation that the sale was a fraudulent, collusive and benami transaction. This being the case, we are of opinion that there is nothing in S. 33, Act 11 of 1859 which debars him from bringing the suit out of which this appeal arises. It is next contended by the learned Advocate for the appellant that in any case it has not been established that the sale was in fact fraudulent and collusive and it is argued that the findings of the lower appellate Court are insufficient to enable such an inference to be drawn. With regard to this point, it must be remembered that, having regard to the state of the pleadings, the plaintiff is clearly entitled to the declaration that he has obtained if it is clear that in the matter of the sale of 25th March 1925 Ashutosh Sanyal merely acted as the benamidar of Rajanibala Dasi. On this point there are clear concurrent findings of fact in both Courts to the effect that the purchase by Ashutosh Sanyal was of a benami character and these findings are based on inferences which, in our opinion, are correctly drawn from the circumstances of the case, for instance, it has been found that Rajanibala had a sufficient income to pay the comparatively small amount of revenue which was due in respect of the property sold.

1. Anantlal Sarkhol v. Saudamini Guha, 1930 Cal 621=129 I C 401=34 C W N 809.

It has also been found that she was on bad terms with the plaintiff and that the property had been purchased ostensibly by her Gomasta Ashutosh Sanyal on whom she could depend to reconvey it to her later on. There is also a finding with regard to the spurious nature of certain accounts filed by Ashutosh Sanyal. We are of opinion that the findings with regard to the character of the transaction are based on proper inferences from the facts and circumstances of the case and that the plaintiff is clearly entitled to the declaration which he has obtained. In this view of the case the decision of the lower appellate Court must be affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Rule No. 1175 of 1935, Decided on 27th January 1936, from order of Munsif, Second Court, Patiya, D/- 24th May 1935.

(a) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Ss. 83, 84 and 76—Mortgagee in possession—Tender or deposit refused—Suit for redemption or possession—Effect of refusal considered—Separate suit for mesne profits is barred.

Where a mortgagee in possession resists the right of the mortgagor to get release of the mortgaged property and to give up possession, even after valid tender made by the latter has been refused by the former or a deposit made by the latter under S. 83 has not been accepted by the former and the mortgagee refused to withdraw the same, the suit which the mortgagor has to institute is a suit for redemption, and the mortgagor must include in such a claim his claim for overpayments to the mortgagee or excess profits received by him; and if he does not include the said claim he would be debarred from claiming the same in a subsequent suit. The mortgagee does not become a trespasser from the moment of the tender or from the moment that he receives the notice of the deposit, and a suit for mesne profits after a suit for possession or redemption for a period anterior to the date of the institution of the suit for possession or redemption will not lie. After a tender or deposit mortgagee still continues as a mortgagee; the only effect is that interest ceases to run and that a heavier burden in the matter of accounts is thrown on the mortgagee: 25 Bom 115; 26 Bom 661; 31 Bom 527; 30 All 36; 34 Cal 223; 14 C W N 1001; 1925 Rang 13; 1926 Oudh 113 and 34 Cal 223, Ref.

Order.—This rule has been obtained by the defendant in a suit instituted in the Court of Small Causes at Patiya for recovery of mesne profits from November 1931 to November 1934. This suit was filed on 5th December 1934. The question involved in this Rule is whether this claim is maintainable in law. On 15th April 1917 Nobin Chandra Chowdhury and three other persons, who may be called the Chowdhurys, executed a mortgage for a sum of Rs. 100 in favour of Tarini Charan Dass (since deceased), the father of the petitioner. The mortgagee was given possession, the stipulation in the bond being that the usufruct of the property mortgaged would be taken in lieu of and in complete satisfaction of the claim for interest. Tarini accordingly went into possession and remained in possession of the mortgaged lands till November 1934. The opposite party, Sarada Charan Chowdhury, purchased in execution of money decree the interest of the Chowdhurys in the mortgaged land, and deposited in Court the mortgagee's dues on 12th December 1930 under the provisions of S. 83, T. P. Act. Notice of the deposit was served on Tarini Charan Das, the mortgagee, by the Court on 25th December 1930. Tarini did not withdraw the money nor did he deliver possession to the opposite party.

Thereafter the opposite party instituted a suit against Tarini Charan Chowdhury being No. 200 of 1932. In the suit he prayed for a declaration that by his aforesaid deposit the mortgage had stood redeemed, for recovery of possession of the mortgaged property and for a reconveyance from the mortgagee. The Chowdhurys did not appear but Tarini appeared and contested the suit. Besides challenging the title of the opposite party he pleaded that the plaintiff in the suit was not entitled to any of the reliefs claimed by him without paying him money due on another simple mortgage executed in his favour by the Chowdhurys for Rupees 2,500. The pleas taken by Tarini were overruled by the learned Munsif. The material part of the decree passed by the Munsif is as follows :

That it be declared that the plaintiff has the right to redeem and he do get khas possession ; that defendant 1 (Tarini) do execute within three months from this date a reconveyance in favour of the plaintiff.

Tarini preferred an appeal (No. 66 of 1934). One passage in the judgment pronounced in the said appeal is material and in my judgment the learned Small Cause Court has gone wrong by misjudging the effect of the said passage in the said judgment. The said passage is as follows :

I have been asked by the defendant-appellant to give him six months' time more. In view of my finding that the plaintiff is not liable to redeem the simple mortgage for Rs. 2,500 for this and other lands and defendant may be put to further trouble, he may be allowed to take the paddy grown on the land by him ; so I allow him time till Aughrayan 1341 B. S. (November 1934). The suit is decreed with costs. The mortgage is declared to be redeemed by the deposit and notice. Plaintiff do get khas possession of the mortgaged property by the end of Agrahayan 1341 B. S.

These observations were made by the Subordinate Judge in dealing with the question as to what relief the plaintiff was entitled to get. The mortgagee gave up possession by the end of Agrahayan 1341 to Sarada Charan Chowdhury, who has instituted the present suit against the heir of Tarini. In the plaint he states that he became entitled to mesne profits from the date of service of the notice of deposit under S. 83, T. P. Act, on Tarini till he got back possession and as his claim for mesne profits for about one year has been barred by limitation he is suing for mesne profits from November 1931. His suit has been decreed by the Small Cause Court Judge. The defendant complains of this decree and his ground is that the decree is not sustainable at all. The reasons given by the learned Small Cause Court Judge for overruling the aforesaid defence may be summarised thus : (i) O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C., is not a bar, taking Suit No. 200 of 1932 to be a suit for redemption, as a mortgagor had only the right to get possession of the lands from a usufructuary mortgage after a decree passed under O. 34, R. 7, and that the plaintiff's cause of action for mesne profits did not arise before the institution of the said suit but thereafter. (ii) that the possession of the mortgagee became wrongful from the date of the notice on him of the deposit made under S. 83, T. P. Act, and the plaintiff is accordingly entitled to get mesne profits from that date ; and (iii) that at the request of the mortgagee the Court gave him time and allowed him to remain on the land till Agrahayan 1341 B. S. and to reap the paddy grown by him, and that the order of the appellate Court (in appeal No. 66 of 1934) implying that all the profits till 1341 B. S. is to be taken by the mortgagee is "ultra vires and without jurisdiction" as that "Court could not override the clear provisions of law.". In my judgment all the reasons given by the learned Small Cause Court Judge are wrong and the Rule must be made absolute. Where a mortgagee resists the right of the mortgagor to get a release of the mortgaged property and give up possession, where he is in possession, the suit which the mortgagor has to institute is a suit for redemption.

It would still be a suit for redemption, if the tender made by the mortgagor has been refused or if he deposits the money under S. 83, T. P. Act, and the mortgagee has refused to withdraw the same, or if the mortgagee being in possession, the amount of the usufruct received by him has satisfied his dues or where by such receipts he had overpaid himself. If a suit for redemption is brought the accounts must be gone into in ordinary cases. If any money is found due to the mortgagee on such accounting a preliminary decree must be made directing the mortgagor to pay the same within a certain time, and then on the passing of the day of default, a final decree whether for redemption, foreclosure, or sale must be made, according as the money found due to the mortgagee is paid by the mortgagor or not. The date of default fixed in the preliminary decree can be extended by the Court. Where on an account being taken no money is found to the mortgagee or where the mortgagee has been overpaid or has overpaid himself from the usufruct, in the case where he was in possession, two decrees, namely the preliminary and the final decree, has not to be passed, but there would be one decree, a final one, in terms of O. 34, R. 9 of the Code. The intention of the legislature is that a suit for redemption must include the entire accounts between the parties in relation to the mortgage up to the date of default mentioned in the preliminary decree. Where no preliminary decree has to be passed the entire account up to the date of the final decree passed in the suit for redemption must be taken. The claim of the mortgagor for overpayments to the mortgagee or excess profits received by the mortgagee up to these dates mentioned above must be included in the suit for redemption, and if he does not include the said claim he would be debarred from claiming the same in a subsequent suit. This rule is deducible from a series of cases, namely 25 Bom 115 (1); 26 Bom 661 (2); 31 Bom 527 (3); 30 All 36 (4); 34 Cal 223 (5); 14 C W N 1001 (6); 2 Rang 382 (7) and other cases reviewed in the case of 91 I C 258 (8). The rule has been based in these decisions on one of two principles, namely (i) that the mortgagor might and ought to have included such a claim in his suit for redemption, and accordingly Expln. 4 to S. 2, Civil P. C., bars a subsequent suit for the same; (ii) that O. 2, R. 2 of the Code bars such a suit as the liability of the mortgagee to account for such payments or profits is a statutory liability attached to the mortgage contract.

These principles in my judgment also apply to the case where the mortgagor has sued the mortgagee even after a valid tender made by the former has been refused by the latter or a deposit made by the former under S. 83, T. P. Act, has not been accepted by the latter. In both these cases the relation of the mortgagor and mortgagee still subsists after the tender or deposit. The mortgagee does not become a trespasser from the moment of the tender, or from the moment that he receives the notice of the deposit, and the analogy of those classes of cases, where it has been held that a suit for mesne profits against a trespasser lies, even after a suit for possession, for a period anterior to the date of the institution of the suit for possession, does not apply : 34 Cal 223 (5). After the tender or deposit the mortgagee still continues as a mortgagee if he is in possession; he does not become a trespasser. The only effect is that interest ceases to run and that a heavier burden in the matter of accounts is thrown on the mortgagee : Ss. 84 and 76, Cl. (b), T. P. Act. For these reasons, I hold that the first and second reasons given by the learned Small Cause Court Judge are wrong.

The third reason given by the learned Judge also does not appeal to me. In the passage of the judgment pronounced by the learned Subordinate Judge in Appeal No. 66 of 1934 which I have quoted above, there is a clear direction that the mortgagee is to have the profits of the land up to Augrahyam 1341 B. S., without any question of his being made liable to account for the same in future. I am not convinced that therein the learned Subordinate Judge had violated any clear provision of law. He had jurisdiction to settle the rights of the parties in that suit and has settled it in the aforesaid manner. Even if he had gone wrong on a point of law, which I do not say he has, his decision on the point is final between the parties. It is now settled by a Full Bench of this Court and by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that an erroneous decision on a point of law is res judicata between the parties : 56 Cal 723 (9); 40 C W N 289 (10). For this reason, I make this Rule absolute and discharge the decree passed by the Court below. The result is that the plaintiff's suit is dismissed. The defendant must have his costs of the Court below and of this Court. Hearing fee assessed at one gold mohur.

Satish Chandra Paul Srichandan Mari Sultan—Defendant—Respondent.

Appeals Nos. 1721, 1722, 1917 and 1918 of 1932 and 450 and 905 of 1933, Decided on 16th January 1936, from appellate decrees of Dist. Judge, Midnapore D/- 26th April 1932.

Bengal Choukidari Act (6 of 1870)—Choukidari Chakran lands—Mokarari grants—Resumption of lands under Act 6 of 1870 and settling them with proprietor—Proprietor claiming fair and equitable rent—Pesh Khas being included in jama—Mokararidars given right to realize Pesh Khas—Proprietor can ask for fixing fair rent.

The plaintiff was the proprietor of estate to which the Choukidari Chakran lands appertain. The defendant was a Mokararidar in respect of these lands by virtue of some grants made by the predecessor in interest of the plaintiff. The lands were resumed and were settled by the Collector under Choukidari Act 6 of 1870 with the plaintiff. The plaintiff after taking settlement from the Collector made new settlement of these lands with certain persons and instituted suits for settlement of fair and equitable rent in respect of these lands. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that in the Mokarari grants in respect of the lands, the Pesh Khas of Choukidari Chakran lands was taken into consideration in fixing the jama of the mokarari and consequently the Zamindar is not entitled to get any additional rent for the Chakran lands:

Held: that the mere fact that Pesh Khas which was being paid by the Choukidars to the Zamindars, was included in the jama and the Mokararidar was given the right to realise it from the Choukidars, would not go to indicate that the Zamindar at the time of the grants gave up his right to get fair rent for these lands arising out of events which were not contemplated then. The grants do not take away the right of Zamindar to get fair and equitable rent for the disputed lands after they have been resumed: 1918 P C 85 and 1925 P C 226, Ref. [P 204 C 2]

Narendra Krishna Basu, Nalin Chandra Pal and Amarendra Narayan Bagchi—for Appellants.

Sarat Chandra Bose and Bijoy Kumar Bhattacharjee—for Respondent.

Nasim Ali, J.—These six appeals arise out of three suits: Suits Nos. 66 and 67 of 1929 and Suit No. 7 of 1931 of the First Court of the Subordinate Judge of Midnapore. They were instituted for assessment of fair and equitable rent in respect of some lands which appertained to Touzi No. 1991 of the Midnapore Collectorate. Suits Nos. 66 and 67 were heard together. The trial Judge held that the plaintiff was entitled to fair and equitable rent for the lands in question and fixed as fair rent Rs. 69-4-3 pies for the lands of Suit No. 66 and Rs. 74-3-10 pies for those of Suit No. 67. The defendants appealed to the lower appellate Court and the learned District Judge has reduced the rent to Rs. 39-14-2 pies in Suit No. 66 and Rs. 40-5-4 pies in Suit No. 67. In Suit No. 7 of 1931 the trial Judge held that the plaintiff was entitled to fair and equitable rent settled and fixed Rs. 38-14-1 1/2 pies as fair rent. The plaintiff appealed to the lower appellate Court. The defendants also filed cross-objections. The cross-objections were dismissed, but the appeal was allowed in part and the fair rent was assessed at Rs. 53-11-3 pies. Hence these second appeals. The plaintiff is the appellant in S. A. Nos. 1721 and 1722 of 1932 and 450 of 1933. The defendant has filed Second Appeals Nos. 1917 and 1918 of 1932 and 905 of 1933.

The point for determination in these appeals is whether the plaintiff is entitled to have fair and equitable rent assessed for the lands in suit and, if so, for what amount. The facts which are relevant for the purposes of the present appeals are these: the disputed lands are Choukidari Chakran lands. The plaintiff is the proprietor of estate to which the lands appertain. The defendant is a Mokararidar in respect of these lands by virtue of some grants made by the predecessor in interest of the plaintiff in favour of his predecessor in interest. The lands were resumed and were settled by the Collector under the Choukidari Act (Act 6 of 1870) with the plaintiff and his co-sharers whose share has ultimately vested in the plaintiff. The plaintiff after taking settlement from the Collector made new settlement of these lands with certain persons. That tenant, defendant's predecessor in interest instituted certain suits against the proprietor for recovery of khas possession of these lands on the ground that they were Choukidari Chakran lands. In those suits khas possession was disallowed but the mokararidar right to recover rent from the tenants settled by the proprietor was declared. The present suits were thereupon instituted by the proprietor

Four points were raised in support of the appeals by the Mokraridar: (1) that the disputed lands were in fact not Choukidari Chakran lands and were never resumed; (2) that even if there was any resumption it was not done under the Choukidari Act (Act 6 of 1870); (3) that the plaintiff acquired no title whatsoever on the basis of settlement from the Collector as the disputed lands were not included in the settlement; (4) that assuming that there had been resumption of the disputed land under the Choukidari Act and plaintiff acquired valid title to these lands by settlement from the Collector, the terms of the Mokararigrant precluded plaintiff from claiming any rent in addition to what was fixed by the terms of the grant. There is no substance in the first two points. These questions were not put into issue and discussed in the Courts below. The learned Judge has rightly pointed out that the Mokararidar's case throughout had been that the resumption of the suit lands by the Collector was under the Choukidari Act and in the previous litigation the Mokararidar succeeded on that basis. As regards the third point, much reliance was placed by the learned Advocate upon certain judgments in the previous suits. It is true that in the previous litigation plaintiff failed to prove that the settlement from the Collector covered the disputed lands. But it appears that the decision of the Court in the previous litigation was not based on this finding and the finding on this point was not necessary for the purposes of that litigation. The decision in the previous litigation on the question whether the settlement by the Collector included the disputed lands or not cannot, therefore, operate as res-judicata in the present litigation. In this case, the trial Judge has come to the conclusion that the disputed lands were included in the settlement made by the Collector under the Choukidari Act. On appeal to the lower appellate Court, this finding does not appear to have been challenged. Under these circumstances, I am unable to give effect to this contention. I now come to the fourth point. In 45 I A 162 (1), Lord Buckmaster observed as follows :

1. Ranjit Singh v. Babadur Singh, 1918 P C 85 =48 I C 262=45 I A 162=46 Cal 173 (P C).

It does not follow that because the rights originally arose by virtue of a grant declared to be a contract within the meaning of S. 51 (of the Choukidari Act VI of 1870) they are therefore rights, contractual in the sense that the contract by its terms creates and regulates the personal obligations and duties of the grantor in the circumstances that have arisen. At the time when the patni grants were made the resumption of the Choukidari Chakran lands was not even contemplated, and the grant necessarily contains no reference whatever to the circumstances that would arise and the relationships that would exist in the event of the Government resuming possession. Upon resumption of such possession the rights of the Patnidar were those conferred on him by the estate and interest created by the putni leases, and it was these rights that were kept alive by S. 51 of Act VI of 1870 of the Bengal Council.

Again in 53 Cal 6 (2), it was laid down that when Choukidari Chakran lands included in a putni settlement have been resumed and transferred to the zamindar under Bengal Act VI of 1870, he is entitled to the payment of a fair and equitable rent in respect thereof. It is contended on behalf of the tenant that in the Mokarari grants in respect of the lands of Suit Nos. 66 and 67, the Pesh Khash of the Choukidari Chakran lands was taken into consideration in fixing the jama of the Mokarari inams, and consequently the zamindar is not entitled to get any additional rent for the Chakran lands. In these two cases the grants were made before the Choukidari Act. The parties to the contract could not possibly have contemplated the resumption of these lands under the Choukidari Act which was not then even passed. The mere fact that Pesh Khash which was being paid by the Choukidars to the zamindars, was included in the jama and the Mokaridar was given the right to realise it from the Choukidars, would not go to indicate that the zamindar at the time of the grants gave up his right to get fair rent for these lands arising out of events which was not contemplated then. So far as the grant in Suit No. 7 of 1931 is concerned, Pesh Khash was admittedly not taken into consideration in settling the rent of the grant. The grants in all these cases, in my opinion, do not take away the right of the zamindar to get fair and equitable rent for the disputed lands after they have been resumed and the zamindar has been made liable to pay additional revenue for the same. I am, therefore, unable to accept this contention of the learned Advocate. As regards the appeals by the landlord plaintiff, the only point raised by the learned Advocate is that the learned Judge in settling fair and equitable rent has not correctly applied the principle applicable in such cases. It was contended that the learned Judge has wholly overlooked the principle that the assets of these lands should be fairly and equitably distributed between the landlord and the tenant. There may be some room for a criticism like this. But it appears to us that the landlord has got about 30 per cent. of the assets in suit No. 66, about 40 per cent. in suit No. 67 of 1929 and about 48 per cent. in Suit No. 7 of 1931. Under these circumstances, we are not prepared to interfere with the amount of rent settled by the learned Judge. The result therefore is that all the appeals are dismissed. The parties will bear their own costs in all these appeals.

Decided on 10th January 1936.

(a) Legal Practitioners Act (1879), S. 6(a)—Meaning of word 'proper' and "to be" in S. 6(a)—Pleader has to do administrative work in connection with his case and to appear as advocate—Court has power to control activities of pleader.

The word 'proper' in S. 6 (a) implies that apart from educational and other qualifications that may be insisted on, there may be other conditions laid down in order to entitle a person to be admitted as a Pleader; and the expression "to be" denotes that his continuance as a Pleader may be made dependent on such conditions. A Pleader in conducting the litigation for which his services are requisitioned, has to do some administrative work arising out of the litigation in the offices of the Court and appears as advocate in the Court as well; in other words, he combines in his own person the two duties which are performed in England by Attorneys and Barristers. And it is only in the fitness of things that the Court should be in a position to control his activities in such a way as would ensure the proper discharge of his duties as Pleader: 15 Cal 638, Ref.

(b) Legal Practitioner — Meaning of any other cause in S. 13(f), Legal Practitioners

Act—Cases of moral turpitude may come within S. 13(f)—Rules restricting pleader from engaging in trade, business, etc., are dictated by public policy and are in force in many provinces—New R. 951 of Calcutta High Court—Pleaders can engage in trade, business, etc., unless such occupation is derogatory and is likely to interfere with his professional duties—Making of such rules is within competence of High Court.

Cases of moral turpitude unconnected with the discharge by a legal practitioner of his professional duty may come within the expression 'any other reasonable cause;' yet, in the absence of definite rules to that effect, engagement in trade or business or other occupation, however derogatory to the dignity of the profession or detrimental to the due discharge of the duties of a legal practitioner, would hardly come within the expression. But rules restricting the liberties of pleaders in these respects are dictated by public policy and are, in one form or another, in force in other provinces as well. The new R. 951, Calcutta High Court, was framed with the object of softening the rigour of such rules as were in existence before and it professes not to preclude Pleaders and Mukhtars while practising as such from holding any appointment, or engaging themselves in any occupation, trade or business unless such appointment occupation, trade or business should appear to be derogatory to a practising member of the legal profession or is likely to interfere with the due discharge of his professional duties. The provision in the rule as regards previous notice to the Court is a provision evidently made for the benefit of the practitioner himself, so that he may not be in a state of uncertainty as to what the consequences of his proposed action may be. The rule was certainly within the competence of the High Court to make: 1914 Mad 512 (F B); 29 Cal 890 and 1922 P C 351, Ref. [P 207 C 2, P 208 C 1]

(c) Legal Practitioners Act (1879), S. 13 (f)—New R. 953 of Calcutta High Court—Rule imposing fine in addition to suspension or dismissal of pleader—Fine cannot be imposed by judicial authority—Provisions of fine inconsistent with Act and Rule is ultra vires.

The fine prescribed by R. 953 cannot be realised as a fine imposed by the Court in a judicial proceeding. By that rule it was apparently intended that the fine would be imposed by the Court acting administratively, and further that it should provide an alternative to the more rigorous penalty of suspension or dismissal. There is however no process by which the fine can be realised, except as a voluntary payment. But an alternative to suspension and dismissal by way of penalty is not provided for in the Legal Practitioners Act and would not be consistent with its provisions. In fact R. 953 as it stands speaks of the fine as a liability in addition to the liability to suspension or dismissal. Both liabilities would have to be enforced by the same authority, viz., by the Court in a judicial proceeding. Since the fine cannot be imposed as a judicial fine the provision relating to it is ultra vires.

Mukerji, Ag. C. J.—Babu Ramesh Chandra Sen Gupta, a Pleader practising at Patuakhali in the District of Bakarganj, was on 22nd September 1929 elected a Director of the Patuakhali Loan Office Limited, a Company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, and has been acting as such Director from the date of his election. On 3rd February 1935 he was also appointed Assistant Secretary of the said Company and in that capacity he receives an allowance of Rs. 25 per month. Since 1929 he has been a member of the Committee of Management of the Patuakhali Urban Co-operative Bank Ltd., and also its Secretary; and in April 1935 he has, in addition, been appointed its Insurance Director; but as regards any of these appointments no question arises now. It is his connection with the Patuakhali Loan Office Limited as a Director, and also as its Assistant Secretary, that has given rise to the present matter. The appointments in the Loan Office aforesaid having come to the notice of this Court, the following letter was eventually addressed by the Registrar of the Appellate Side of this Court to the District Judge of Bakarganj on 20th August 1935:

Sir,

With reference to the correspondence ending with your Letter No. 3694-c, dated 6th August 1935, Babu Ramesh Chandra Sen Gupta, Pleader, Patuakhali, has been acting as a Director of the Patuakhali Loan Office Ltd., since 22nd September 1929, and as Assistant Secretary of the said concern since 3rd February 1935, I am directed to say that it appears that he has infringed the old R. 27, Chap. 11, (revised), Vol. 1 of the Court's General Rules and Circular Orders, Civil, in not bringing duly to the notice of the Court the fact of his acceptance of the first appointment, and has also infringed the new R. 27, ibid in not informing the Court of his intention to accept the second appointment before he accepted it. I am, therefore, to request that you will be so good as to call upon him to show cause why he should not be dealt with under the new R. 29, ibid read with the note thereto, and a fine imposed on him thereunder as a condition precedent to his being allowed to practise as a pleader.

Pursuant to a notice issued on him as required by the letter aforesaid the Pleader had appeared in this Court and has shown cause. As the letter speaks of old and new rules, it is necessary to see what they are. In 1884 certain rules were enacted and they were since then embodied in the Court's General Rules and Circular Orders, Vol. 1, Ch. 11, where they appeared as the following:

31. Any person who shall hold any appointment under Government or shall carry on any trade or other business, at the time of his application for admission as a Pleader or Muktear, shall state the fact in his application for admission; and the High Court may refuse to admit such person, or may pass such orders thereon as it thinks proper.

32. Any person who, having been admitted as a pleader or Muktear, shall accept any appointment under Government, or shall enter into any trade or other business, shall give notice thereof to the High Court who may thereupon suspend such Pleader or Muktear from practice or pass such orders as the said Court may think fit.

34. Any wilful violation of any of the above Rules shall subject a Pleader or Muktear to suspension or dismissal.

By February 1934 the Rules of Ch. 11 had undergone some alterations and additions; but for our present purposes, it would be sufficient to state that Rr. 31, 32 and 34 appeared as Rr. 26, 27 and 29 respectively. The Rules as they stood then are the old rules referred to in the latter. In July 1934 the Rules were again revised and the form they then took will appear from the following Rr. 950, 951 and 953 as they have been published in the New Edition of the Courts General Rules and Circular Orders, Civil, and which correspond respectively to Rr. 26, 27 and 29. These revised rules are the new rules referred to in the letter. They run as follows:

950. Any person who shall hold any appointment or be engaged in any occupation, trade or business, at the time of his application for admission as a Pleader or Muktear, shall state the fact in his application for admission; and the High Court may refuse to admit such person or may pass such other orders on it as it thinks proper. 951. Pleaders and Muktears shall not, while practising as such, be debarred thereby from holding any appointment or engaging themselves in any occupation trade or business, but a person who having been admitted as a pleader or Muktear intends to accept an engagement or engage himself in an occupation, trade or business, shall, prior to accepting such appointment or so engaging himself, by letter addressed to the Registrar, inform the High Court through the District Judge or the Chief Judge, Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, as the case may be, of his intention and shall state whether or not he prays for leave to suspend practice as a Pleader or Muktear, and the High Court may either grant such leave or may, if such appointment, occupation, trade or business shall appear to be derogatory to a practising member of the legal profession or likely to interfere with the discharge of his professional duties as a Pleader or Muktear require him to suspend practice while holding such appointment or so engaged, or may make such other order or orders as may seem fit.

Note.—The intimation provided for by this rule shall be given by Muktears if any, practising in the Court of the Presidency Magistrate through the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta.

953. Any wilful violation of Rr. 950 and 951 shall render the Pleader or Mukhtear concerned liable to a fine which shall not in any case be less than Rs. 50 and may also render him liable, in addition, to suspension or dismissal.

Note.—This Rule shall also apply to such infringements of Rr. 950 and 951 as they stood prior to the publication of these Rules in the local Official Gazette, as may have been or may thereafter be brought to the notice of the Court.

Put quite shortly, the charge against the pleader is that he has infringed old R. 27 by not bringing to the notice of the Court the fact of his acceptance of office as Director since 22nd September 1929, and that he had also infringed new R. 27 by not informing the Court of his intention to accept the office of Assistant Secretary before he accepted it on 3rd February 1935. The first contention urged on behalf of the pleader is that R. 951=new R. 27 of July 1934 and its predecessors, namely R. 32 of 1884 as well as old R. 27 of February 1934 are all ultra vires. The argument in this connexion is that under S. 6, Legal Practitioners Act (18 of 1879) the High Court is competent to frame rules relating to the qualifications, admission and certificates of Pleaders Cl. (a), the fee to be paid for their examination and admission Cl. (c), and their suspension and dismissal Cl. (d): that after a pleader has been admitted the renewal of his certificate is governed by S. 7 of the Act; and that while holding a certificate his suspension or dismissal is regulated by Ss. 12 and 13 of the Act and in no other manner. In other words, it is argued that though the High Court can lay down tests or requirements to be fulfilled by a person to entitle him to be admitted as a pleader, yet once these tests or requirements are fulfilled there can be no rules framed by the High Court suspending or dismissing him from practice while the certificate issued to him is in force, but the question of renewal of his certificate and the question whether he should be dismissed or suspended are questions which have to be dealt with under Ss. 12 and 13 of the Act and that no rules can be framed by the High Court of the nature of the Rules in question. It has been complained that the Rules, such as they are, lay down a restriction which is wholly unwarranted and contemplate an enquiry of an inquisitorial character which is to be deprecated. The contention in our opinion is not well founded. In the first place, it overlooks the words 'proper' and 'to be' appearing in Cl. (a), S. 6. The former word implies that apart from educational and other qualifications that may be insisted on, there may be other conditions laid down in order to entitle a person to be admitted as a pleader; and the latter expression denotes that his continuance as a pleader may be made dependent on such conditions. A Pleader in conducting the litigation for which his services are requisitioned, has to do some administrative work arising out of the litigation in the offices of the Court and appears as advocate in the Court as well; in other words, he combines in his own person the two duties which are performed in England by Attorneys and Barristers: 15 Cal 638 (1). And it is only in the fitness of things that the Court should be in a position to control his activities in such a way as would ensure the proper discharge of his duties as Pleader. Nextly, to give effect to the contention would land us in this absurdity, that even if a person fulfils all the requirements on the day that he is admitted, he may make himself thoroughly ineligible the next day and will continue with impunity to practise as a Pleader until the question of renewal of his certificate arises, which will ordinarily arise only at the expiry of each year and not oftener.

Moreover though Cl. (f), S. 13 of the Act need not be read ejusdem generis with the other clauses of the section: 29 Cal 890 (2), 49 Cal 845 (3) and cases of moral turpitude unconnected with the discharge by a legal practitioner of his professional duty may come within the expression 'any other reasonable cause,' yet in the absence of definite rules to that effect, engagement in trade or business or other occupation, however derogatory to the dignity of the profession or detrimental

Rules restricting the liberties of Pleaders in this respect are dictated by public policy and are in one form or another, in force in some of the other provinces as well. As far as I have been able to ascertain there are such rules in Madras, Patna, N. W. Provinces, Punjab and the N. W. Frontier Provinces. And in the Madras Full Bench decision in 37 Mad 238 (4) at pp. 257-258 some of the rules there in force are referred to. The new R. 951 was framed with the object of softening the rigour of such rules as were in existence before, and it professes not to preclude Pleaders and Mukhtears while practising as such from holding any appointment or engaging themselves in any occupation, trade or business, unless such appointment, occupation, trade or business should appear to be derogatory to a practising member of the legal profession or is likely to interfere with the due discharge of his professional duties. The provision in the rule as regards previous notice to the Court is a provision evidently made for the benefit of the practitioner himself, so that he may not be in a state of uncertainty as to what the consequences of his proposed action may be. I am clearly of opinion that the rule was entirely within the competence of the High Court to make. It has been contended next that R. 953, corresponding to old and new R. 29, in so far as it provides a penalty in the shape of a fine is ultra vires. It is obvious that this provision was also intended to operate for the benefit of the delinquent practitioner who under Rr. 32 and 34 of 1884, was liable to suspension or dismissal. Though that is so, yet what we have to consider is whether such a provision is permissible. S. 6 of the Act enables the High Court to make rules consistent with the Act as to the suspension and dismissal of the Pleader [Cl. (d),] and say nothing about imposing a penalty in the shape of a fine. 'Fine' it is really not, though the word itself is used in the rule. It is, as stated in the notice, the imposition of a condition precedent, namely the payment of a sum of money, the fulfilment of which is demanded by the rule to enable the Pleader to resume his practice. It is also to be noted that there is no provision in the Act or anywhere else under which the amount may be realised, unless it is voluntarily paid by the Pleader himself. Even then, the question is whether it is competent to the High Court to impose a condition of this description by framing a rule under its powers under S. 6 of the Act. It has been argued on behalf of the Government that when S. 6 gives the High Court power to "make rules consistent with the Act as to the following matters (namely) "the suspension and dismissal" etc. it authorises the High Court to make a rule which has only this effect: that unless a certain condition namely as to the payment is complied with, the pleader remains suspended. This is a very ingenious argument and is perhaps the only way in which the provision can be sought to be justified. But the difficulty in accepting this argument is, in my opinion, overwhelming.

In the first place, call it by whatever name, it is to all intents and purposes a penalty for a breach of a rule and nothing else, and the intention is that on this payment the breach is to be condoned; and regarded in that light, it means to create an offence in the shape of a misconduct and provides for a penalty, which are unknown to the Act itself. Next, regarded as a condition, it is in my opinion, an unjustifiable and unreasonable one; because although the holding of an appointment or the engaging in an occupation, trade or business may be derogatory to the dignity of the profession or detrimental to the due discharge of professional duties and so may be justly punished with suspension or dismissal, it is impossible to think of mere omission to give previous notice of the fact that an employment would be accepted or an occupation, trade or business would be engaged in, however unexceptionable they may be in their character, would attract the operation of such a condition. Thirdly the enforcement of the rule would, in my opinion be impossible, in view of the provisions of the Act. I am of opinion that as regards a Pleader who holds a license to practise as such, no order of suspension or dismissal can be made except by the Court itself and except as a result of a judicial proceeding contemplated and provided for by the Act itself.

If it is a case of first enrolment or of renewal of certificate, the position is different, the administrative machinery of the Court being competent to deal with it in respect of any such cases as covered by the Act or the Rules. Possibly also in cases where the pleader himself applies for suspension the matter need not come before the Court as a judicial matter. But in cases of the present description, I do not see how an order of suspension or dismissal can be made otherwise than under Cl. (f), S. 13 of the Act, and unless it be held that non-compliance with Rules framed by the Court in this respect is a misconduct and is a reasonable cause within the meaning of that clause. As observed by Hill, J., in the Full Bench decision of this Court in 29 Cal 890 (2), there is no other machinery provided for the dismissal and suspension of pleaders and mukhtears than that which is prescribed by the Act. And it is perfectly clear that no imposition of a condition of the present nature, and nothing else than suspension or dismissal would be permissible under the Act itself. It follows, therefore, that such action as has to be taken cannot be taken as an administrative measure. In my judgment, therefore, for the breaches specified in the notice issued on the pleader, the only proceedings that may be taken against him are proceedings under S. 13, Cl. (f) of the Act. The view I take receives support from the decision of the Full Bench in 37 Mad 238 (4), in which it was held that a pleader who engages himself in a trade but does not intimate the same to the Court as required by a Rule framed by the Madras High Court is guilty of misconduct within the meaning of S. 13 of the Act.

We therefore come to the question of the merits of the case in order to have to consider whether any such proceedings should be taken. On the notice as issued such proceedings obviously cannot be taken. So far as the facts are concerned, it seems to me that old R. 27 was violated because the pleader did not give the required notice on accepting office as Director to the Patuakhali Loan Office Limited on 22nd September 1929. The word "business" is quite a comprehensive word and it should be noted that the Rule does not speak of a business carried on for the benefit of the pleader himself. It is also clear, to my mind, that new R. 27 was violated because no previous intimation to the Court was given by him as regards his appointment as Assistant Secretary to the said Loan Office which he took up on 3rd February 1935. So far as the former appointment is concerned, however, it does appear that there was a genuine doubt in the mind of the pleader as to whether by being a Director, he had entered into a business within the meaning of the Rule. And as regards the second appointment, it is clear upon the papers before us that this new Rule was not sufficiently known to the public at the relevant date and that the pleader, on coming to know of it, communicated with the Court as early as possible. I am unable to hold, therefore, that there was any such wilful violation of the Rules as would merit action under the Act. I am also of opinion that the pleader's connexion with the Loan Office, such as it is, is neither derogatory to the dignity of a practising lawyer nor likely to interfere with his duties as such to any appreciable extent, and so no further action need be taken in respect of the matter. The notice issued on the pleader is discharged.

Lort-Williams, J.—I agree.

S. K. Ghose, J.—I am in agreement with the judgment of Mukherji, J., and I may add a few words with regard to the question whether R. 953 corresponding to the old and new R. 29, in so far as it prescribes a fine, is ultra vires. I have no doubt that the High Court has the power to make a Rule requiring a person, who has been admitted as a pleader or mukhtear, to notify the High Court of his intention to accept an engagement or engage himself in an occupation, trade, or business. Such a Rule is perfectly consistent with the Legal Practitioners' Act and comes under Cl. (a), S. 6. The argument, that once a certificate has been issued under S. 7 the Court cannot do anything until the expiration of the period of the certificate does not impress me at all. It is for the Court to Judge whether a person is a "proper person to be" a pleader, &c., and this refers not merely to the time of admission, but also to the period of continuance as pleader i. e. the period of the certificate; otherwise "suspension and dismissal" would be meaningless. This is consistent with the decision of the Full Bench in 29 Cal 890 (2), and so far as I know, it is in accordance with the rules made by other High Courts in India. If then the Court has the power to make a rule requiring a person, who has already been admitted as pleader, to give notice of his intention to engage in some other occupation, the Court surely has the power to enforce such a rule by providing a penalty. Otherwise a person wilfully omitting to give notice would be in no worse position than one giving notice. S. 13 provides for suspension and dismissal, and consistently therewith the Court may make rules under Cl. (d), S. 6. Such rules would have the force of law and be enforced in a judicial proceeding. Omission to give notice may itself make the pleader liable under S. 13, as pointed out by Sankaran Nair, J., in 37 Mad 238 (4) at p. 265.

It is here that the provision as to fine in the new R. 953 has troubled me. Apart from the fines prescribed by way of penalties under Chap. 7, S. 16 of the Act specifically empowers the Court to impose a fine for infringement of rules, and such fine may be recovered as if it had been imposed in the exercise of the High Court's ordinary original criminal jurisdiction. This section relates only to mukhtears on the appellate side of the High Court. But in the case of pleaders, the provision as to fine is absent. No doubt under the Legal Practitioners' Act the Court acts in many matters in an administrative or disciplinary capacity as was pointed out by Dawson Miller, C. J., in 1 Pat 590 (5). In the connected case, 1 Pat 104 (6) at p. 138, it was pointed out that proceedings relating to the admission of pleaders are administrative and not judicial. In the rules on the appellate side of this Court, vide R. 6 (d), the Judge in the English Department is empowered to pass orders on applications and routine, references connected with the admission and enrolment of pleaders and mukhtears. But the imposition of a fine cannot be administrative and the fine prescribed by R. 953 cannot be realised as a fine imposed by the Court in a judicial proceeding. By that rule it was apparently intended that the fine would be imposed by the Court acting administratively, and further that it should provide an alternative to the more rigorous penalty of suspension or dismissal. There is however no process by which the fine can be realised, except as a voluntary payment. The Registrar in his letter dated 20th August 1933 speaks of it as a condition precedent to the pleader being allowed to practise. But it seems to me that an alternative to suspension and dismissal by way of penalty is not provided for in the Act and would not be consistent with its provisions. In fact R. 953, as it stands, speaks of the fine as a liability in addition to the liability to suspension or dismissal. Both liabilities would have to be enforced by the same authority, viz. by the Court in a judicial proceeding. Since the fine cannot be imposed as a judicial fine it seems to me that the provision relating to it is ultra vires.

Prosanna Krishna Saba and obtained a decree against them on 13th February 1935. In execution of the decree certain properties belonging to Prosanna Kumar have been sold. The petitioner and opposite parties 6 and 7 applied for rateable distribution of the same proceeds under S. 73, Civil P. C. The learned Subordinate Judge has rejected these applications. This rule was thereupon obtained by the petitioner. Opposite party 1 opposed this rule, while opposite parties 6 and 7 supported the rule. The learned Subordinate Judge has rejected the application under S. 73 on the ground that the judgment-debtors in the decree obtained by opposite party 1 are not the same as in the decree obtained by the petitioner and opposite parties 6 and 7.

Now judgment-debtor means any person against whom a decree has been passed: S. 2, Cl. 10, Civil P. C. The word "person" has not been defined in the Code. The definition of "person" in the General Clauses Act (Act 10 of 1897) throws no light on the present question. Person in law does not simply mean a human being. There may be persons in law who are not human beings, e. g., a Joint Stock Company or a Municipal Corporation. Again a human being may have a double personality. He may be one man but two persons in the eyes of the law. In order to give a man double personality, he must possess two different capacities so that in one capacity he may have legal relations with himself in his other capacity (Salmond's Jurisprudence, p. 278, Edn. 5). It is argued on behalf of opposite party 1 that if one decree is obtained against a man as heir of a deceased person and another decree against him in his personal capacity, the two decrees are not against the same judgment-debtors within the meaning of S. 73, Civil P. C. This contention is based on a ruling of the Allahabad High Court in 26 All 28 (1), in which it was held that a decree obtained against a man as heir of a deceased person is different from a decree against him in his personal capacity, and the two decrees are not against the same judgment-debtor within the meaning of S. 295 of the Code of 1882. This ruling was followed in

1. Bholanath v. Maqbul-un-nissa, (1903) 26 All 28=1903 A W N 184.

24 I C 476 (2), 1919 Oudh 326 (3) and 1920 Mad 403 (4).

The principle underlying the decision of the Allahabad High Court is that the assets of a deceased person are liable in the first place to satisfy the debts of the deceased and, subject thereto, belong to the heir inasmuch as the debts constitute a general charge upon the assets although such a general charge would not defeat a bona fide purchaser or mortgagee from the heir. It was observed in that case that it would be inequitable to make one man's property pay the debt of another. It appears therefore that the nature of the liability under the decree was taken as one of the essential conditions for the application of S. 295 of the old Code. In the Code of 1908 for the words "decrees for money" "the decrees for the payment of money passed" have been substituted. Now the provisions of S. 73 of the Code which have replaced S. 295 bearing on the question before me are as follows:

Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets after deducting the costs of realization shall be distributed among all such persons.

In 42 Cal 1 (5) this Court observed :

It is essential for the application of the section that the decree should have been passed against the same judgment-debtor. This has been made clear beyond possibility of dispute by the introduction of the word "passed" which did not find a place in S. 295 of the Code of 1882.

In 25 Bom 494 (6), Jenkins, C. J., observed:

It is useless to speculate as to any other test than that which the section (295 of the Code of 1882) itself provides and that test is stated in the plainest terms. So far as the present case goes, it is enough to say that the money decrees must be against the same judgment-debtor. Here however one decree is against Bhati Babaji Jangam and the other is against his son Kashinath. It is true that the second decree is expressed to be against Bhau Babaji Jangam, deceased by his son Kashinath, but this incorrect mode of expression can make no difference. It is due to the erroneous practice which prevails in the mofussil Courts of the Presidency according to which a dead man is expressed to be a party to a suit by his heir. . . . A dead man cannot be a party to a suit. It cannot too in this case make any difference that the decree is expressed further to be "against the deceased's estate:" that does not make Bhau, a judgment-debtor in respect of a decree in a suit commenced after his death. The interpretation of judgment-debtor in S. 2 and the phraseology of S. 234 (S. 50 of the Code of 1908) of the Civil Procedure Code leave no doubt on the point.

In the same case Chandavarkar, J., has observed that "S. 295 does not make the nature of liability under the decrees contemplated by it one of the essential conditions for the application of the section." In 33 Mad 465 (7) it was laid down that the decree against the legal representatives of a deceased person is not against the estate of the deceased but the legal representatives are judgment-debtors within the meaning of S. 295. In 1930 Cal 454 (8), Rankin, C. J., followed these rulings. The decree obtained by opposite party 1, the judgment-debtors, are described as follows: on the death of Prosonna Kumar Saha his sons and heirs, Surendra Narayan Saha, Upendra Narayan Saha, Jatindra Narayan Saha and Narendra Narayan Saha. In the other decree the same men are mentioned without the words "on the death of Prosonna Kumar Saha, his sons and heirs." All the decrees in this case are against the same man. The judgment-debtors in the decree obtained by opposite party 1 can be said to be different from those in other decrees only on the principle that Prosonna Kumar Saha or his estate is judgment-debtor in the decree of opposite party 1. In view of the principle laid down in 25 Bom. 494 (6), 33 Mad 465 (7) and 1930 Cal 454 (8), I am not prepared to hold that the judgment-debtors in the decree of opposite party 1 are different from those in the decrees obtained by the petitioner and opposite parties 6 and 7. They are the same judgment-debtors within the meaning of S. 73 of the Code. The rule is therefore made absolute with costs to be paid to the petitioner by opposite party 1. The order of the learned Subordinate Judge rejecting the applications of the petitioner and opposite parties 6 and 7 are set aside. The learned Subordinate Judge is directed to distribute the assets rateably amongst the petitioner and opposite parties 4, 6 and 7 according to law. The hearing-fee is assessed at 3 gold mohurs.

Order.—Two applications have been made by the Official Assignee to set aside a series of transactions by which the insolvents Manindra Chandra Seal and Girish Chandra Seal have parted with property, as the Official Assignee contends, in defraud of their creditors. The questions for determination in each application are similar and it has been agreed that this judgment shall control the rights of the parties in both cases. The insolvents Manindra and Girish are two of the sons of Durgadas Seal who died in September 1925 leaving seven sons. By his will dated 28th April 1924, Durgadas appointed his sons Ashutosh and Umesh as his executors. The only other son who is remotely concerned with these transactions is named Jadab. Durgadas died on 19th September 1925 having made a will dated 28th April 1924 under which each of the insolvents Manindra and Girish became entitled to a one-eighth share in the rest and residue of his father's estate. In order to appreciate the extent of their interest in that estate it is necessary to refer shortly to the earlier history of the family. In 1866 Madhub Chandra Seal died after dedicating by will his property in Madan Dutt Lane. In 1884 Madhub's nephew Kalidas dedicated properties numbered 100 to 105, Bowbazar Street, as an addition to the earlier bequest but confined the shebaitship of the endowment to his direct descendants. Litigation ensued between the rival branches of the family and it is contended that in the result the Bowbazar properties have been declared to be secular and each of the insolvents is entitled to a 1/16th share therein. The insolvent's father Durgadas was a son of Kalidas. The interests to which the insolvents become entitled under their father's will fall into three categories:

- (1) Jewellery.
- (2) A share in half the residue.
- (3) A life estate in certain property.

Durgadas died in September 1932.

The insolvent Manindra, on 29th April 1927, assigned his right to the jewellery to Gour Chand Mullick for Rs. 1,800. The insolvent Girish, on 2nd May 1927, assigned his share in the jewellery to Gour Chand Mullick for Rs. 1,700. The Official Assignee contends that Gour was a person who made it his business to prey on the sons of wealthy parents, to lead them into a dissolute life, to advance them the money to indulge in dissipation and to induce them to part with their patrimony on ruinous terms in order to repay his advances. The acquisition of their interest in the jewellery to which they were entitled under their father's will was, so it is contended, the first step in the acquisition by Court of the insolvent's property. The value of the insolvent's interest in the jewellery is said to be largely in excess of the consideration which the insolvents are alleged to have received. On 4th May 1927, Manindra, and on 11th May 1927 Girish, assigned their respective interests in the rest and residue of their father's estate to Gour Chand Mullick for Rs. 1,000 each. The Official Assignee alleges that in each case the consideration was grossly inadequate even if it was in fact paid which he denies. Manindra, on 28th May 1927, mortgaged his life interest in his father's estate to Gour for Rs. 15,000. The payment of the alleged consideration is denied. Girish was adjudicated an insolvent on 3rd August 1927 and Manindra on 13th July 1928. By March 1930 Gour had obtained in all a 6 annas share in the estate of Durgadas, for he bought the two annas share of Jadub Chandra Seal through Phani Lal Mullick.

This 6 annas share Gour sold on 17th March 1930 to Umesh Chandra Seal for an alleged consideration of Rs. 10,000 in cash and Rs. 37,000 secured by a mortgage on the premises conveyed and on Umesh's 4 annas share in the residuary estate of Durgadas. On 29th March 1930 the Official Assignee advertised the sale of Manindra's interest in the Bowbazar Street property, whereupon Gour and Umesh both objected on the ground that the insolvent's interest in that property had ceased. Gour and Umesh were then examined under S. 36, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and the Official Assignee applied under S. 55 for the annulment of the transfers. On the hearing of that application before my learned brother Panckridge, J., Counsel for Gour stated that he was not in a position to establish full payment in cash of the consideration for the transfers and the transfers to Gour were accordingly set aside and declared void. Similarly counsel for Umesh declared his inability to prove that the consideration had in fact been paid, and with regard to the transfer on 17th March 1930 from Gour, he admitted that he had notice of the adjudication of Girish and Manindra. The learned Judge held on the authority of (1912) 3 K B 6 (1), that the transfers to Gour being void they were void as from the date when his transferors were adjudged insolvent; and in the circumstances

1. In Re Hart, Ex parte Green, (1912) 3 K B 6 = 28 T L R 482 = 56 S J 615.

Umesh, his subsequent transferor, did not acquire a good title. On appeal from this decision it was held following the recent Privy Council decision in 58 I A 115 (2) that the onus lay on the Official Assignee to prove that the transactions were not made in good faith and for valuable consideration, and that as there was no evidence to support the decision of the trial Judge his order should be set aside and the matter should be retried in the insolvency jurisdiction. The appellate Court held however that the order of the trial Court setting aside, in the presence of Gour and his assignee Phani Lal Mullick, the mortgage of 28th May 1927 of Manindra's life estate under his father's should stand. The order of the appellate Court was made on 8th January 1932.

On 18th January 1932 Gour assigned to his father Bolai Chand Mullick the mortgage of 17th March 1930 by Umesh in favour of Gour to secure the sum of Rs. 37,000 and on 19th July 1932 Gour was adjudicated insolvent. In accordance with the directions of the Court of appeal the matter has come before me in the insolvency jurisdiction and the procedure directed by that Court has been followed. The first question for decision is whether the Official Assignee has discharged the onus which lies upon him of proving that the transfers by the insolvents were not made in good faith and for valuable consideration. (After examining the evidence, his Lordship proceeded.) The result is that the Official Assignee has to rely entirely on the admissions of Gour and the evidence of his accomplice to prove his case. As I have already pointed out, they are both witnesses whose past record alone makes their testimony unworthy of belief. I am unable to say, in these circumstances, that the Official Assignee has discharged the onus which lay upon him and I am unable to declare as prayed that the assignment of 29th April 1927, 4th May 1927 and 17th June 1927 between Gour and Manindra, and the assignments of 2nd May 1927, 11th May 1927 and 21st June 1927 by Girish, are void. The question of registration which was raised before my brother Panckridge was argued before me at some length namely that the assignments by the insolvents of their residuary shares in their father's estate would not operate as a transfer of any immovable property inasmuch as they were registered in Book IV and not in Book I.

This question was not decided at the previous hearing, but in view of my decision that the lack of consideration has not been proved, it now becomes of importance. There can be little doubt that the registration in Book IV was bona fide, for prior to the decision of the Appeal Court in 34 C W N 177 (3), the parties were unaware that the residuary estate would include immovable property. In those circumstances the recent decision of the Privy Council, reported in 39 C W N 1191 (4), seems to me to establish quite clearly that such an error in registration would not invalidate the transfer. On my finding that the transfers in favour of Gour were valid it follows that the title of Gour's transferees is good and the other questions which have been argued do not arise, but as this matter may go further, I will deal with the arguments which have been raised on the assumption that the transfers to Gour are void. Dealing first with the transfer in favour of Umesh of 17th March 1930. This transfer was made after the adjudication of the insolvents, and with notice of that adjudication and on the English cases to which I have been referred, viz. (1912) 3 K B 6 (1) and (1920) 2 K B 426 (5), I am of opinion that the title of the Official Assignee accrued on the dates in 1927 and 1928 when Girish and Manindra were adjudicated insolvent respectively and that on 17th March 1930 Gour had no title to the property which he purported to transfer to Umesh. Even if it is conceded that Umesh was a bona fide purchaser for consideration he could acquire no title from Gour if the transfers in favour of Gour were in fact inoperative. The same considerations would be applicable to the assignment of 18th January 1932 by Gour in favour of his father Balai of the mortgage received by Gour from Umesh as part of the consideration in the transaction of 17th March 1930.

Finally it is argued on behalf of Umesh and Bolai, the transferees from Gour, that the Official Assignee is estopped from challenging the validity of the transfers owing to his failure to challenge them in earlier litigation. The earlier litigation to which reference is made is an administration suit brought by Gour on 14th June 1927 against Umesh and Ashutosh Seal as executors of Durgadas's estate. In that suit there was a decree in favour of Gour on 12th July 1929 and an order that the executors should hand over the shares of Manindra and Girish to the plaintiff. The Official Assignee was not a party to that suit, but it is contended that he was the successor in interest to persons who were parties and that so long as the decree remains it is not competent for the Official Assignee to obtain an order under S. 55, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, which would in effect set aside that decree. In my opinion this decree which was obtained after Manindra and Girish were adjudicated insolvent to the knowledge of the plaintiff cannot operate as res judicata against the Official Assignee who was never made a party. The other proceeding on which reliance is placed is an originating summons brought on 1st February 1928 by Ashutosh and Umesh as executors of Durgadas. To this summons the Official Assignee was a party and inasmuch as he failed to challenge the transfer by the insolvents it is contended that he is estopped from challenging them now. It is not apparent from the record what order if any, was made on this summons, but the Official Assignee entered appearance, and in my opinion there is considerable force in the argument that his failure to raise any objection to the transfer justified Umesh, one of the plaintiffs, in assuming that the transfers were good. In this connexion it is worthy of note that the Official Assignee must have had notice in 1928 of the transfers and his statements in para. 13 of his affidavit in the matter of Manindra and para. 14 of his affidavit in the matter of Girish are evidently untrue. It is urged with some justification that this Court is a Court of equity and that the Official Assignee who seeks to set aside transfers on the ground that they are not bona fide, should be scrupulously accurate in the statements by which he hopes to establish his title. In view of my finding, that the Official Assignee has failed to establish the invalidity of the transfers of which he complains, the ap-lications must be dismissed with costs including costs of the previous hearing before Panckridge, J. The costs will be as of a hearing of a defended suit. The hearing occupied five days. In the matter of Girish there will be costs as of a motion. Gour Chand Mullick will bear his own costs.

Appeal No. 1597 of 1933, Decided on 10th February 1936, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, 24-Parganas, D/- 25th May 1933.

(a) Hindu Law—Religious endowment—On failure of shebait, question of appointment reverts to founder's family—But this is subject to the condition that such appointment should not be inconsistent with founder's intention.

On failure of shebait, the question of appointment will revert to the family of the founder. But this is subject to the condition that the devolution in the ordinary line of descent is not inconsistent with or opposed to the purpose the founder had in view in establishing the worship. [P 217 C 2; P 219 C 1]

(b) Hindu Law — Religious endowment — Fundamental change in devolution of office inconsistent with terms of original foundation is not valid.

A fundamental change in the devolution of the office of shebait, which is inconsistent with the terms of the original foundation, cannot be valid. Even the founder cannot alter the line of succession unless he has reserved that right to himself: 1930 Cal 495, Rel. on. [P 218 C 1]

(c) Hindu Law—Religious endowment—A de facto shebait or even stranger can sue to recover possession of idol's property—But persons who file such suit at instigation of their father who though parties to a lawful compromise want to get rid of it by subterfuge have no locus standi to file such suit.

It is possible for a de facto shebait or even a stranger to bring a suit to recover possession of the idol's property. But where two persons who were parties to a lawful compromise in order to get rid of such compromise by resort to a subterfuge set up their sons to sue for recovery of possession and challenge the compromise :

Held : that the sons had no locus standi to do so and that the defendant was entitled to raise the question as to whether the plaintiffs had any locus standi to bring such suit. [P 219 C 1, 2]

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title to and recovery of possession of about 5 cottas of land together with a house and a Siva temple standing thereon. The property originally belonged to one Pran Krishna Haldar who died in 1868 leaving him surviving his widow Nitambini Debi and his mother Biswamoyi Debi. Nitambini died in 1919 and Biswamoyi died in 1899. On 26th March 1868, Nitambini mortgaged the disputed property reciting in the mortgage deed that she had to pay the decretal debt of Pran Krishna Haldar amounting to Rs. 200 and to raise Rs. 250 for her own maintenance. Subsequently the mortgagee brought a suit and obtained a decree and on 30th December 1870, Biswamoyi auction-purchased the property in execution and obtained possession on 2nd March 1872. In September 1889 she executed a deed of gift or endowment in respect of the disputed property in favour of the Siva idol established by her and appointed one Jadu Nath Mukherjee as the first shebait. In 1901, Jadu Nath executed another deed by which he appointed his two sons Lal Gopal Mukherjee and Kalipada Mukherjee shebait and also laid down the line of succession in his family. It may be noted here that Biswamoyi had already died. Gurupada Haldar who is defendant 1 in the present suit became the reversioner to the estate of Pran Krishna Haldar on the death of Nitambini and in 1923 he instituted Title Suit No. 203 to recover possession of the disputed property alleging that Nitambini had only a widow's interest and Biswamoyi had purchased only that interest.

The suit was brought against Lal Gopal and Kalipada who were in charge as shebait of the idol. The suit ended in a compromise on 21st January 1927 and the result was that the property was divided about half and half, Gurupada taking one half and Lal Gopal and Kalipada taking the rest in the name of the idol. The present plaintiffs, who are the sons of Lal Gopal and Kalipada, allege that their fathers were unduly influenced by the relatives of defendant 1, Gurupada

Haldar and the neighbours, and that they had acted improperly as shebait in entering into the compromise. The plaintiffs further allege that they took their fathers to task, whereupon the latter ceased to act as shebait and permitted the plaintiffs to act as shebait. By the said compromise decree the title of the Siva Thakur to the suit land has been clouded and so the plaintiffs have brought the present suit. Lal Gopal and Kalipada have been made pro forma defendants 2 and 3; they have filed a short joint written statement supporting the plaintiffs' case. The suit is contested by Gurupada Haldar, defendant 1. His defence is that the plaintiffs have no locus standi to sue, that Nitambini had only a widow's interest which was purchased by Biswamoyi and the latter's right ended when Nitambini died in 1919, and further that the compromise in the suit of 1923 is binding on the plaintiffs.

The trial Court found that Nitambini had mortgaged for legal necessity and that she intended to bind the entire estate, but that there was nothing to show that the mortgagee intended to enforce the liability against the entire estate. On the contrary, only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor Nitambini were sold and not the entire estate of Pran Krishna Haldar. Therefore Biswamoyi did not acquire absolute title to the property. Gurupada inherited it after the death of Nitambini and the endowment was no longer valid. At the same time the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs were validly appointed shebait and that the solenama was not binding on them. In the view that he took of the auction-purchase, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. On appeal the District Judge agreed with the Subordinate Judge on all the points except with regard to the auction-purchase. He held that the entire estate passed to the auction-purchaser. In that view he decreed the suit. The present second appeal is preferred by defendant 1.

The first question in this appeal is whether the plaintiffs have locus standi to bring the suit. Both the Courts below have found that the plaintiffs are validly appointed shebait. The plaintiffs are four in number. According to the cause title in the plaint, plaintiff 1 is the son of Lal Gopal Mukherjee and plaintiffs 2, 3 and 4 are the minor sons of Kalipada

Mukherjee represented by their guardian mother Nagendra Bala Debi and they are described as shebait of the Siva Thakur established by Biswamoyi. In para. 13 of the plaint it is alleged that the plaintiffs are the validly appointed shebait according to the original deed of endowment of Biswamoyi. The reliefs that they asked for are first: A declaration that the property belongs to the idol Siva established by Biswamoyi, secondly that the solenama decree in Title Suit No. 204 of 1923 is not binding on the idol and that defendant 1 may not possess any part of the suit property under the said decree and, thirdly, that the plaintiffs are to recover possession. The learned District Judge has given a decree in these terms:

That the suit be decreed with costs, it being declared that the title and possession of the property in suit is in Siva, and in the plaintiffs as shebait of Siva; that the decree in Title Suit No. 204 of 1923 is not binding against the deity Siva and against the property in suit. It is further ordered that the plaintiffs as shebait of the deity Siva may take delivery of possession of such part of the property in suit as has been occupied by defendant-respondent 1 in pursuance of the decree in Suit No. 204 of 1923.

It is conceded by the learned advocate appearing for the plaintiffs-respondents in this Court that this decree is really in excess of the reliefs asked for in the suit, inasmuch as it gives to the plaintiffs a declaration of their shebaiti right which was not asked for in the plaint. To understand the question of locus standi, it will be necessary to refer to the original deed of endowment, Ex. 1 which was executed by Biswamoyi Debi. The material part of the document runs as follows:

But having it in my mind to dedicate the house to Siva Thakur, I dedicate today the said house to the idol of Siva by this deed of gift. Whatever right, title and possession I had in the said house vest from this date in the idol of Siva and now I have become old and afflicted with various diseases and unable to perform the seva of the idol of Siva, so I appoint Jadunath Mukhopadhyaya, son of late Shambhu Chandra Mukhopadhyaya, as shebait. The said shebait will keep the said house in his own right, title and possession, let out the same and perform the seva and repair the house from the proceeds of the rent of the house and from the income from my jajmans (disciples). May God forbid, if during my life time the said shebait dies, then I shall again appoint another shebait. If the said shebait becomes aparag (incapacitated) to perform seva, he will be entitled to appoint another shebait in the same manner, but he shall not be entitled to do any injurious act such as gift, sale, mortgage or transfer, etc. (of the said property) obstructing the seva work. Be it expressed further that my heir shall have no connexion with this house. . . .

It is apparent from the above that Biswamoyi divests herself and her heirs and vests the property in the idol Siva. Next she appoints Jadunath Mukhopadhyaya as shebait in his own right, title and possession. Thirdly she provides for the succession in this way, namely, so far as Jadunath is concerned he is to appoint his successors if he should become incapacitated (अपारग) and further Biswamoyi reserves to herself the right to appoint another shebait in case Jadunath should die in her lifetime. The document does not go any further and does not make any provision for future appointments after Jadunath's successor. The learned District Judge remarks in his judgment that the endowment deed provided expressly that the services to Siva would be continued without reference to the grantor's heirs after the grantee's death, and I agree with the learned lower Court that by implication Jadunath, the original grantee, was entitled to fix the succession to shebaitship provided that such succession fixed did not go against the law.

It seems to us that the learned Judge was in error in thinking that there was an express provision that the service to Siva would be continued with reference to the grantor's heirs. There is no reason, so far as the terms of the endowment go, why the ordinary law should not apply, namely that on failure of shebait, the question of appointment will revert to the family of the founder. Both the Courts however have found that it was the intention of the founder that Jadunath should have full authority in the matter of appointment of successive shebait. Considering that this was the intention, it must be read consistently with the terms of the endowment. It is perfectly clear from the terms that the founder intended first, that the shebait must be an effective shebait, that is one capable of performing the worship and, secondly, that he should appoint a successor only in the contingency of his being incapacitated. This brings us to the arrangement made by Jadunath by the deed of appointment, Ex. 2. By this deed he professed to act according to the terms of the deed of Biswamoyi and stated that he had become old and unable to perform the seva, etc., on account of illness, and then he proceeded to appoint his two sons Lalgopal and Kalipada Mukherjee. So far Dr. Basak, appearing for the appellant in this Court, has stated the appointment cannot be questioned even though it was of two shebaitis and not one. The deed then goes on to provide as follows :

I, according to the order in the said deed of gift, appoint you down to your sons, grandsons, heirs and representatives, as shebaitis to perform the daily seva work of the idol of Siva. From this date, as my representatives, you, down to your sons, grandsons, heirs and representatives, enjoy and possess the said debuttar house as shebait of Sri Sri Siva Thakur . . . etc.

It is contended that this laying down the rule of succession in the family is inconsistent with the terms of Biswamoyi's grant. I am not impressed by Dr. Basak's argument that the appointment of the plaintiffs would be repugnant to Hindu law on the ground that they were unborn at the time of the original grant and his reference to the case of 21 Bom 709 (1), cannot be accepted as that case may be distinguished on the facts. But there is authority for the proposition that a fundamental change in the devolution of the office of shebait, which is inconsistent with the terms of the original foundation, cannot be valid. Even the founder cannot alter the line of succession unless he has reserved that right to himself. In the case of 34 C W N 177 (2), there was an addition to the existing foundation, a subsequent shebait having by another deed of endowment dedicated certain additional properties. There it was pointed out that each case must be governed by the terms of the particular dedication subject to the principles laid down in 17 Cal 3 (3) which was a case of shebaitship remaining in the family of the founder. In the present case Jadunath by his deed of appointment Ex. 2 was not even making any addition to the existing foundation. On the other hand, he was adopting a course of personal aggrandisement by keeping the shebaitship in the family which was inconsistent with the terms of the original foundation. Since there is no dispute that, so far as Lalgopal and Kalipada are concerned, their appointment was valid, the next step to see is whether the plaintiffs have been validly appointed. Looking back to the original conditions of the endowment, the first question is whether Lalgopal and Kalipada had been incapacitated. The plaintiffs' own case as stated in the plaint itself shows that that was not the reason for the appointment of the plaintiffs. The reason was that there was a quarrel over the compromise which was effected in T. S. No. 204 of 1923. This is confirmed by the deed of appointment which was executed by Lalgopal and Kalipada in favour of the plaintiffs in February 1931, vide Ex. 10, that is, subsequent to the institution of the suit which was on 16th May 1930. In this document the executant Lalgopal and Kalipada state:

Then while we were exercising our right of shebaitship in respect of the said god Siva peacefully, we, at the instigation of some wicked men, surrendered our said right of shebaitship in the month of January 1930 in your favour giving you full liberty to carry on the sheba of the said Siva . . .

Then they proceed :

In January 1930 we surrendered our right of shebaitship in your favour and since then you have been performing the said shebaiti work being invested with the right of a shebait of the said Siva Thakur according to the provisions of the deed by the late Biswamoyi Debi and Jadu Nath Mukhopadhyaya and our shebaiti rights have been completely extinguished . . .

Then comes the second question, was this an appointment of effective shebaitis, that is, of persons who are capable of performing the seva? Now we find that three of the plaintiffs are minors who are represented in the suit by their mother guardian; plaintiff 1 is stated to have been born in 1909 and therefore he was 21 years old at the time of the suit.

These certainly were not persons who were capable of performing the seva as evidently was intended by the original founder. The learned Subordinate Judge says :

The shebaitis were entitled to relinquish in favour of persons who would succeed after his death.

This might be in accordance with the terms of the deed of appointment executed by Jadunath Mukhopadhyaya, Ex. 2. But such an appointment is against the terms of the original grant. In the case of 35 All 283 (P C) (4) it was held that

1. Bai Motivahu v. Bai Mamubai, (1897) 21 Bom 709=24 I A 93=7 Sar 140 (P C).

2. Ashutosh Seal v. Benode Behari Seal, 1930 Cal 495=128 I C 82=51 C L J 80=34 C W N 177.

3. Gossami Sri Gridharaji v. Romanlalji Gossami, (1890) 17 Cal 3=16 I A 137=5 Sar 350 (P C).

4. Mohan Lalji v. Gordhan Lalji Maharaj, (1913) 35 All 283=19 I C 337=40 I A 97 (P O).

the rule that the heirs of the founder succeed to the shebaitship laid down in the case of 17 Cal 3 (3) is subject to the condition that the devolution in the ordinary line of descent is not inconsistent with or opposed to the purpose the founder had in view in establishing the worship. We think the appointment of the present plaintiffs is opposed to this principle. It is not argued for the respondents that the plaintiffs are validly appointed shebait and in fact Mr. Roy Chowdhury appearing for the respondents has suggested that the question of valid appointment may be left open. It is contended that the plaintiffs have been given charge by the existing shebait and further that defendant 1, Gurupada, cannot question the appointment of the plaintiffs because Biswamoyi in her deed of endowment expressly excluded her heirs from any connexions with the house. This argument, however, overlooks the fact that defendant 1, Gurupada Haldar, does not profess to be an heir to Biswamoyi. He is heir to the estate of Pran Krishna Haldar on the death of Nitambini Debi. This is his defence and this was also his case in the plaint in T. S. 204 of 1923. No doubt it is possible for a de facto shebait or even a stranger to bring a suit to recover possession of the idol's property. See the case of 39 C W N 433 (5) which affirmed the principle laid down in 37 C W N 541 (6), namely that the plaintiff in actual possession as Mohunt is entitled to maintain a suit to recover property not for his own benefit but for the benefit of the math. These are cases of Mohunts in actual possession seeking to set aside a grant made by a predecessor, but there is the vital difference in the present case. The fathers of the plaintiffs are the validly appointed shebait and are still living. They made the compromise with Gurupada.

The argument is that in the suit, No. 204 of 1923, they were only defendants in their personal capacity and not as shebait. But if we look to the substance of the thing, this argument cannot be accepted. The terms of the sole-nama, vide Ex. D, shows that it was declared that the plaintiff Gurupada had no title to and possession in the portion obtained by the defendants and that the defendants were to possess the same down to their descendants as shebait of the Siva Thakur. The true position seems to be that Lalgopal and Kalipada now want to get rid of the compromise by resort to a subterfuge. They have set up their sons in their place, so that the compromise may be got rid of and it is open to the defendant Gurupada to raise the question whether the plaintiffs have any locus standi to bring the suit. It seems to us that the plaintiffs have no locus standi. It is next contended for the appellant that Biswamoyi did not purchase the entire estate. It is pointed out that even if it be held that there was legal necessity for the mortgage as stated in the deed of mortgage, the same deed shows that it was Biswamoyi's action that gave rise to the necessity; therefore it was not open to Biswamoyi to take advantage of her own wrong. On the other hand, there is the compromise by which Gurupada himself accepted the position that the endowment was valid even after the death of Nitambini. Whatever it may be, it is not necessary to decide the question, having regard to the fact that it is found that the plaintiffs have no locus standi to bring the suit. The suit must therefore be dismissed. The result is that the appeal is allowed, the judgment and the decree of the lower appellate Court are set aside, and the plaintiffs' suit is dismissed. The contesting defendant 1 is entitled to his costs in all the Courts.

Suit No. 869 of 1935, Decided on 20th August 1935.

* Letters Patent (Calcutta)—Cl. 12—Cause of action arising within jurisdiction being only assignment of promissory note on which suit is based—Leave should not be granted.

It is not right to grant leave in a case where the part of the cause of action on which the jurisdiction depends is matter with which the defendants have nothing to do. [P 220 C 2]

Where, therefore, the only cause of action which arises within jurisdiction is the assignment of the promissory note on which the suit is based, leave under Cl. 12 should not be granted. When people take an assignment of promissory note, they should be prepared to enforce their claim either in the Court within whose jurisdiction the makers reside or in a jurisdiction where a part of the cause of action with which the matters are directly concerned has arisen. The balance of convenience also demands that the litigation should be conducted either in the Court within whose jurisdiction defendants reside or in the Court within whose jurisdiction the document sued upon was executed. Judgment.—This is an application on behalf of some of the defendants to revoke the leave given under Cl. 12 of the Charter to institute this suit, and to take the plaint off the file. The suit is on a promissory note and the sum claimed amounts to Rs. 11,684. The plaintiffs are described as a firm carrying on business in Calcutta. The defendants, who are 17 in number, are described as being landholders, residing at a village in the district of Mongyr. I take these descriptions from the cause title. In the body of the plaint the defendants are further described as members of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family. The plaintiffs' case is that certain of the defendants as kurtas and managers of the joint family borrowed moneys and purchased piece-goods and other commodities from one Ramcoomar Marwari. These accounts between the kurtas and Ramcoomar were adjusted from time to time and promissory notes were given and renewed. The last of such promissory notes is said to have been executed by the kurtas on 22nd March 1933 and is the promissory note on which the suit is brought. The payee of the promissory note died on 15th January 1934. His heir and legal representative was a minor and the District Court appointed guardians of his property. With the leave of the Court the guardians appointed assigned the promissory note in suit to one of their number, Rai Bahadur Lokenath Prosad Dandania of Baghalpur. On 8th April 1935 the assignee, in his turn, according to the plaint, assigned the promissory note in suit to the present plaintiffs, some of whom, I am informed, are related to him, for valuable consideration. That assignment is said to have been made in Calcutta and it is common ground that it is the only part of the cause of action which has arisen within the jurisdiction. It is the plaintiffs' case that the loans and deliveries of goods which were the consideration for the successive promissory notes were made at Baghalpur and that the promissory note in suit was executed there.

My attention has been drawn to a recent judgment of mine where by I revoked leave under Cl. 12 of the Charter in a case where the only part of the cause of action which had arisen within the jurisdiction was the endorsement by the payee of the promissory note in suit. I think that the plaintiffs are fully justified in saying that the circumstances in that case were considerably stronger than in the case with which I am now concerned. I should not feel justified on the materials before me in holding as I did in the former case, that the assignment is prima facie collusive, in the sense that the circumstances indicate that it was effected in Calcutta largely for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to this Court and thereby embarrassing the defence. At the same time I am of opinion that usually, it is not right to grant leave in a case where the part of the cause of action on which the jurisdiction depends is a matter with which the defendants have had nothing to do. I do not lay this down by any means as a hard and fast rule, but generally speaking, it appears to me that when people take an assignment of a promissory note they should be prepared to enforce their claim either in the Court within whose jurisdiction the makers reside or in a jurisdiction where a part of the cause of action with which the makers are directly concerned has arisen.

The branch of the argument advanced by Mr. Bose which has attracted me most is his submission that if people choose to execute a negotiable instrument, they must be held to contemplate the possibility of its passing from hand to hand by endorsement and delivery and of its eventually getting, in the ordinary course of affairs, into the hands of some one who may elect to institute proceedings in a Court which does not suit the convenience of the makers of the note. Were the defendants in this case a mercantile firm, I am not sure that this argument would not have turned the scale in favour of the plaintiffs, but they are described as land owners and it appears from the plaint that the consideration for the note took the form of advances of cash and the supply of goods for personal consumption. In these circumstances, the argument as to negotiability does not apply with the same force as it would in the case of parties engaged in mercantile transactions. Mr. Bose has also pointed out that by suing in this Court the plaintiffs avoid the necessity of paying a heavy initial Court fee on the institution of the suit. I do not think that that is a circumstance which should affect me one way or the other. It would be wrong for me to take into consideration whether my decision is likely to impoverish or to enrich the revenue. From the nature of things in whichever Court the suit is instituted, one party or the other will be put to a certain amount of inconvenience, and on the whole, I think that the balance of convenience demands that the litigation should be conducted either in the Court within whose jurisdiction the defendants reside or in the Court within whose jurisdiction the document sued upon was executed. I therefore revoke the leave given, but in the circumstances of this case, I direct that each party bear his own costs.

Appeal No. 5 of 1933, Decided on 23rd January 1936, from original decree of Sub-Judge, First Court, 24-Parganas, D/- 16th August 1932.

(a) Pauper Suit—Suit registered as ordinary suit—Plaintiff failing to pay deficit court-fee though given time to do so—But subsequently applying for permission to continue suit as pauper—Application should not be rejected merely on ground that suit has been registered as ordinary suit but should be considered on merits.

Where a suit has been registered as an ordinary suit and the plaintiff does not pay deficit court-fee though given time twice to do so but subsequently applies for permission to continue the suit as a pauper, the application should not be rejected merely on the ground that the suit has already been registered as an ordinary suit. It should be considered on merits: Case law discussed. [P 222 C 2]

In view of S. 148 the time granted to pay deficit court-fee can be enlarged from time to time. This section expressly empowers the Court to extend any time fixed by it even after the expiry of the period originally fixed. [P 223 C 1]

Judgment.—On 8th January 1930 the plaintiff applied for permission to institute a suit in forma pauperis for recovery of possession of a certain property with mesne profits on a declaration that the same was wakf property and that he was the mutawalli of the wakf. He valued the suit at Rs. 5,100. The application was entertained and notices were issued on the defendant and the Government Pleader. On 8th March 1930 the defendant filed an objection in which amongst other grounds it was alleged that the market value of the property was not less than Rs. 1,25,000. On 21st June 1930 the plaintiff filed the requisite court-fee on his plaint as framed, and on that the suit was registered as an ordinary suit. On 17th September 1930 the defendant filed his written statement, and on 6th November 1930 issues were framed, one of the issues being on the question of valuation of the suit. This issue was taken up as a preliminary issue; and evidence thereon being adduced the Subordinate Judge, on 31st March 1932, assessed the market value at Rs. 75,000 and directed the plaintiff to put in the deficit court-fees within one month. This time was extended twice, by a month on each occasion, on the plaintiff's application, once on 30th April and again on 30th May 1932. On 30th June 1932 the plaintiff applied for further time and on that the Subordinate Judge ordered the petition to be put up for orders on 6th July 1932, on which date the plaintiff applied for permission to continue the suit as a pauper filing with the application a copy of the plaint he had already filed and valuing it at the figure which the Court had found as the value of the property. On 13th July 1932 the Subordinate Judge rejected the application of 30th June and 6th July 1932 and later on on 16th August 1932 passed two orders, one after the other, which ran thus:

No. 58. Plaintiff's application for permitting him to continue the suit in forma pauperis cannot be allowed in view of the decision of the Honourable High Court reported in 36 C W N 567 (1). This application is rejected.

No. 59. Deficit court-fees not paid. The plaint is rejected. The plaintiff has then preferred this appeal, as from an order dated 16th August 1932, in Title Suit No. 106 of 1930, that being the number given to the suit when it was registered. Obviously it was the second order of August 1932 which has been appealed from, the validity of the first order of that date being intended to be also challenged in the appeal.

It is apparent that as the deficit court-fees were not paid the second order was justified by the provisions of O. 7, R. 11 (c) of the Code. And the only question is whether the interposition of the application which the plaintiff made on 6th July 1932 for permission to continue the suit as a pauper makes any difference. It is also clear that if that application was rightly rejected and so was out of the way, the second order was a perfectly legitimate order passed in conformity with the provision of the Code referred to above, after the plaintiff had time, not once but three times, to put in the deficit court-fees. The correctness of the first order then is the only point for our consideration. For the first order no other reason has been given than that in view of the decision in 36 C W N 567 (1) the application to continue the suit in forma pauperis cannot be allowed. It seems fairly clear that it was on no question of merits that the learned Judge proceeded, but that he took it that having regard to the decision that he relied on, it was not open to him to allow the plaintiff to continue the suit in forma pauperis. The question to be considered is thus a pure question of law. Under

1. Salima Sheehan v. Hafez Mahomed, 1932 Cal 685=139 I C 520=36 C W N 567.

Act 8 of 1859 it was held by Pontifex, J., in 2 Cal 130 (2) that the power to allow a suit to be continued as a pauper suit was included in the power given to the Court to allow a suit in forma pauperis to be instituted. Under Act 14 of 1882, following the case aforesaid, the same view was expressed in 8 Bom 615 (3) and 20 Cal 319 (4). In the case of 36 C W N 567 (1), Costello, J., appears to have doubted the correctness of the view taken in the cases aforesaid but observed:

It is unnecessary for the purpose of the present case that we should express a definite opinion as to whether we agree with the decision in 20 Cal 319 (4).

Jack, J. who was a party to the decision in 36 C W N 567 (1) was also a member of the Court in the later decision in 60 Cal 827 (5), in which the view taken in 2 Cal 130 (2), 20 Cal 319 (4) and 8 Bom 615 (3) has been adopted. There is another decision of this Court, namely 36 C W N 1035 (6) in which the same view has been taken; so also in 53 Mad 43 (7). In our opinion, the correctness of this view which was obtained since 1877 need not be questioned. The Subordinate Judge therefore was in error if he was of opinion that because the suit had already been registered as an ordinary suit the application to continue it in forma pauperis could not be entertained. It has been contended on behalf of the defendant that even though the view aforementioned need not be doubted, yet in a case where in a suit commenced in the ordinary form circumstances may arise which bring the case within the provision contained in O. 7, R. 11 (c) of the Code, and that on such circumstances arising, it would no longer be open to the Court to allow the suit to be continued in forma pauperis, but the Court must proceed to deal with the suit in accordance with that provision; that the case of 36 C W N 567 (1) is an authority for that proposition; and that the Subordinate Judge has regarded it as such. It appears in 60 Cal 827 (5) and 36 C W N 567 (1) (supra) has been distinguished on such a ground. The question then arises, whether the case, though it must be taken to have been correctly decided on its own merits, can be treated as laying down any general principle or proposition of law of the nature contended for on behalf of the defendant. O. 7, R. 11 (c) of the Code says "within a time to be fixed by the Court." It has not been and indeed cannot be urged in view of S. 148 of the Code that the time so granted cannot be enlarged from time to time. Nor can it be doubted that that section expressly empowers the Court to extend any time fixed by it even after the expiry of the period originally fixed.

In the present case the plaintiff's application for further time made on 30th June was pending on 6th July when he applied to continue the suit in forma pauperis. And in our opinion the Court not having up to that point of time made up its mind not to grant any further time, the provisions of O. 7, R. 11 (c) cannot be said to have operated ipso facto. If within one of the periods allowed, or even beyond it, but before the plaint is rejected or before circumstances have arisen under which it is bound to be rejected, an application is made to continue the suit as a pauper, is it obligatory for the Court to reject the plaint and relegate the plaintiff to a fresh application or is the Court competent to entertain the application and shape its proceedings in such a manner as would conduce to convenience and saving of time and costs? There is nothing in the Code that we can see which will force us to adopt a construction such as the defendant seeks to put upon the procedure. In our judgment, the mandatory provision contained in O. 7, R. 11 of the Code is intended for cases where no other complications intervene and that in a case of the present nature the Court has sufficient inherent power to depart from the normal procedure to suit the exigencies of the situation. There have been instances in which under similar circumstances, notwithstanding failure on the part of the plaintiff to put in deficit court-fees on the plaint within the time fixed and so attracting the operation of O. 7, R. 11 (c) of the Code, application to continue the suit in forma pauperis has been ordered to be entertained. One of such cases is the case of 36 C W N 1035 (6) which though it purports only to distinguish the case of 36 C W N 567 (1) and does not dissent from it, does in our opinion, do so on a ground which is too narrow. Another case that may be cited in this connexion is that of 64 Mad L J 728 (8). The only point of difference between the present case and the cases just cited is that in those cases the application to continue the suit in forma pauperis was made at a time when a period allowed by the Court had not expired. But on principle we do not see why that should make any difference, so long as it is clear that an application for further time was pending consideration, at the time when the application to continue the suit in forma pauperis was made, and so long as it is also clear that the Court could, if it so wished, grant further time, thus repelling the operation of O. 7, R. 11 (c) of the Code. In our judgment the Subordinate Judge was in error in refusing to entertain the application. We accordingly allow the appeal and, setting aside the two orders referred to above, send the case back to the Court below with a direction that the application be entertained and dealt with on its merits. We decide no other point. Costs of this appeal will abide the result of the suit.

Order.—In these three Rules the petitioner applied for pre-emption under the provisions of S. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act. He and the opposite parties are co-sharer landlords in respect of three occupancy holdings which are the subject matters of the three pre-emption cases out of which these Rules arise. Later on there was a proceeding under the Estates Partition Act and two of the holdings were allotted exclusively to the allotment of the petitioner, but the third holding was allotted partly to the petitioner and partly to the opposite parties. The opposite parties instituted suits for rent for these three holdings for a period anterior to the partition. In those suits the petitioner was not impleaded as a party. Decrees were obtained and in execution thereof these three holdings were purchased by opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2. On that the present petitioner applied for pre-emption. These facts are not challenged and the decrees are therefore money decrees. In this view of the matter, I do not see how the application of the petitioner could be resisted. The opposite parties did not resist the application, but in spite of that the petitioner's applications have been dismissed. I, therefore, hold that the lower appellate Court was wrong in dismissing those applications. The Rule is accordingly made absolute and the order for pre-emption must be made in respect of the three holdings in favour of the petitioner. As there is no appearance on behalf of the opposite party, there will be no order for costs.

Sudhansu Sekhar Mukherji—for Petitioners.

Probodh Chandra Chatterjee and Biswanath Saha—for Opposite Party.

Jack, J.—This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Birbhum and upon Bholanath Das, the complainant opposite party to show cause why proceeding under Ss. 497 and 498, I. P. C., should not be quashed, or, in the alternative, the case should not be transferred from the Court of Mr. Iyengar to the Court of some Magistrate outside Rampurhat. Two of the petitioners were originally tried for kidnapping under S. 366 and were acquitted on appeal to the Court, on the grounds that the girl in question went of her own accord to the house of the accused and that there was no taking or sending. After the acquittal on appeal in that case, this prosecution has been launched against two persons Mahammed Hossain and Bulu Khan along with four other persons apparently on the same facts.

The ground upon which this application was made is that these proceedings are an abuse of the process of the Court, inasmuch as on the final finding in the appeal in this case, the facts on which this prosecution is based being the same, there could be no offence under S. 498. We find from the record that these two persons Mahommed Hossain and Bulu Khan, during the proceedings in the previous case, were for six months in jail as undertrial prisoners and subsequently served two months' sentence before they were finally acquitted. There can be no doubt that this prosecution has been undertaken, in order to endeavour to defeat the effect of the previous acquittal. The facts on which it is founded, are the same. It is urged that now that the girl is free and not under the influence of the other side, she will make statements which will support the prosecution case whereas her statements made in the previous trial went against the prosecution. We find that in the meantime she has been prosecuted under S. 193 for giving false evidence in that connexion and it is not likely that much reliance can be placed upon her testimony. There might be something to be said on behalf of the prosecution as against the petitioner Mahomed Hossain who is the only one proceeded against under S. 497. But inasmuch as he has been already in jail for eight months on account of this occurrence, we think that if any offence has been committed, he has already been sufficiently punished. Moreover there has been a very great delay in prosecuting him. If the husband really intended to prosecute Mahomed Hossain for adultery, he should not have waited ten months to bring the complaint. The husband, in fact, was a witness in the first case and if he had made a complaint at the time, these charges could have been made then. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that these proceedings are an abuse of the process of the Court. We therefore think that this is a case in which the proceedings ought to be quashed under the provisions of S. 561-A, Criminal P. C. We would accordingly make the Rule absolute, quash the proceedings and direct that the accused petitioners be forthwith discharged from their bail bonds.

Brojolah Chakravarty and Chandra Sekhar Sen—for Respondents.

Bartley, J.—This is an appeal against the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Chittagong, affirming a decree of the Munsif, Third Court, which declared a resolution of the District Board, Chittagong, dated 24th February 1931, to be illegal and ultra vires, and restrained the Board from taking steps to acquire lands in pursuance of the said resolution. The succinct history of the case, as found by the Courts below, is that rivalry between the Choudhuries of Chittagong and Paragalpur on the one side and the Roy Choudhuries of Dhoom on the other, resulted in the establishment by the former of a Hat called Santi Hati, close to a long established Hat owned by the Roy Choudhuries, known as Mahajan Hat. In 1928, the site of Santi Hat was moved to the Ganekchara Khal. There is a road, known as the Khan Saheb Serajuddin Road, which was khas mahal property, but enlisted as a Local Board Road in 1924, which runs from the road to Mahajan Hat to the Leake Road, a distance of 1½ miles. About 800 feet from the Mahajan Hat Road this road is intersected by the Khal, immediately beyond which is the site of Santi Hat. The resolution, with which the present suit is concerned, deals with the acquisition of this section of the Serajuddin Road and the adjacent land, which is the property of the plaintiffs.

In 1928 an attempt was made to widen this part of the road by force. The perpetrators, tenants of the Pargalpur Choudhuries, were convicted in the criminal Court. A Local Board contractor, who claimed to be carrying out a contract to widen the road on behalf of the Board, was also convicted. Then a petition was filed before the Sadar Khas Mahal Officer, complaining of encroachments on the road. This petition was placed by the Chairman of the Local Board before the Collector who merely referred the Board to the civil Courts. The next step was a proposal by one Kobbad Ahmed whose brother had been convicted in the criminal proceedings that the land should be acquired at his expense. This proposal was adopted by the Board on 23rd August 1930, and the following resolution passed:

Resolved that the land be acquired at the expense of the party, and District Board be moved to take action in the matter as early as possible.

Rupees 400 out of an estimated acquisition cost of Rs. 687 was deposited by Kobbat in March 1931. The Local Board resolution was sent to the District Board, which passed a resolution recommending the acquisition, but omitting any reference to the source of the costs of it. This resolution, which was duly forwarded to the Commissioner, is challenged in the present suit. The Courts below on examination of the whole evidence have concurrently found in the first place that the proposed acquisition was not necessary for any public purpose. The first Court said :

The conclusion thus seems irresistible that these transactions were the outcome of conspiracy between the Chairman of the Local Board and the Sub-Overseer . . . to support the organizers of Santi Hat.

The finding of the lower appellate Court is that:

Everything leads to the irresistible conclusion that attempts were made by the Local Board authorities to accommodate the promoters of Santi Hat in their nefarious object to damage the rival Mahajan Hat.

In the second place, both Courts have found that the road in question is Khas Mahal property and does not belong to the Board which originally recommended acquisition. The position as summarised by the Court of appeal below, is that the entire project of land acquisition was conceived for a purpose other than a public purpose, and that an attempt was made to carry it out by persons who had no authority to move in the matter, with funds non-existent at the time but to be procured by private persons to serve their own purposes. On appeal before us, the contention urged was that the suit was maintainable, as the District Board had no power to do more than recommend acquisition which must be carried out by Government. It was said in this connexion that under S. 5-A, Land Acquisition Act, any person aggrieved by the proposals could file objections, and that no other remedy was available to him. We are entirely unable to give effect to this contention. On the finding of the Courts below, there has been a definite threat to the plaintiffs, owners of the land, affecting their right to peaceful enjoyment of the lands, and emanating from a public body.

The principle immediately applicable in such a case is the necessity of keeping such bodies within control. They may not exceed the limits of the authority committed to them by law; they must act in good faith and reasonably and with some regard for the interests of those who may suffer for the good of the community. Even when a public body is acting within the limits of its jurisdiction, the Court may, and will interfere, if it be shown that the discretion given by law has not been exercised bona fide : see (1905) A C 426 (1). It remains to apply these well established principles to the facts of the present case as found by the Courts below. The position has not been challenged, and need not therefore be considered here, that the District Board acted within its powers in passing the resolution. What has been challenged is the good faith and reasonable character of the resolution itself.

The concurrent findings of the Courts below establish a complete want of good faith, and an entire lack of regard for the interests of the owners of the land recommended for acquisition. On these findings there can be no doubt that the Courts have jurisdiction to interfere and to safeguard the interests of the owners. It is immaterial that some future development of the situation might afford the plaintiffs a different remedy. On the facts found in their favour at this stage, they are entitled to claim protection from the Courts by way of injunction. In this view of the case, the decisions of the Courts below must be affirmed, and the present appeal dismissed with costs.

Death Ref. No. 24, and Appeal No. 942 of 1935, Decided on 19th February 1936.

(a) Confession—Trial by jury—Judge has to determine whether it is admissible—Jury in considering whether it is true or not can consider voluntariness or otherwise of confession.

When the prosecution seek to put a confession into evidence it is the duty of the Judge to decide whether that evidence is admissible or not. When once it has been let into evidence and put before the jury, it is for them to say whether it is true or not, and in so doing the jury are not debarred from considering whether the confession which has been placed before them was voluntary: 1934 Cal 853, Appr.

Satindra Nath Mukerjee and Sudhansu Kumar Sen—for Appellants.D. N. Bhattacharya—for the Crown.Henderson, J.—The three appellants Bhakta Bhusan Pramanik, Durgapada Modak and Jaladhar Kundu have been convicted of offences punishable under Ss 302 and 392, I. P. C. The two former have been sentenced to death and their case has been referred to this Court by the learned Sessions Judge. The third has been sentenced to transportation for life. All the three persons have appealed and the appeal and the reference have been heard together. Briefly the facts of the case are as follows: There was an old woman named Saibalini who had been living alone for sometime. On the morning of the 16th August last, her nephew went to her house to see her but found the door in the compound wall locked. He scaled the wall, made his way into the house and there found the old woman lying dead on her bed. Information was given to the Police who started to inquire into the matter as being the case of an unnatural death. P. W. 2, Golak Behary Roy, is the landlord of the village. He received certain information which aroused his suspicions. Amongst other things, he was told by P. W. 6, Ranjan Pal, that the three accused persons had been seen together talking in a suspicious manner on the night of the murder, and suggested that they might be in a position to give some information with regard to the old woman's death. This gentleman said that while he and Ranjan Pal were discussing the matter, the accused Jaladhar used to come and sit unnecessarily there and on two occasions actually followed him. On the second day he asked him if he had anything to say.

The boy then burst into tears and confessed that the old woman had been murdered by himself and the other two accused. Subsequently, similar confessions were made by the other two accused and Durgapada handed over to Golak Roy four gold earrings which, he said, were part of the stolen property. After consulting a friend, he sent information with the said earrings to the Police and the accused persons were arrested. Jaladhar and Bhakta then made confessions before a Magistrate. The earrings were identified by the daughter of the deceased as her own and she said that they had been left in the custody of the deceased. On these facts, the three appellants were placed on their trial before the learned Sessions Judge of Burdwan and a jury. All three of them were unanimously found guilty. It is clear from what has been said above that the most important evidence is that of the confessions made by the three appellants and it is therefore inevitable that the problem of the respective functions of the Judge and the jury in this matter should have been agitated before us. On behalf of the appellants, Mr. Mookerjee has contended, firstly, that the Judge left the question of the admissibility of these confessions to the jury instead of deciding it himself; and, secondly, that the directions which he actually gave to the jury were not correct in law. Now, it could hardly be doubted that when the prosecution seek to put a confession into evidence, it is the duty of the Judge to decide whether that evidence is admissible or not. Hence, it is sometimes said succinctly that it is the duty of the Judge to decide whether a confession is voluntary and of the jury to decide whether it is true. But when one comes to examine the matter, I think it will become apparent that the first proposition is too broadly stated, while the second is too narrow.

When the Judge has to determine whether a confession is admissible, he has to see if it is hit by the provisions of S. 24, Evidence Act. This succinct use of the word "voluntary" is therefore rather unfortunate. A confession which is not hit by the precise terms of S. 24 may at the same time not be voluntary in the ordinary sense of the term. The duty of the Judge, however, is to decide whether he will allow the confession to go in, that is to say, he has to satisfy himself that it is not within the prohibition of that section. When once it has been let into evidence and put before the jury, it is for them to say whether it is true or not. Now, I am bound to say that I am unable to see how, when they have to decide that matter they can ignore the question whether it was voluntary or not. It would be almost impossible to decide the question without considering that matter. It is clear that if the jury are to perform their duty satisfactorily, they must consider all the circumstances under which the confession was made and it may well be that in many cases there may be circumstances which would support an inference that the confession was not voluntary.

The moment one comes to find that, it arouses a suspicion in one's mind whether a confession which is not voluntary is true, I am therefore of opinion that the jury are not debarred from considering whether the confession which has been placed before them was voluntary, I very much doubt if they were so debarred whether such a legal prohibition would have the slightest effect on their minds and I find it difficult to believe that whatever a Judge might say, a jury would accept as satisfactory, a confession which they themselves thought had been induced. The matter was recently carefully considered by S. K. Ghose and Khundkar, JJ., in the case of 39 C W N 27 (1). In my opinion, that decision is both good law and commonsense and I respectfully agree with it. Turning to the facts of the present case, the learned Judge said this :

If you are satisfied that these confessions were made and were not obtained by any threat or inducement from Golak Babu, then they are admissible in evidence. It is nobody's case that they were obtained by threat or inducement, because the defence is that they were not made at all But if you are satisfied that they were made, then it would be well if you further see if you can feel satisfied that they were not obtained by threat or inducement If you think that they were obtained by threat or inducement (although there is no evidence), then they could not be admissible in evidence against them, because Golak Babu is the zamindar of the village and a member of the Union Board, and so a person in authority.

As regards the confessions to the Magistrate, the learned Judge said this :

The accused at that time were in police custody. But as these confessions were made in the immediate presence of the Magistrate, these are admissible in evidence. You have to consider whether these confessions made to the Magistrate were voluntary and whether they were true.

It was contended by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer, Mr. Bhat-tacharya, that what the learned Judge really meant to put before the jury was this: He had himself come to the conclusion that the confessions were admissible and having put them before the jury, he directed them, if they thought they were not voluntary, to refuse to believe them. He therefore contended that in fact these directions went too far in favour of the accused and the appellants could not possibly have suffered any prejudice thereby. I think that argument might apply to the directions with regard to the confessions made to the Magistrate. But I find it very difficult to interpret in that sense the directions with regard to the confessions made to Golak Roy. The plain meaning of the words used by the learned Judge is that he directed the jury to decide whether they were admissible in evidence or not. If this be so, there can be no doubt that he committed an error in law on this point and it is necessary to consider whether any failure of justice has been caused thereby. Now, there can be no doubt that the jury were satisfied that these confessions were both voluntary and true and it could not be said that any failure of justice has occurred, unless we are to hold that in fact these confessions were inadmissible in evidence and ought not to have been put before the jury at all. Mr. Mukerjee asked us to hold that they were. But we have carefully considered all the circumstances and are unable to reach such a conclusion.

1. Kasimuddin v. Emperor, 1934 Cal 853=154

As at present advised I should feel rather doubtful whether Golak Roy, who is merely the landlord of the village and a member of the Union Board, is a person in authority within the meaning of S. 24. But in the view we take of the confessions themselves, it is not necessary to decide this point. The appellants themselves never suggested that any inducement was offered. On the contrary, they deny that they ever made these confessions at all and suggested that the whole story had been concocted by this gentleman. There is no evidence to suggest that any inducement was offered. (His Lordship then examined the evidence and concluded.) To sum up: we have no doubt at all that the guilt of the three appellants has been most clearly established and the appeal accordingly must be dismissed.

Cunliffe, J.—I am of the same opinion on the facts of this appeal. I only wish to add a few observations in defence to the arguments which were addressed to us on the question of the consideration of the confessions in criminal cases tried before a Judge and a jury. There is no doubt that the question is not altogether free from difficulty and I think that the difficulty arises because it is sometimes forgotten that the voluntary or involuntary nature of a confession involves a mixed question of both fact and law. It was long ago decided in the Old Court of Crown Cases Reserved in England in 1 Den C C 329 (2), that if it is apparent from the evidence produced during the trial that a confession upon which the prosecution originally relied is not a voluntary one, it is the duty of the Judge to make his decision at once and to withdraw that confession and everything contained in it from the consideration of the jury. So that the difficulty only arises when the Court has come to the conclusion that the confession under consideration is a voluntary one when the Court had heard the argument and the evidence to the contrary which it is unable to accept. In that position, it becomes a practical question. There is a presumption, of course, in the law of evidence that all confessions are voluntary. It is a presumption which can be rebutted and frequently is rebutted. But when we come to the position to which I have already referred, where an argument is addressed to the Court upon evidence adduced that a confession originally supposed to be voluntary and admitted prima facie is not voluntary and that argument and evidence is rejected, then the difficult question which had caused a good deal of controversy comes to light. Recently there has been a decision, which is still unreported, to which we were referred by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer. That is the case of Badan Ali v. Emperor. The learned Chief Justice of this Court, in delivering the leading judgment of the Bench of three Judges, relied upon a dictum of Mr. Justice Coleman, an American Judge, in 107 Ala 108 (3). During the course of the quotation from the American Judge's judgment, we find these words being used in reference to confessions which have been admitted by the Judge after argument against their admissible nature in evidence. The learned Judge said this:

The Jury have no authority to reject them (i.e., the confessions) as incompetent. But the Jury are the sole judges of the truth and weight to be given to confessions, as they are of any other fact. In weighing the confessions, the Jury must take into consideration all the circumstances surrounding them and under which they were made, including those under which the Court declared, as a matter of law, they were voluntary. In weighing confessions, the Jury necessarily consider those facts upon which their admissibility, as having been voluntarily made, depends. While there is no power in the Jury to reject the confessions, as being incompetent, there is no power in the Court to control the Jury in the weight to be given to facts.

2. R. Gurner, 1 Den C C 329.

3. Burton v. State, 107 Ala 108.

That passage shows that the real difficulty is to distinguish in an involved question of this character where law ends and fact begins. But the American Judge has taken the broad line that whereas it is the function of the Judge to give his decision on the purely legal side of the question before the Court is safe to leave open the final decision of fact in their verdict to the Jury, even though that decision may involve some disagreement with the Judge in his decision of mixed law and fact on the preliminary question as to admissibility. That to me seems both good law and good sense, and as my learned brother has observed the question is an academic one. On the other hand it is not altogether academic, when one considers that any Judge trying a case with a jury can safely leave every question of fact to the jury, provided they are cautioned carefully and sufficiently enough. Finally, we must consider the question of sentence. All the three appellants were convicted of murder. Appellants 1 and 2, viz. Bhakta Bhusan Pramanik and Durgapada Modak, were sentenced to death. They are respectively aged 22 and 27 years. The third appellant, Jaladhar Kundu, who was a young boy of 16, was sentenced to transportation for life under the alternative power invested in Judges in India in murder cases. The learned Judge properly took into consideration the youth of the third appellant. We can see absolutely no reason why these first two appellants should not suffer the extreme penalty. That is no reason in law. I frequently had addressed to me the argument that two lives should not be forfeited for one. It is an argument which I completely reject. When persons are convicted for murder, the only way in which that sentence can be altered is by the exercise of the prerogative by the King-Emperor and it has got nothing to do with law at all. In these circumstances we confirm both the sentences of death.

Letters Patent (Calcutta), Cl. 12—Leave under Cl. 12—Application for revocation—Defendant aggrieved by discretion exercised by Court in granting leave under Cl. 12—He should apply at earliest moment—Application made at stage when suit is ready for hearing cannot be granted.

Where a defendant feels aggrieved at the manner in which the Court exercised its discretion, which it admittedly has, in granting leave under Cl. 12 of Letters Patent, he should apply for revocation of such leave at the earliest moment and not allow what is prima facie a perfectly bona fide suit to proceed through the normal stages of litigation up to the stage of being ready for hearing and appearing in the warning list before he makes his application. Where therefore the defendant makes the application for revocation at the stage when the suit appears in the prospective and warning list, such application cannot be granted. [P 231 C 1]

S. R. Das—Opposite Party.

Order.—This is a border line case. It is true that the case resembles two other cases in which I have recently revoked the leave granted under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent in that the only part of the cause of action which had arisen within the jurisdiction is the assignment by the original holders of the negotiable instrument in favour of the plaintiffs. There is also this to be said on the side of the defendants, that the majority of the plaintiffs reside in the same place as the defendants, and so they will not be put to any inconvenience if the leave is revoked. If the suit had not reached the stage, which it has in fact reached, I should probably have considered that the circumstances justified me in revoking the leave. On the other hand I have no reason to suspect, as I suspected in one of the previous cases, that the assignment was deliberately made in Calcutta for the purpose of embarrassing the defendants in their defence to the suit. So far as I can recollect, in the other case with which I have recently dealt, there had been few, if any, preliminary steps taken in the litigation. In this case, on the other hand, not only has there been discovery but the suit has appeared in the Prospective List, and also in the Warning List, on several occasions. It appeared on the Warning List on 18th July 1935 and on 22nd August 1935, and on those occasions it was adjourned by consent, the adjournment on the last occasion being over the long vacation. It is said that the defendants consented to the adjournment to accommodate the plaintiffs and that it is therefore inequitable that they should be in a worse position because they have treated their opponents with courtesy. I think there is something in that argument, but at the same time, where the defendant feels aggrieved at the manner in which the Court has exercised the discretion which it admittedly has, I think that he should apply at the earliest moment and not allow what is prima facie a perfectly bona fide suit to proceed through the normal stages of litigation up to the stage of being ready for hearing and appearing in the Warning List before he makes his application. In these circumstances I refuse the application with costs. Certified for counsel. The plaintiff will pay the costs of the guardian ad litem and add them to his claim.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), Ss. 26-F and 188—S. 188 governs proceedings under S. 26-F.

Section 188 governs proceedings under S. 26-F for if S. 188 had no application to such a proceeding, the proviso to the section would not have been made applicable to a proceeding under S. 26-F (1): 1934 Cal 662, Rel. on. [P 232 C 1]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 26-F(1) and (4a)—Distinction pointed out.

The right to apply under S. 26-F (4a) to join as co-applicant in proceedings instituted under S. 26-F (1) by a cosharer is distinct from the right to institute the proceedings under S. 26-F (1). The right given under S. 26-F (4a) to join in the proceedings is given to a landlord who does not desire to pre-empt unless his cosharers insist on doing so. If therefore the result of refusing to extend the time for joining in the application be to invalidate the original application under S. 26-F (1), the other cosharers who did not apply under S. 26-F (1) will not be prejudiced. A cosharer landlord upon whom notice under S. 26 C or E of a transfer has been served, and who wishes to apply under S. 26-F (1), must give information of his application to all the cosharer landlords known to him, within such time that those cosharer landlords can, if they wish, make an application under S. 26-F (4a) and a deposit under S. 26-F (4a) within two months of the service of notice on the cosharer landlord who is applying under S. 26-F (1) or within one month of his application under S. 26-F (1) whichever is the later. If he does not give all of them the information within the time so described, his application under S. 26-F (1) should be rejected, not on the ground that it is barred by limitation, but on the ground that the conditions on which alone the application can be entertained, have not been fulfilled. Prakash Chandra Pakrashi—for Petitioner.

Ajit Mukar Dutt—for Opposite Parties.

Bireswar Chatterjee—for Deputy Registrar.

Order.—This rule arises out of an order passed in a proceeding under S. 26-F Ben. Ten. Act. Opposite party No. 1 is the transferee of an occupancy raiyati holding. Petitioner is one of the immediate cosharer landlords of that holding. On 14th May 1934 petitioner made an application under S. 26-F (1) praying that the holding be transferred to himself. The transferee and five of the petitioner's cosharers were made defendants in that application. On 21st June 1934 the transferee filed a petition of objection and pointed out therein that there were 23 cosharers of the petitioner of whom only 5 had been made parties.

On 30th July 1934 petitioner applied to add the 18 co-sharers named in the transferee's objection, as parties defendants and was permitted to do so. The Munsif who heard the application held that petitioner was well aware that he had co-sharers who were not made parties before 30th July 1934, and that as all the co-sharers were not made parties within two months of the service of notice under S. 26-C, nor within one month of the date of application under S. 26-F (1), the application was time barred. The Munsif accordingly rejected the application under S. 26-F (1). Against that order the present rule has been obtained. It has been contended on behalf of the petitioner that no period of limitation has been prescribed within which cosharer landlords are to be made parties to the proceeding under S. 26-F (1), and that the Munsif was wrong in rejecting the application on the ground of limitation. The Munsif's decision is based on an interpretation of Ss. 26-F and 188, Ben. Ten. Act, and it is with those two sections that we are concerned. In the first place the advocate for the petitioner has argued that S. 188 has no application to a proceeding under S. 26-F. He argues that S. 188 applies only to proceedings in which action by the sole landlord or by the entire body of landlords acting together is contemplated: that it does not apply to proceedings in which a single cosharer is entitled to act. Inasmuch as S. 26-F (1) permits an application by a cosharer it is not necessary for the application to be made by the whole body of landlords. I am unable to accept this view. In the first place if S. 188 had no application to such a proceeding under S. 26-F the proviso to the section would not have been made applicable to a proceeding under S. 26-F (1). In the second place it has been held in 38 C W N 634 (1) that S. 188 does govern S. 26-F and no other authority on the question has been cited. I am satisfied therefore that S. 188 governs proceedings under S. 26-F. S. 188, Ben. Ten. Act, reads as follows :

Subject to the provisions of S. 148-A, where two or more persons are cosharer landlords, anything which the landlord is under this Act, required or authorised to do must be done either by both or all those persons acting together or by an agent authorised to act on behalf of both or all of them.

Provided that one or more cosharer landlords, if all the other cosharer landlords are made parties defendant to the suit or proceeding in manner provided in sub-ss. (1) and (2), S. 148-A and are given the opportunity of joining in the suit or proceeding as co-plaintiffs or co-applicants, may (1) file an application under sub-S. (1), S. 26-F.

This section contemplates that an application to pre-empt under S. 26-F (1) shall ordinarily be made by the whole body of cosharer landlords acting together. One or more cosharers, not being the whole body of cosharer landlords, may however make an application under S. 26-F (1) provided that certain conditions are fulfilled. If those conditions be not fulfilled, such cosharers are not entitled to pre-empt under S. 26-F. The conditions to be fulfilled are (1) that all the other cosharer landlords be made parties defendant to the proceeding; and (2) that all the other cosharer landlords be given an opportunity of joining in the proceeding as co-applicants. The first of the conditions is designed to inform all the interested cosharers of the proceeding and to enable them to note the result and correct their collection papers and records if necessary. This objection would be attained if the cosharers were made parties at any time before final orders on the application were passed.

The second of the two conditions is designed to protect one cosharer against pre-emption by another cosharer. The legislature recognises that a cosharer landlord may be quite willing to allow the original transferee to remain in possession of the holding, but be unwilling to allow one of more of his co-sharers to step into the shoes of that transferee. For this reason a cosharer is given the right of joining in the proceeding as co-applicant. If however a cosharer landlord desires to join in the proceedings as co-applicant he must comply with the condition laid down in S. 26-F, sub-ss. (4-a) and (4-b). If such co-sharers do not apply within two months of the service of notice under S. 26-C or 26-E, or within one month of the application under S. 26-F (1), he has no right to join in the proceeding as co-applicant. If therefore he be not informed of the application under S. 26-F (1) in sufficient time to comply with the provisions of S. 26-F, sub-Ss. 4a and 4b, it cannot be said that he is given an opportunity of joining in the proceeding as a co-applicant. In such a case, it would follow that the conditions under which one or more co-sharers, not being the whole body of landlords, are entitled to make an application under S. 26-F (1) had not been fulfilled, and the application under S. 26-F (1) would not be maintainable.

1. Baikantha Chandra v. Samsul Haq, 1934 Cal 662=152 I C 279=61 Cal 870=38 C W N 634.

The above argument applies where notices under S. 26-C or 26-E have been duly served on all the co-sharer landlords. But as pointed out in 38 C W N 634 (1) and in 35 C W N 688 (2) the Bengal Tenancy Act does not take into account the possibility that notices may not have been duly served on all the co-sharer landlords. It has been held in the two cases referred to, that a co-sharer landlord upon whom no notice under S. 26-C or 26-E has been served, may apply under S. 26-F (1) within a reasonable time of the date of his knowledge of the transfer. None of the rulings to which my attention has been drawn, discusses the rights of such a co-sharer to join in an application under S. 26-F (4a). The Advocate for the petitioner has argued that the same principle should be applied to applications under S. 26-F (4a) as to applications under S. 26-F (1); and that it should be held that a co-sharer upon whom no notice has been served under S. 26-C or S. 26-E, may apply under S. 26-F (4a) within a reasonable time of his knowledge of the transfer. He argues further that if this view be adopted, the application of one co-sharer under S. 26-F (1) should not be rejected on the ground that the second of the two conditions laid down in the proviso to S. 188 has not been fulfilled. If the right of the other co-sharers to join in the proceedings as co-applicants has not become barred by limitation, the right to apply under S. 26-F (4a) to join as co-applicant in proceedings instituted under S. 26-F (1) by a co-sharer is distinct from the right to institute the proceedings under S. 26-F (1). The right given under S. 26-F (4a) to join in the proceedings is given to a landlord who does not desire to pre-empt unless his co-sharers insist on doing so. If therefore the result of refusing to extend the time for joining in the application be to invalidate the original application under S. 26-F (1), the other co-sharers who did not apply under S. 26-F (1), will not be prejudiced.

It is not necessary to extend the period of limitation in order to protect the interest of the co-sharer landlord upon whom no notice has been served. The extension of time is for the benefit mainly of the co-sharer landlord upon whom notice was duly served and who has applied under S. 26-F (1), but has omitted possibly deliberately to inform his co-sharer of his action. On the other hand, the extension of time allowed in 38 C W N 634 (1) and 35 C W N 688 (2) was necessary to protect the interests of the co-sharer landlord upon whom no notice was served. It is obvious that a transferee may have every justification for omitting to serve notices of the transfer on all the co-sharer landlords. If he should omit to serve notices on all, then, however justifiable the omission, he exposes himself to the liability of pre-emption by a co-sharer landlord upon whom no notice was served, for an indefinite time. There will ordinarily be less excuse for one co-sharer landlord omitting to inform the other co-sharer landlords of his intention to apply or of his application under S. 26-F (1). He will ordinarily know who his co-sharers are. He does not derive his knowledge from the conduct of the transferee. He will ordinarily be ignorant whether notices under S. 26-C or 26-E have or have not been served upon his co-sharers.

A co-sharer landlord applying under S. 26 F (1) is presumed to know the necessity of informing his other co-sharers of the application within sufficient time to enable them to comply with the conditions of S. 26-F sub-Ss. 4a and 4b. If he intentionally omits to inform them in time, there is no reason why he should benefit by the omission, possibly unintentional and excusable, of the transferee to serve notices upon other co-sharers which omission has not affected his conduct in any way. I can see no reason therefore to extend the rule laid down in 35 C W N 688 (2) to applications under S. 26-F (4a). I understand by the second condition mentioned in the proviso to S. 188 that a co-sharer landlord upon whom notice under S. 26-C or E of a transfer has been served, and who wishes to apply under S. 26-F (1), must give information of his application to all the co-sharer landlords known to him, within such time that those co-sharer landlords can, if they wish, make an application under S. 26-F (4a) and a deposit under S. 26-F (4b) within two months of the service of notice on the co-sharer landlord who is applying under S. 26-F (1).

2. Surjya Kumar v. Noabali, 1932 Cal 289=186 I O 871=59 Cal 15=35 C W N 688.

or within one month of his application under S. 26-F (1) whichever is the later. If he does not give all of them the information within the time so described, his application under S. 26-F (1) should be rejected, not on the ground that it is barred by limitation, but on the ground that the conditions on which alone the application can be entertained, have not been fulfilled.

In the present case 18 of the co-sharers were brought on to the record on 30th July 1934, i. e., more than two months after the date of the application under S. 26-F (1) and therefore necessarily more than two months after the service of notice under S. 26-C. Notice of the application was served on them after 30th July 1934. It is not suggested that they were given information of the application under S. 26 F (1) in any other manner than by service of notice after 30th July 1934. They were not therefore given an opportunity of joining in the proceedings as co-applicants. Such being the case the conditions under which petitioner was entitled to apply under S. 26-F (1) were not fulfilled, and his application was rightly rejected. This rule is discharged with costs two gold mohurs.

Appeal No. 749 of 1933, Decided on 16th May 1935, from appellate decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Burdwan, D/- 15th June 1932.

Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 50—Tenant not paying uniform rent—But this due to abatement of portion of rent on account of diminution of area and not due to variation in rent or rate of rent—Tenant is entitled to presumption under S. 50.

Where the tenant has not been paying uniform rent to the landlord but the difference in the rents paid is due only to abatement of rent on account of acquisition under Land Acquisition Act and not due to any variation in the rent, the tenant is entitled to the presumption under S. 50. [P 234 C 2]

Bijan Kumar Mukherjee and Apurba Charan Mukherjee—for Appellants.

Sarat Chandra Basak and Urukram Das Chakrabarty—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for ejectment of the defendants under S. 25 and S. 155, Ben. Ten. Act. One of the defences to the action was that the defendants were not occupancy raiyats but raiyats holding at fixed rate. The trial Court accepted this defence and dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Judge has found that the defendants are occupancy raiyats, but the Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation under Art. 32, Lim. Act. Hence the present appeal by the plaintiffs.

The Advocate for the appellants contends that the view taken by the learned Judge on the question of limitation is wrong, inasmuch as Ex. 7 would go to show that the "misuse" took place within two years before the institution of the suit. It is not necessary to express any opinion on this question inasmuch as it appears to me that the learned Judge's finding on the question of the status of the defendants is wrong. The Judge has held that the defendants failed to prove uniform payment of rent within 20 years preceding the institution of the present suit. It appears however from the Dakhilas which were granted by the plaintiffs to the defendants that the difference between the existing rent and the previous rent is due to abatement of a portion of the rent on account of a diminution in the area of the holding by acquisition under the Land Acquisition Act. The abatement given is no doubt not proportionate to the area acquired. But under S. 52, Cl. (4), Ben. Ten. Act, the amount abated from the rent shall bear the same proportion to the rent previously payable as the diminution of the total yearly value of the tenure or holding bears to the previous total yearly value thereof. There cannot be any doubt, therefore, that the difference between the existing rent and the previous rent is due only to abatement of rent on account of acquisition and not due to any variation in the rent or rate of rent. The tenant therefore is entitled to the benefit of the presumption under S. 50, Ben. Ten. Act. There being no evidence on the side of the plaintiffs to rebut the presumption, the conclusion is irresistible that the defendants are raiyats holding at fixed rate. The plaintiffs are, therefore, not entitled to get any relief in the suit. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal under S. 15, Letters Patent, has been asked for in this case and is refused.

Civil Rule No. 271 of 1935, Decided on 9th May 1935, from order of 3rd Munsiff, Pabna D/- 28th February 1935.

Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 148-A—Suit for rent under S. 148-A—Persons not impleaded as parties and claiming to be co-sharer landlords are not as matter of right entitled to intervene and be added as parties—Order bringing them on record is not justified by law.

In a rent suit, a person who is not on the record cannot intervene in a rent suit on his own application and attempt to transfer a rent suit into a title suit. There is nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act which has modified this principle, in case of persons claiming to be landlords. [P 236 C 1, 2]

Where in a suit for rent framed under S. 148-A, Ben. Ten. Act, certain persons who are not impleaded as parties claiming to be co-sharer landlords, apply to be added as parties, they are not entitled as a matter of right to intervene in the suit on their application and to be added as parties. [P 237 C 1]

Where therefore such persons are brought on record as defendants and subsequently transferred to the category of co-plaintiffs, such an order is not justified in law and although the successor of the Judge passing the order acts irregularly in vacating it, the High Court will not interfere as the applicants cannot be said to be prejudiced by the order inasmuch as there is no legal bar to their instituting a suit for establishing their title: 8 Cal 238 and 1925 Cal 743, Rel. on. Order.—A very interesting question has been raised by Mr. Hossein in this case. The question is whether certain persons who are not made parties in a suit for rent apparently framed under S. 148-A, Ben. Ten. Act, have the right to intervene in the suit on their own application. The facts are these: Opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2, who are admittedly co-owners of Touzi No. 3 of the Pabna

Collectorate and some of the joint landlords of the tenants, who are opposite parties Nos. 3 to 10, instituted a suit for recovery of their shares of the rent for the years 1337 to 1340, their shares being admittedly 8as. 13gds. odd. To the suit they made a large number of persons, who, according to them, are their co-sharers and joint landlords of opposite parties Nos. 3 to 10. Those persons are opposite parties Nos. 11 to 54. There is no controversy on the point that opposite parties Nos. 16 to 42 and 46 to 54 have still interest in the aforesaid Touzi and are some of the joint landlords of the opposite parties Nos. 3 to 10. But the controversy relates to the rights of opposite parties Nos. 11 to 15 and 43 to 45. The petitioners before me made an application to the learned Munsiff on 26th September 1934 to be added as pro-forma defendants. The position that they took up in the application is that 1 anna share of separate account No. 16 of touzi No. 3 which originally belonged to opposite parties Nos. 11 to 15 and 43 to 45 was sold at a revenue sale at which they purchased. They accordingly put in the application alleging that after the sale the opposite parties Nos. 11 to 15 and 43 to 45 had no longer any interest in the touzi and had ceased to be the joint landlords of opposite parties Nos. 3 to 10 and that the petitioners became the co-sharers landlords of the said persons from the date of the revenue sale. On 27th September 1934 the learned Munsiff granted that application and the petitioners before me were added as pro-forma defendants and the register of suits was amended accordingly. Later on the petitioners before me made a further application to the learned Munsiff for being transferred to the category of the plaintiffs. Apparently this application was made on the footing of the provisions of S. 148-A, Ben. Ten. Act.

This application was also granted and the petitioners before me were transferred as co-plaintiffs. It appears that at the time when these orders were made there was no opposition either by the tenants or the original plaintiffs or any of the pro forma defendants on the record. But it is equally clear that none of the parties consented to the said applications of the petitioners. After these orders had been passed the learned Munsiff who had seisin of the case was transferred and the matter came up before his successor-in-office, Mr. A. C. Ghose. The matter came up in this way. The petitioners before me made an application for removing from the record the names of opposite parties Nos. 11 to 15 and 43 to 45 who were pro forma defendants 1 to 5 and 29 to 31. As soon as that prayer was made it was opposed both by the original plaintiffs, namely opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2 and the pro forma defendants. The matter was heard at length and by his order dated 28th February 1935 the learned Munsiff Mr. A. C. Ghose did not accede to the prayer and came to the conclusion that the names of the petitioners had been put on the record wrongly. He virtually recalled the orders of his predecessor allowing the petitioners before me to intervene and allowing their application to be transferred to the category of the plaintiffs. This is against this order that the present rule is directed and Mr. Hossein in support of the rule takes up two points, namely that Mr. A. C. Ghose had no jurisdiction to vacate the orders passed by his predecessor and that in any event, his clients had the right to intervene in the suit and to claim relief in the suit as co-plaintiffs.

With regard to the first point, it may be that Mr. A. C. Ghose, acted irregularly when he vacated the previous orders passed by his predecessors. But in as much as the matter is before me it is open to me to consider in considering the legality of the order against which this rule is directed whether the previous orders adding the petitioners as pro forma defendants and later on transferring them as co-plaintiffs are orders which could be justified in law. As they cannot be justified in law I am bound to discharge the rule on the footing that Mr. A. C. Ghose has taken the correct view of the law. Now the position is generally this: that in a rent suit a person who is not on the record cannot intervene as a matter of right and attempt to transform a rent suit into a title suit. This position was laid down in clear terms by Field, J., in the leading case of 8 Cal 238 (1). No doubt in certain cases a tenant can defeat a rent suit by pleading that the plaintiff is not his landlord but the landlord is somebody else. If such questions are raised by the tenant in cases where it is open to him to raise such question, as for instance where the plaintiff claims to be the landlord by devolution of interest, such questions must be gone into. But even in those cases the third party in whom title is set up by the tenant has no right to intervene in the suit. This position is clearly laid down by Field, J., and this proposition is adopted with full approval by Subrawardy and Cuming, JJ., in 41 C L J 341 (2). The passage is at the bottom of p. 343 and runs as follows:

Then the learned Judge (Field, J.) proceeds to examine the English law on the point and comes to the conclusion that there is no authority for the procedure adopted by the Court, in the circumstances, of adding a third party to a rent suit for the purpose of determining the question of title raised. That case lays down the very sensible and salutary principle that in a rent suit when the defendant pleads jus tertii or right of a third party, the Court ought not to make such a third party a party in the suit and convert a suit for rent into a complicated title suit. The reasons given in support of this view are very cogent and need not be repeated here.

That being the general principle, I hold that unless there is some provision in the Bengal Tenancy Act, the petitioners before me had no right to intervene in the rent suit on their application, and the orders allowing them to intervene in the suit and subsequently to become co-plaintiffs must be held to be wrong orders. So far as the Bengal Tenancy Act is concerned, I have examined the provisions with care and the learned Advocates appearing in the case before me have also examined them with great care and I do not find anything in the Bengal Tenancy Act which has, in the case of persons claiming to be landlords, modified those general principles. There are however indications in the Act itself which would furnish a clue to the intention of the legislature. Those indications I will point out later on. Now S. 148-A says that a co-sharer landlord in certain circumstances can institute a suit for rent, and for his own share of the rent, and if he follows the procedure provided for in that section the decree that he will obtain would be a rent decree within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that is to say a decree by which he will have a first charge upon the holding or tenure. On a plaint by a co-sharer landlord framed according to S. 148-A the Court shall by summons in the prescribed form call upon the remaining co-sharer landlords made parties defendants to join in the suit as co-plaintiffs for their shares of the rent due to them in respect of the tenure or holding up to the date of the institution of the suit. If a special summons mentioned in sub-s. 2 is served and only in that contingency the co-sharer landlords who have been made defendants in the suit would be debarred from suing for their share of the rent for the period covered by the suit unless they come in as co-plaintiffs. But even if certain persons are not made defendants in the suit as co-sharers, or if made defendants in the suit, but no special summons are served on them, then there is no bar to their instituting a suit for rent for their share for the same period.

This is the position which is clear on the section itself. Who must be made defendants in their character as co-sharer landlords in a suit framed under S. 148-A, Ben. Ten. Act, would depend upon the choice and risk of the plaintiff. If he leaves some of them out, his suit may be a suit badly framed. But there is no provision in S. 148-A or any of the provisions in the Bengal Tenancy Act which allows a person who claims to be co-sharer landlord, but has been left out in the suit instituted under S. 148-A, to come in and intervene. The legislature has framed a specific provision when co-sharer tenants have been left out in a suit for rent. S. 146-B gives the right to a co-sharer tenant to come in the suit as a matter of right and on his own application. The fact that there is no corresponding provision concerning persons who claim to be co-sharer landlords and who have been left out in a suit for rent indicates that the legislature did not intend to depart from the general principle formulated by Field, J., in 8 Cal 238 (1), the principles which I have indicated above. I hold accordingly that there is no procedure by which the persons in the position of Mr. Hossein's clients can as of right come in and intervene in the suit for rent. Having regard to the provisions of S. 148-A, some of which I have noticed in my judgment, I do not see how his clients can be prejudiced by their not being allowed to intervene in the suit which has been instituted for rent by opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2. They are no parties to that suit, and no special summons had been served upon them. There is no bar, subject to the question of limitation to their instituting a suit against the tenants for their share of the rent. In any event there is no legal bar in their instituting a suit for establishment of their title to the 1 anna share against opposite parties Nos. 11 to 15, 43 to 45 and for appropriate reliefs which would compensate them. I accordingly hold that the order passed by the learned Munsiff Mr. A. C. Ghose is a correct order and in any event that order ought not to be revised inasmuch as the expunging of the names of the petitioner from the records of the rent suit has not prejudiced and will not prejudice them in any way. If their claims are not barred by time, they have their remedies and they can seek relief in proper proceedings to be instituted by them. In this view of the matter I discharge this rule, but in view of the circumstances of the case I do not make any order for costs in this rule.

Companies Act (1913), Ss. 32 (4), 77 (6), 134 (4)—Conviction under—Prosecution has only to prove that officer knowingly or wilfully authorised or permitted defaults—Offence is complete if Officer knowingly permitted defaults—Proof of authorization is not necessary.

In order that a conviction under Ss. 32 (4), 77 (6), and 134 (4) of an officer of a Company may be sustained, the only thing that the prosecution has to prove is that, that particular officer knowingly and wilfully authorised or permitted the defaults. The offence is complete if the officer of the Company knew of the defaults and permitted them, and it is not necessary to prove that he wilfully authorised those defaults. [P 238 O 1]

Order.—In this case the petitioner Ballav Das who is a Director of the Cash Insurance Bank Ltd. has been convicted under Cl. (4) of S. 32, Cl. 6 of S. 77 and

Cl. (4) of S. 134, Indian Companies Act, and sentenced to pay a fine. The Company commenced business under a commencement certificate on 16th May 1933. The statutory meeting of the Company ought to have been held on or before the 15th November 1933. Admittedly this was not held, and there can be no doubt that the petitioner knew that the statutory meeting had not been held within the time mentioned in S. 77 of the Act. The statutory report required to be forwarded under Cl. (2) of S. 77 was not forwarded to any member of the Company, and there can be no doubt that the petitioner knew of the said fact. Although the prosecution was started on 14th April 1935, the register of shareholders was not prepared in accordance with the provisions of S. 32, and there cannot be any doubt on the evidence that the petitioner also knew of the fact. The balance-sheet of the Company was not prepared and placed at a general meeting nor filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies. In fact the General Meeting was never held, and the petitioner also knew of the fact. The provisions of S. 134 were therefore not complied with. It appears that he took no steps to have the abovementioned requirements under the Companies Act complied with. Under the circumstances, it can be safely held that he permitted the defaults to continue. In order that a conviction, under these sections, of an officer of the Company may be sustained, the only thing the prosecution has to prove is that that particular officer knowingly and wilfully authorised or permitted these defaults.

The sections speak also of authorization of those defaults, but it is not necessary to prove that as the offence is also complete if the officer of the Company knew of the defaults and permitted the defaults. Although in the judgment of the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate these points are not fully stated, the evidence amply supports the conclusion which I have stated above. In this view of the matter, I uphold the conviction of and sentence passed on, the petitioner, and discharge this Rule. In the order of the learned Magistrate the conviction is stated to be under S. 34, Cl. (4) and S. 73, Cl. (3). Obviously there is a mistake here and for Ss. 34 (4) and 73 (3) it should be read as Ss. 32 (4) and 77 (6).

Civil Rules Nos. 1335 and 1336 of 1935, Decided on 13th December 1935, from order of Munsif, First Court, Balurghat (Dinajpur), D/- 27th June 1935.

Execution — Duty of Court — Executing Court should help decree-holder in realising money due on his decree—Rule of procedure should not be used for obstructing justice.

Rules of procedure are handmaids to justice and ought not to be used for obstructing justice. It is the duty of the Court executing a decree to aid the decree-holder in realising the amount due on his decree. [P 239 C 1]

A decree-holder applied for attachment of the moveables of the judgment-debtor in the first instance, and if the money was not so realised for sale of the defaulting tenure. As during pendency of the application, certain moneys due to the judgment-debtor were deposited in the Court the decree-holder applied for attachment of the moneys. As the Court said that the decree-holder could not be given the attachment of the money until the writ issued for attachment of the moveable was recalled, the decree-holder applied for recalling the writ and it was accordingly recalled. But the Court, taking the ground that there was no prayer in the application for execution for attachment of the moneys, dismissed it and the amount was withdrawn by the judgment-debtor:

Held: that the order was not justified. The Court ought to have aided the decree-holder in realising the money due on his decrees, and should not have enabled the judgment-debtor to take away the money. The Court could have allowed the decree-holder to add a prayer for the attachment of the moneys. [P 239 C 1]

Urukramdas Chakravarti — for Petitioner.

Hamidul Haq Chowdhury — for Opposite Parties.

Order.—The petitioner before me obtained a decree for rent against the judgment-debtor opposite party. He put in an application by which he wanted the moveables of the judgment-debtor to be attached in the first instance and if the money was not realised by the attachment of the moveables, he wanted to sell the defaulting tenure. While this application was pending certain moneys to which the judgment-debtor was entitled were deposited in Court. On that the decree-holder made an application for attachment of those moneys. The Munsif said that inasmuch as the writ to attach the moveables had been sent over to the Nazir, he could not allow the attachment of the moneys to be effected till that writ was recalled. On the said assurance and on the faith that the decree-holder would be given the attachment of the money, he made an application to the Court for recalling the said writ that had already been issued to the Nazir and it was accordingly recalled. But the learned Munsif then took up the attitude that inasmuch as there was no prayer in the application for execution for the attachment of the money in question, he refused the prayer for attachment of the money. Then he said that 'the execution case is dismissed for default.' Probably he was under the impression that there was no further prayer left in the execution petition after the writ of attachment of the moveables had been recalled. It is very unfortunate that the money which was lying in Court to the credit of the judgment-debtor was withdrawn before this Rule could be communicated to the lower Court.

I am unable, therefore, to deal in the present Rule with the question as to whether those moneys ought to have been attached or not. This Rule has become infructuous to that extent. But I do not feel that there was any justification for the order by which the application for execution as it was filed has been dismissed. That order must be vacated and the case sent back in order that the application for execution filed by the decree-holder may be proceeded with. If any money to the credit of the judgment-debtor hereafter comes to the Court, the said Court would give reasonable facilities to the decree-holder to add the necessary prayers in this application for execution to give him the rights to attach the moneys. After all, in this case, the Court ought to have considered that rules of procedure are handmaids to justice, and ought not to be used for obstructing justice. It ought to have aided the decree-holder in realising the money due on his decrees and should not have enabled the judgment-debtor to take away the moneys from Court thereby defeating or delaying the execution. As there was no question of limitation, I do not see what prevented the Court from allowing the decree-holder to add a prayer, namely for attachment of the said moneys

The Rules are accordingly made absolute in part, but inasmuch as the orders of the learned Munsif have placed the decree-holder in difficulties and the judgment-debtor, although he has taken full advantage of some of those orders, was not responsible for them, I would not make any order for costs in these Rules against the judgment-debtor opposite party.

R.M./R.K.

Order accordingly.

HENDERSON AND R. C. MITTER, JJ.

Kristo Kamini Debi—Decree-holder—Appellant.

v.

Girish Chandra Mondal and others—Judgment-debtors—Respondents.

Appeal No. 272 of 1934, Decided on 22nd May 1935, from appellate order of Dist. Judge, Burdwan, D/- 10th February 1934.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 29—Execution of decree stayed by injunction—Court passing order that attachment is to subsist till decision of suit by judgment-debtor and that application is to stand dismissed for time being—Order is not warranted by law—It is merely suspensory order keeping execution case pending.

Where the Court executing a decree, by reason of an injunction obtained by a judgment-debtor restraining the decree-holder from proceeding with the execution of the decree till the disposal of suit by him to have the decree set aside, passes an order to the effect that the attachment is to subsist till the disposal of the suit, and that the execution case is to stand dismissed for the time being, the order is not warranted by law and is merely a suspensory order keeping the execution case pending but off the list of pending cases only during the time during which the suit by the judgment-debtor is pending.

(b) Decree—Execution—Consideration of application suspended by reason of injunction or like obstruction—Subsequent application for execution may be treated as one in continuation or revival of previous application.

An application for execution of a decree may be treated as one in continuation or for revival of a previous application for execution, similar in scope and character, the consideration of which had been interrupted by objections and claims subsequently proved to be groundless or had been suspended by reason of an injunction or like obstruction.

(c) Limitation Act (1908), S. 15—S. 15 contemplates filing of application for execution and does not apply to any other application

—Execution suspended by reason of injunction—Subsequent application after removal of bar and to revive execution not being fresh application does not come within S. 15.

A later application for execution of a decree can in certain circumstances be treated as an application for revival or in continuation of the earlier application. S. 15 contemplates the filing of an application for execution and does not in terms apply to any other application. If therefore an application is made by the decree-holder, after the removal of the bar to execution, to revive or continue an application for execution which could not have been, by reason of the bar, proceeded with, such an application not being in terms a fresh application for execution does not come within S. 15 : 1927 All 16 (FB), Foll. [P 241 C 2]

(d) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 181—Execution of decree stayed by reason of injunction—Application only removed from list of pending cases by order not finally terminating it—Subsequent application for revival of execution—Art. 181 does not apply—No rule of limitation is prescribed for such application.

Where an execution case is pending but cannot be proceeded further by reason of an injunction and has been "struck off the file" or is removed by an order which does not terminate it finally but has the effect of removing it from the list of the pending cases, the decree-holder is not bound to apply for revival of the said proceedings after the removal or discharge of the said injunction. His application in substance only conveys to the Court the information that the bar has been removed. It is the duty of the Court to have in sight all undisposed cases and when the bar is removed to direct the party to take the necessary steps for further progress of the case. [P 243 C 1]

Such an application, therefore not being a fresh application for execution, Art. 181 does not apply to it and in regard to applications of such nature there is no rule of limitation prescribed : 31 Mad 71 ; 36 Mad 553 ; 37 Cal 796 and 8 Cal 420, Foll. ; 1920 All 174 ; 1921 All 99 ; 1926 All 409 and 1926 Pat 62, Dissent. ; 20 I C 439 and 1930 Cal 329, Commented upon.

Bejoy Kumar Bhattacharya and Bhut Nath Chatterjee—for Appellant.

Gopendra Nath Das and Jagadish Ch. Ghose—for Respondents.

R. C. Mitter, J. — This appeal is on behalf of the decree-holder and is directed against the order of the learned District Judge of Burdwan dated 10.2.1934 by which her application for execution of a decree for money which she had obtained against the respondents on 8th June 1920 has been dismissed. The appeal raises an important question of limitation on which not only the other High Courts have differed, but different views have been expressed by this Court on different occasions. The relevant facts are as follows : In 1921 the appellant applied to execute her decree. Her application for execution was numbered Title Execution No. 135 of 1921. Therein she applied for sale of some properties and in due course the said properties were attached. The judgment-debtors, however, instituted a suit against her in the year 1922 (Title Suit No. 66 of 1922) in which they prayed for setting aside her decree. In the course of that suit an injunction was applied for and obtained by the judgment-debtors restraining her from proceeding with her execution till the disposal of the said suit. On the injunction being granted the executing Court recorded an order on 19th June 1922 in the following terms:

Under order No. 7 dated 19th June 1922 passed in title suit No. 66 of 1922 the sale of this case be stayed. The attachment will continue till the disposal of the aforesaid suit. The case be dismissed for the present.

There is nothing to show that this order was passed in the presence of the decree-holder, and certainly there is nothing to show that the decree-holder was at fault or in default to merit the dismissal of her execution case. It seems to us to be one of these classes of orders, for which there is no warrant in law, frequently passed for the quarterly returns. The order had no doubt the incidental advantage of improving the Subordinate Judge's list, but it has the disadvantage of causing a great deal of difficulty and argument both in the Courts below and before us. After giving our anxious consideration to the matter, we have come to the conclusion that it is a suspensory order which kept the execution case pending, but off the list of pending cases only during the time that the aforesaid title suit of 1922 would be pending in the Court of first instance. On 10th June 1929 the said title suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance and an appeal against the decree of the said Court was dismissed on 21st July 1930. On 20th April 1933, that is beyond three years of the date of the dismissal of the title suit by the first Court, when the injunction order terminated, the appellant filed an application in the executing Court in a tabular form. Therein she mentioned some properties over and above those mentioned in her application for execution filed in 1921, which she wanted to sell for satisfaction of her decree, but ultimately she gave up those additional properties and wanted to sell only those properties which were mentioned in her application for execution filed in 1921.

In one column of the application which she filed on 20th April 1933 she stated that her application may be treated as an application for reviving Title Execution Case No. 135 of 1921, and be taken in continuation of her previous application for execution. The learned District Judge has held that after the abandonment of her claim to proceed against the additional properties her application is one in continuation of her previous application for execution filed in the year 1921. We hold that the learned District Judge is right in the view he has taken in this respect. It is well established that an application for execution of a decree may be treated as one in continuation or for revival of a previous application for execution, similar in scope and character, the consideration of which had been interrupted by objections and claims subsequently proved to be groundless or had been suspended by reason of an injunction or like obstruction. The finding of the learned District Judge in our judgment is a finding of fact and cannot be challenged by the respondent judgment-debtors.

The learned District Judge, however, held that her application of 20th April 1933 was an application for reviving Title Execution Case No. 135 of 1921, and came within the purview of Art. 181, Limitation Act, and inasmuch as the right to apply accrued on 10th June 1929, when the injunction was dissolved, it was barred by time. The question before us, in this appeal is whether this view is correct. Mr. Dass appearing on behalf of the judgment-debtors has raised a further point in support of the order appealed against. He says that after the amendment of S. 15, Limitation Act, in 1908, the doctrine of revival of execution proceedings can no longer be invoked and a decree-holder is only entitled to get a deduction of the time during which he had been restrained by an injunction from executing his decree. He says that the application for execution would have been in time if filed within three years of the date of the attachment effected in Title Execution Case No. 135 of 1921, (which was certainly before 19th June 1922), that being the last step in aid of execution plus the time during which the injunction order passed in title suit No. 66 of 1922 was in force. If this contention be accepted, certainly the decree-holder is hopelessly out of time. This further point taken by Mr. Dass may be conveniently taken up first.

Section 15, Limitation Act of 1877, applied only to suits, and limitation in case of suits only was extended when its institution was stayed by an injunction. When the law stood thus it was held that, where an application for execution of a decree was stayed by an injunction, the time during which the injunction was in force could not be excluded in computing limitation, but the Court relieved the decree-holder by treating the application for execution made after the discharge of the injunction as an application to revive or continue the previous application for execution, if it was similar in nature and scope. This doctrine could have no possible application and would not have assisted the decree-holder where an injunction was passed against him before he had made any application for execution or when there was no application for execution pending. The position was the same when the second application for execution was not similar in nature and scope to the earlier application for execution. In 1908 the scope of S. 15 was enlarged by making the section applicable also to applications for execution, and thereby the hardships caused to decree-holders in the two classes of cases last mentioned was removed. But we do not think that the enlargement of the scope of S. 15 by the Act of 1908 has superseded the principle that a later application can in certain circumstances be treated as an application for revival or in continuation of the earlier application. S. 15 contemplates the filing of an application for execution and does not in terms apply to any other application. If therefore an application is made by the decree-holder, after the removal of the bar to execution, to revive or continue an application for execution which could not have been, by reason of the bar, proceeded with, such an application not being in terms a fresh application for execution does not, in our judgment come within the section. We agree entirely with the reasons given by Lindsay, Sulaiman and Mukherjee, JJ., on this point in 49 All 276 (1). We accordingly overrule this point urged by Mr. Dass.

The question that remains to be determined, then, is whether Art. 181 applies to the application made by the appellant before us on 20th April 1933. The Allahabad High Court has taken the view that the said article applies : 42 All 564 (2) ; 43 All 383 (3) and 1926 All 409 (4). The Full Bench of the same Court has adopted the same view in 49 All 276 (1), although the said questions did not arise and was conceded by the decree-holder's advocate, as the application for revival of the execution proceedings was made within three years of the date of the discharge of the injunction. The Patna High Court has also taken the same view: see 1926 Pat 62 (5). This view proceeds upon the basis (and in our judgment can only be supported on that basis) that a decree-holder under these circumstances is bound under the law to apply for continuation of the execution proceedings after the removal of the bar. When an execution case is still pending, but cannot be proceeded with further by reason of an injunction, and has been "struck off the file," or is removed by an order which does not terminate it finally but has the effect of only removing it from the list of pending cases, we do not see why it must be said that the decree-holder is bound to apply for revival of the said proceedings after the removal or discharge of the injunction. His application in substance only conveys to the Court the information that the bar has been removed. It is also the duty of the Court to have in sight all undisposed cases and when the bar is removed to direct the party to take necessary steps for further progress of the case. For these reasons we do not agree with the view of the Allahabad and Patna High Courts. In 37 Cal 796 (6), Mookerjee and Carnduff, JJ., after noticing the doctrine of revival of execution proceedings, when the bar to execution had been subsequently removed, make the following observations at p. 805 of the report.

1. Chatter Singh v. Kamal Singh, 1927 All 16 = 100 I C 692 = 49 All 276 = 25 A L J 201 (F B).
2. Balvant Singh v. Budh Singh, 1920 All 174 = 56 I C 1006 = 42 All 564 = 18 A L J 642.
3. Madho Prosad v. Draupadi Bibi, 1921 All 99 = 61 I C 417 = 43 All 383 = 19 A L J 174.

The only reasonable view we can take of the proceedings under such circumstances is that the application of 10th February 1910 was in continuation of the application of 8th July 1909, which was in substance for revival of the application of 9th September 1908 which had been dismissed on 19th December 1908. In this view no question of limitation arises.

Although the obiter in that case that Art. 181, Limitation Act, does not apply to an application for a final decree in a mortgage suit, when the preliminary decree had been passed after the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 had come into force, was dissented from by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in 38 Cal 913 (7), affirmed by the Judicial Committee sub-nomine 42 I A 88 (8), the principle there laid down that there is no scope for the application of limitation to pending proceeding has not in our judgment been doubted either by the Judicial Committee or by decisions of this Court binding on us. That principle had been formulated by Wilson, J., in an old case. [8 Cal 420 (9)] has been repeatedly followed in this Court and has the merit of being fundamentally right. We accordingly hold that the view taken by the Madras High Court on the question which we have to decide is the correct view, and to applications of the nature which we have before us there is no rule of limitation prescribed : 31 Mad 71 (10) and 36 Mad 553 (11).

Two cases of this Court have been cited before us by the learned advocate for the respondent, which, it is said, militate against the view we are taking. They are 20 I C 439 (12) and 57 Cal 860 (13). In the first mentioned case the 'application for revival' of the execution proceedings was made within three years of the date, when what was considered by the executing Court as an order for stay of execution was removed. The observations of Richardson and Newbold, JJ., that Art. 181 was applicable to the application was therefore obiter dictum. In the case of 57 Cal 860 (13), the matter was not argued but was conceded by the advocate for the decree-holder, who seemed to have concentrated his attention on the question as to whether limitation ran from the date of the order of the first Court reversing the Court sale or from the date of the appellate Court's affirmatory order. The cases on the subject were not cited from the Bar and the learned Judges in support of their observations that, cited no authority nor noticed any. They cited the case of Madho Ram v. Nihal Chand (14), in support of the other proposition that limitation ran not from the date of the appellate order but from the date of the original order which the appellate Court had confirmed. The value of the decision in 57 Cal 860 (13), on the point we have to decide, regarded as a precedent, is in our judgment weak. We accordingly hold that the application of the appellant before us had been wrongly thrown out by the Courts below. We accordingly allow the appeal, send the case back to the Court of first instance with directions to that Court to proceed with the execution case No. 135 of 1921. The appellant will have her costs of this Court and of the Courts below. Hearing fee is assessed at two gold mohurs.

Henderson, J. — I agree, and only desire to say this. It could hardly be contended with any show of reason that an application which was filed in time, can subsequently become barred by limitation. It has however sometimes been held that after the removal of an injunction staying execution and further proceedings, the decree-holder is bound to file a petition for permission to go on with his case within three years.

This implies that a duty is cast upon the decree-holder to file such a petition. With great respect to the learned Judges who have taken that view, we are of opinion that such a petition is entirely redundant, and the decree-holder cannot be prevented from going on with his pending case in the ordinary way. Indeed in some cases it is not necessary for the decree-holder to do anything at all. For example, if the Court has directed the issue of a notice under the provisions of O. 21, R. 22, and before such notice is actually issued further proceedings are stayed, it is obviously for the Court of its own motion as soon as the bar is removed to issue the notice. Again if the judgment-debtor after receipt of such notice has been granted time to file objections and before that time has expired further proceedings are stayed, the next step after the removal of the injunction would lie with the judgment-debtor. The result is that when a decree-holder files a petition asking the Court that a pending case may be proceeded with, the Court should inquire whether there is in fact such a case pending or not. If there is, the decree-holder is obviously entitled to go on with it. If there is not, the application is clearly misconceived and would fail. But in neither case can any question of limitation arise.

Turning to the present case there is a concurrent finding that the present appellant did in fact ask to go on with a pending case. The order of the learned Munsiff that the case is dismissed for the present has no real meaning and could not reasonably be interpreted as a final dismissal of the execution case. The only object of such an order appears to be to remove the case from the pending list so that it may not be shown in the periodical returns. In this connexion I desire to emphasize what has fallen from my learned brother, with regard to the impropriety of passing such orders.

Appeal No. 730 of 1933, Decided on 21st May 1935, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, 5th Court, Dacca, D/- 4th November 1932.

Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), Ss. 76 (2) (f), 77—Only tenant is entitled to erect permanent dwelling house on holding and that too only for benefit of himself and his family—

Unrecognized transferee of a non-transferable holding has no such right.

Under S. 76 (2), sub-s. (f) and S. 77, a landlord is not entitled to prevent his tenant from erecting a permanent dwelling house whether of masonry bricks, stone or any other material whatsoever, for the tenant and his family, together with all necessary out-offices. The right to erect a dwelling house is a right belonging to the tenant and to no other and even the tenant is entitled to do so only for the benefit of himself and his family. It belongs to the tenant by virtue of his relationship to the landlord and not by virtue of his rights of occupying the land. An unrecognised transferee of a portion of a non-transferable holding does not stand to the landlord in the relationship of tenant. [P 245 C 1]

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of plaintiff's title to and recovery of Khas possession of the lands of a holding which originally stood in the name of one Hosanaddin. Hosanaddin died 20 years ago leaving 2 sons, 3 daughters and a widow. The sons are defendants 3 and 4 in the suit. After the death of Hosanaddin the lands of the holding were in the actual occupation of defendants 3 and 4, the sons of Hosanaddin. These two defendants have transferred their interest in the holding to defendants 1 and 2 by two Kobalas dated Falgun 1329 and Pous 1332. The transferees are in actual occupation of the holding. The plaintiffs in the suit are the landlords. They seek khas possession on the ground that the holding has been abandoned by the original tenants. They made a second prayer for permanent injunction restraining the defendants from erecting permanent structures on the land. The Munsiff who tried the suit came to the conclusion that the holding had not been abandoned and he rejected the prayer for khas possession. He held further that the transferees had the same right as the tenants to erect permanent structures on the lands and he refused the prayer for permanent injunction. The findings of the Munsiff were upheld on appeal. I have been asked to hold first that the holding has been abandoned by the tenants and secondly that the plaintiffs appellants are entitled to the permanent injunction prayed for. The finding of the trial Court and the lower appellate Court is to the effect that the sisters and the mother of defendants 3 and 4 had an interest in the holding and that that interest was still subsisting, that they were in possession with defendants 3 and 4 and that they were co-tenants with defendants 3 and 4 in the disputed jote.

The Advocate for the appellants had pointed out that defendants 1 and 2 are in occupation of the holding and that there is no evidence that the sisters and the mother of defendants 3 and 4 had made any arrangement whatsoever for the payment of the rent, and he argues that these facts are sufficient to establish the abandonment of the holding by the tenants. Abandonment implies a change of conduct or, at all events, of attitude on the part of the tenants. The sisters and the mother of defendants 3 and 4 were not in actual occupation of the holding before the sale to defendants 1 and 2. Defendants 3 and 4, occupied and possessed it on their behalf. The sisters and the mother did not pay the rent and there is nothing on the record to show that there has been any change in their conduct or in their attitude. Defendants 1 and 2 alleged that two of the sisters had transferred their interest to them by oral sale and that the third sister had granted a korfa settlement to these defendants. But this case was disbelieved in the lower Courts. Apparently there is no change in the conduct of the sisters and the mother of defendants 3 and 4 since the transfer by defendants 3 and 4. Whether the holding has been abandoned or not is largely a question of fact and in these circumstances I am not prepared to differ from the finding of the lower Courts. On this issue I hold that the tenancy has not been abandoned and that the prayer for khas possession was rightly rejected. The plaintiffs appellants prayed for a permanent injunction to restrain defendants 1 and 2 from erecting permanent structures on the holding. The Munsiff came to the conclusion that defendants 1 and 2 are co-sharers of the other tenants and that as the tenancy has not terminated the landlord cannot restrain the purchaser from building any pucca structures on the land which is not objected to by the other co-tenants and which was within the competence of other co-sharers to build. This finding was affirmed with some hesitation by the lower appellate Court.

Under S. 76, Cl. 2, sub-s. (f) and S. 77, Ben. Ten. Act, a landlord is not entitled to prevent his tenant from erecting a permanent dwelling house whether of masonry bricks, stone or any other material whatsoever, for the tenant and his family, together with all necessary out-offices. The right to erect a dwelling house is a right belonging to the tenant and to no other. It belongs to the tenant by virtue of his relationship to the landlord and not by virtue of his rights of occupying the land. An unrecognised transferee of a portion of a non-transferable holding does not stand to the landlord in the relationship of tenant. In my opinion therefore there is no justification for holding that the transferee has the same right as the tenant. Under S. 76, Cl. 2, sub-s. (f), it is the tenant and the tenant only who is entitled to erect such a dwelling house, and even the tenant is entitled to do so only for the benefit of himself and his family. I hold therefore that the plaintiffs were entitled to the permanent injunction prayed for. It remains to be decided however whether the permanent structures since erected by defendants 1 and 2 stand upon the lands of the holding or, as they allege, upon the lands covered by the mirash lease granted by the plaintiffs-appellants to them. A Commissioner was appointed in the trial Court to re-lay the settlement daks. The Commissioner re-laid the settlement map from two different points and arrived at two different conclusions. The learned Munsiff adopted one of these conclusions, a conclusion which indicates that the structure in question stands partly upon the holding transferred. The respondents denied that the structures stand upon the holding. The matter was not considered in the lower appellate Court and there was no finding on this point. As the building has since been erected the respondents are entitled to have this matter decided by the lower appellate Court whether in fact the structures stand wholly upon the lands of the mirash lease or partly on the lands of the holding transferred to them by defendants 3 and 4. I therefore order that the appeal be allowed in part. The prayer for khas possession is rejected. The appeal in so far as it concerns the plaintiff's prayer for permanent injunction be remanded to the lower appellate Court for determining whether the structures stand wholly within the mirash land or partly within the lands of the holding transferred by defendants 3 and 4, and not covered by the mirash lease. In the latter event the suit should be decreed. Costs of this Court as also of the lower appellate Court to abide the result.

Appeal No. 555 of 1933, Decided on 7th January 1936, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, Pabna and Bogra, D/- 5th September 1932.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 149—Appellate Court directing plaintiff to pay deficit Court-fees within particular period—Suit to stand dismissed in case of failure to pay Court-fees—Plaintiff applying for extension of time before expiry of period—Court can extend time under S. 149.

Where the appellate Court orders the plaintiff in a suit to put in additional Court-fee within a particular time and directs that in case of failure to do so on his part the suit is to stand dismissed, and the plaintiff applies for extension of time for putting in the deficit Court-fee before expiry of the period, the appellate Court has jurisdiction under S. 149 to extend the time as the appeal is not finally disposed of, before the order of extension of time is made. [P 246 C 1]

Nasim Ali, J.—This appeal is by the defendants in a suit for declaration of plaintiff's title and possession to certain lands described in the Schedule of the plaint. The trial Court decreed the plaintiff's suit on the finding that the plaintiff has title to and possession in the disputed land. On appeal by the defendants to the lower appellate Court the learned Judge has dismissed the plaintiff's claim so far the properties mentioned in Schedule Ka are concerned but has declared the plaintiff's title in respect of the other disputed properties and has passed a decree for recovery of possession after receiving additional Court-fees from the plaintiff. Hence this second appeal by the defendants. The first point urged by the learned Advocate for the appellants is that the lower appellate Court had no jurisdiction to extend the time for putting in additional Court-fees after he delivered his judgment on 5th September 1932. It appears that the learned Judge by his judgment delivered on 5th September 1932 directed the plaintiff to put in additional Court-fees within three weeks from that date. There was a further direction in the judgment that if the plaintiff failed to put in the Court-fees required within the time fixed, the suit would stand dismissed. It appears however that before the three weeks expired, the plaintiff made an application for extension of time for putting in the deficit Court-fees and his application was allowed. There cannot be any doubt therefore that under S. 149, Civil P. C., the learned Judge had jurisdiction to extend the time as the appeal was not finally disposed of before the order of extension of time was made. The second point urged by the learned Advocate for the appellants is that the lower appellate Court was wrong in throwing the onus upon the defendants. I am unable to accept this contention. It appears however from the judgment of the learned Judge that in view of the pleadings of the parties and the entire evidence in the case, he was of opinion that the plaintiff's title was proved. The finding of the lower appellate Court on the question of plaintiff's title therefore cannot be successfully challenged in second appeal. The grounds taken by the learned Advocate for the appellants therefore fail and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Henderson, J.—I agree.

Appeal No. 1317 of 1933, Decided on 11th February 1936, against decree of Dist. Judge, Pabna, D/- 27th February 1933.

Principal and Agent—Insurance Company, principal—Duties of agent not ceasing with first introduction of customer—Commissions on payments by customer cannot be claimed when agency has come to an end.

Although a contract between an Insurance Company and its agent does not contain a clause to the effect that commission is to be allowed to the agent so long as the premiums are paid and so long as the agent continues to represent the company, where there is no contract that the duties of the agent do not cease with the first introduction of the customer to the company, commissions cannot be claimed on payments made by the customer after the agency ceases: 1921 Mad 309 and Lewin's case (1871) 15 S J 828, Foll. [P 246 C 2; P 247 C 2]

Judgment.—Plaintiff's case is that he was appointed an agent by the defendant Life Insurance Company on 29th October 1918 in order to do work of Life Canvasser. He continued in the service until there was trouble between him and the company as he began to work for another Insurance Company also. The defendant company objected to this and finally terminated his services by a notice as from the end of December 1926. Plaintiff sues claiming damages for the renewal commissions which were due for the renewal of policies by clients introduced by the plaintiff, and for a further declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to such renewal commissions in future. The defence is that the plaintiff is not entitled to renewal commissions after the termination of his agency. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit accepted the defence and gave a partial decree for the sum of Rs. 33-5-0 which the defendant company was willing to pay. The plaintiff appealed and the District Judge upheld the decree of the trial Court. Hence this second appeal by the plaintiff. It is contended that in accordance with the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant company the plaintiff is entitled to renewal commissions even though his services had been terminated by the company. The Courts below have taken the view that, even after the acceptance of the policies introduced by the plaintiff, he had other works to do from time to time. On behalf of the appellant reliance is placed on Ex. 1 which embodies: "The Terms of Regulations governing Canvassers." It is pointed out that it is stipulated that the company will pay commission on proposals for Life Assurance introduced by the plaintiff and accepted by the company according to certain rates, for the first year's premium and certain other rates for subsequent years' premium or instalments paid to and received by the company. It is relevant to note however that this document is headed "Terms of Regulations governing Canvassers," thereby implying that the canvasser must continue to be such at the time at which the premia are paid and received by the company. Cl. 9 is to this effect: "The company is to be at liberty at any time to terminate the arrangement with the agent." It is contended for the respondent and, I think rightly, that this applies to the whole arrangement. For the plaintiff-appellant the argument is that in the present case the plaintiff's services were only terminated and nothing was said as to the payment of commissions which were due to him. This however appears to be wrong as para. 8 of the plaint is to this effect:

That by their letter dated 30th September 1926, the defendant company informed the plaintiff that they could not agree to continue his agency of their company after 31st December 1926, on the sole ground of the plaintiff's name having been included amongst the Special Agents of the Great Eastern Life Assurance Company Limited and refused to pay the renewal commission already earned by the plaintiff for his services in disregard of the terms of the agreement entered into by the parties to the suit.

This shows that in accordance with Cl. 9 the company in fact terminated the whole arrangement with the plaintiff. The next point is that both the Courts have found that as a matter of fact in this case, after the introduction of the clients by the plaintiff, something further remained to be done from time to time. It has been found that the plaintiffs' services were required when loans, etc., were negotiated, evidence of age on maturity of policies was being gone into, confidential enquiries had to be made when death occurred and so on. The plaintiff himself admitted in his evidence that there were other duties to be performed by him over and above such duties as those mentioned above. The learned Advocate for the appellant has referred us to certain passages in Blackwood Wright on Principal and Agent, Edn. 2, and the cases collected therein. All these cases were considered in 44 Mad 170 (1). It was there pointed out that one very important duty of the agent will always be to impress on the policy-holders the value of keeping up their premia and this is specially a work necessary for the earning of the premia. This is in accordance with Cl. 17 of the document Ex. 1. As was stated by Lord Cairns in (1871) 15 S J 828 (2) the position of a canvasser is that of an agent who, so long as he is acting for his employers, is daily or weekly soliciting advertisements or renewals. In the Madras case it so happened that there was a clause to the effect that "The commission was allowed so long as the premiums were paid and the agent continued to represent the company." It was held however upon a consideration of the authorities that, even if there was no such clause in the contract, where the duties of the agent do not cease with the first introduction of the customer to the principal, commissions are not to be claimed on payments made by the customer after the agency ceases. We consider that the present case is covered by the decision in the case mentioned above. The suit has been rightly decided. In the result the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 1790 of 1934, Decided on 24th February 1936, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, 2nd Court, Backarganj, D/- 23rd May 1934.

Minor—Decree against—Setting aside—Suit against minors and their uncle—Notice to minors and their mother duly served—Mother not defending suit—Suit conducted adequately by their uncle—Defect in representation not affecting merits—Minors held not entitled to set aside decree.

It is important that Courts should follow strictly the rules laid down for representation of minors, but it is quite another thing to say that a defect in following the rules is necessarily fatal to the proceedings. [P 248 O 2]

In a suit against two minors and their uncle, the minors were represented by their natural guardian, namely their surviving parent, the mother, and notice to the minors and their mother was duly served. The mother did not choose to defend the suit but the defence was adequately conducted by the minor's uncle, defendant. The defect in the representation of the minors did not in fact affect the merits of the case:

Judgment.—This is an appeal by two plaintiffs in a suit to set aside an ex parte decree. The facts are that the principal defendants brought a suit on 31st July 1929 for declaration of their right to the western boundary of a certain tank and for confirmation of possession of the same. The suit was instituted against the two appellants plaintiffs, who were described as minors represented by their mother as their natural guardian and also against their uncle defendant 7 who was living in joint mess with them. A summons was served upon the mother of the two plaintiffs. The mother did not appear to defend the suit. The suit however was strenuously defended by the plaintiffs' uncle, defendant 7. The trial Court decreed the suit. Defendant 7 made an appeal and the appeal being decided against him made a second appeal to the High Court. The decree of the trial Court was passed on 11th August 1930 and the present suit was instituted on 16th September 1932. The trial Court found that plaintiff 2 was in fact a major when the suit was instituted, and as the summons was served upon him and he did not defend the suit he cannot claim to set aside the decree. As regards plaintiff 1 the trial Court concluded that he was a minor though the evidence was somewhat doubtful whether he had in fact attained majority and declared that the decree was infructuous against him. In appeal it was held that plaintiff 2 was a major and that plaintiff 1 had not attained majority at the date of the suit. The Court of appeal below however considered in the circumstances of the case that plaintiff 1 was substantially represented by his uncle, defendant 7, and the nature of the case shows that plaintiff 1 was not prejudiced in any manner in the defence of the suit. On that ground the Court dismissed the suit against plaintiff 1.

In appeal the only question urged is whether the Court of appeal below was correct in the circumstances to hold that the decree was binding against plaintiff 1. It is urged, on the other side, that the parties are neighbours and the property in dispute is the bank of a tank valued at Rs. 45 only, that there was a previous dispute between the parties and it was decided in 1917 on a compromise, but that afterwards the defendants again trespassed on the land and dispossessed the other party who were forced in 1929 to institute the suit in question, that as the plaintiffs had lost their father, their mother was their natural guardian and their adult uncle defendant 7 who lived in joint mess with them was their de facto protector. Defendant 7 himself defended the suit strenuously up to the High Court. When he had failed then the present plaintiffs came forward to set aside the decree on the ground that they were minors. One of them, as stated above, was found to be a major. Numerous cases were cited on both sides. For the appellants reliance is placed on 25 C W N 525 (1), 37 C L J 496 (2), and 33 C W N 742 (3). In these cases it was held that when the minor defendant was not represented strictly according to law the suit was infructuous as against him. On the other side reliance is placed on three judgments of their Lordships of the Privy Council, namely 15 I A 195 (4) 30 I A 182 (5), and 37 I A 77 (6). In these cases their Lordships held that it is important that Courts should follow strictly the rule laid down for representation of minors, but it is quite another thing to say that a defect in following the rules is necessarily fatal to the proceedings.

In this case the plaintiffs were represented by their natural guardian, namely their surviving parent, the mother. Notice to the minors and their mother was duly served. The mother did not choose to defend the suit. It is clear that the defence was adequately conducted by the minors' uncle, defendant 7. The learned District Judge has found clearly that the defect in the representation of the minors did not in fact affect the merits of the case. In this position the learned Judge was right to hold that the minor plaintiff is not entitled to set aside the decree. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal under S. 15 of the Letters Patent is refused.

Appeal No. 29 of 1935, Decided on 7th January 1936, from original decree of President, Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, D/- 31st January 1935.

(a) Admission—Admission is presumed to be true.

What a man admits to be true must reasonably be presumed to be so. So where there is an admission made in a kabuliati, that a tenant is an occupancy tenant, the admission must be taken or at least presumed to be correct in the absence of evidence to the contrary: 29 All 184 (P C), Foll. [P 252 C 2]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 178—Acquisition of land—Compensation—Occupancy raiyat agreeing to abandon claim for compensation—Agreement is enforceable.

Even in the case of an occupancy raiyat a clause in a kabuliati with regard to the tenant abandoning any claim to compensation money is effective and does not hit in any way the provisions of S. 178, Ben. Ten. Act: 1922 Cal 187, Ref. [P 253 C 2]

(c) Calcutta Improvements Act (5 of 1911)—Preamble—Acquisition made by trustee is acquisition for Government.

Acquisition of land made by the Calcutta Improvement Trust under the Calcutta Improvement Act amounts to acquisition made by or on behalf of the Government. [P 254 C 2]

(d) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 178—Tenancy held from month to month—Clause in tenancy that tenant is not to claim compensation in case of acquisition—Clause held is not inconsistent with tenancy—Tenant making improvements on holding—Tenant can claim compensation for improvements.

A clause that tenant is not to receive any compensation in case the acquisition of land is made by Government or Municipality is not inconsistent with the nature of the tenancy, namely the tenancy being one from month to month. The clause regarding the non-taking of compensation cannot be said to be a clause which is collateral to the ordinary incident of the holding. But the clause does not preclude the tenant from claiming such part of the compensation as has been the result of the improvements on the land made by the tenant; in other words such part of the compensation as has been the result of improvements which have enhanced the market value of the land: *Bradbury v. D. N. Mitter, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal dated 31st January 1935 and arises out of a dispute with regard to apportionment of the compensation money which has been awarded by reason of compulsory acquisition under the Calcutta Improvement Act of 1911. It appears that the land in question, which consists of about six bighas in area, was required for the purposes of a certain improvement scheme, and the value of the land, which is premises No. 25, Lake Road, was assessed at (including the statutory allowance) Rupees 1,12,700, and the value of the structures and trees in the premises in question with the statutory allowance was assessed at Rs. 1769.12.10. At the time of the declaration the tenant one Radhanath Maity who was claimant No. 2 before the Collector, was in possession. The whole of the sum of Rupees 1,12,700 was awarded to the landlord claimants who are the respondents before us and the sum of Rs. 1,769.12.10 was given to Radhanath, the tenant. The tenant was dissatisfied with the award of the Collector and there was a reference both as regards valuation and apportionment. We are not now concerned with the question of the amount of compensation which has been awarded. The only dispute before us is with regard to the apportionment of the compensation awarded. The tenant claimed that he was an occupancy raiyat on the land at the time of the acquisition and that therefore on the principle accepted by this Court he is entitled to half the compensation which has been awarded in favour of the landlord claimants. This position was not accepted by the learned President of the Tribunal who has confirmed the award of the Collector and has dismissed the reference made at the instance of Radhanath Maity, the appellant before us. Hence the present appeal by claimant No. 2.

In appeal before us Mr. Pugh who has appeared for claimant No. 2, has raised several contentions. He has contended in the first place that the land in question was agricultural land in the year 1906 when the kabuliat was executed in favour of the landlord by the present claimant, and that before the actual execution of the kabuliat, his case is, Radhanath or rather his predecessor-in-interest was for more than 12 years in occupation of this land and has acquired a right of occupancy to the same. Alternatively, the contention is that in any event Radhanath was before the execution of the lease in 1906 a non-occupancy raiyat on the land and that having regard to the provisions of S. 178, Ben. Ten. Act it was not permissible to the landlord to grant a lease or to take a kabuliat by which the rights of Radhanath Maity under the Bengal Tenancy Act could be jeopardized. His contention in substance is that by this document of 1906, to which reference will be made hereafter, it was not open to the respondents, the landlords, to defeat the rights of the appellant under the Bengal Tenancy Act and the document consequently being out of the way as Radhanath since the date of the lease in 1906 was in occupation of the land for more than 12 years he had acquired a right of occupancy in the land acquired and the apportionment of the compensation money should have been on that basis. The next argument is based on a clause in the kabuliat of 1914 which has been marked as Ex. B (see p. 63 of the second part of the paper-book), namely that in the case of the acquisition of the land by the Government or Municipality, the tenant would not be entitled to get any compensation in respect thereof. It is argued that in accordance with the terms of this kabuliat the tenant precluded himself from getting any portion of the compensation money in cases of acquisition being made only by the Government or by the Municipality, and as the acquisition was not made by the Government but by a board of trustees of the improvement of Calcutta this clause does not prevent the tenant, now appellant, from making a claim with regard to the compensation money. The first two contentions have been negatived by the learned President of the tribunal. With regard to the last contention, namely that the acquisition was not by the Government but by the board of trustees appointed under the Calcutta Improvement Act of 1911, it appears that no such ground was taken before the President of the tribunal nor is there any indication of such a ground in the memoranda of appeal before us. Mr. Pugh has however handed over to us the written argument which was supplied to the President by Mr. Shasmal, counsel for his client, which will show that this point was indicated in those notes which were presented to the learned President and which he afterwards returned to Mr. Pugh's client. The fourth point taken is with reference to the compensation which Mr. Pugh's client claims on account of the improvements which have been effected on the land since the taking of the kabuliat by Radhanath Maity. The learned President has noticed this point and has refused to give any compensation to the appellant on the ground that there is not even an iota of evidence to guide the Court in the assessment of such improvement of the land and also on the further ground that Radhanath himself had given up all rights with regard to the compensation for the land by Ex. B.

In order to understand the contentions raised on behalf of the appellant it would be necessary to state a few salient facts relating to the history of this land prior to 1906. It appears that a kabuliat was executed by one Uday who is the father-in-law of the appellant Radhanath in favour of the landlord on 1st Magh 1304 B. S. corresponding to 22nd January 1898. This lease was for a term of three years: see Ex. G printed at p. 26 of the second part of the paper-book. It will appear from an examination of this kabuliat that it was in respect of Bastu land. The lessee states this:

I having applied to your Sarkar for being granted a settlement for the purpose of dwelling and residing as a temporary tenant at will, of one plot of about 6 B. 8 K. of land more or less, lying in holding No. 186, Division 6, Sub-Division Q, and within the boundaries given in schedule below out of the Lakheraj lands and Jamas which you have in Mouza. Panditia, Monoharpur village, appertaining to Dihi Panchannagram, within Pargana Khaspur, in District 24-Pargannas, Sub-District Alipore, under thana Tallygunge, you granted my prayers and settled Rs. 51 (fifty one rupees) as annual rent for the said 6 B. 8 K. of land and I give in writing this temporary kabuliat for the term of three years after accepting temporary patta to the effect that I shall pay the amount of rent into your Sarkar.

It is clear from this recital that this was a temporary lease which was given for the purpose of residence. It appears that Uday died in Asar 1305 corresponding to some time in 1899 and he was survived by his son Ganesh. On 21st December 1899 Ganesh executed a kabuliat in favour of the proprietor Khento Kali Deb and others: see Ex. H printed at p. 29 of the second part of the paper-book. Here again the recitals show that a temporary lease was being granted for the purpose of dwelling and residing as such. It appears from this document that there were certain trees on the land for there are some provisions with regard to the trees in this document. This kabuliat was taken for a term of five years and the effect of this kabuliat expired on 21st December 1904 corresponding to the 7th Pous 1311 B. S. It appears that in the meantime before the expiry of this lease Ganesh died in Chaitra 1306 leaving a son Ananta who was an infant at that time. It appears from the evidence that Radhanath Maity, the appellant in the present case, was looking after this infant son of Ganesh and the receipts show that the landlords granted receipts in respect of the tenancy which stood in the name of Ganesh and Radhanath was described as Sarbarakar: see Ex. D-8, D-11, which are printed at pp. 3 and 4 of the second part of the paper-book. Apparently, after the expiry of this lease on 22nd December 1904 Radhanath continued to be in occupation of the land which he claimed to be in his own account and in his own right. The contention in this behalf is that he was really inducted on this land without execution of any kabuliat, and evidence to this effect has been led, and reliance has been placed on some evidence which has been given on behalf of claimant No. 1 by witness 1: see p. 61 about p. 62, line 44 and p. 63, top of the first part of the paper-book. At this time, it is stated, the Bengal Tenancy Act was in operation in this area for it appears that the area on which this land is situated came to be included within the Municipality in the year 1907. The first kabuliat which was executed by Radhanath Maity the appellant in favour of the landlords Khento Kali Debe and others is dated 18th April 1906 corresponding to 5th Baisakh 1330 B. S: see Ex. A, page 60 of the second part of the paper-book. This was for a term of five years. It will be necessary to consider the provisions of this document as some of the questions which have been argued turn on the construction to be put on this kabuliat. It appears from the recitals to which we will just now refer that this kabuliat was taken for the purpose of dwelling and residence as Bharatia tenancy-at-will for a term of five years. There was a clause also to the effect that the tenant will not be competent to dig or sell earth, nor shall he be competent to allow anybody else to dig or sell earth. The clause is in the following term:

I shall not be competent to dig or sell earth, nor shall I be competent to allow anybody else to dig or sell earth. I shall be competent to enjoy the fruits only of the trees, etc., that are in existence now. I shall not be competent to cut down or sell them.

There was a clause that on the expiry of the term it will be open to the landlord to let out and to make fresh settlements. After the expiry of the term of this kabuliat in 1911 it appears that Radhanath Maity continued to occupy this land and he executed a second kabuliyat in favour of Benoy Kumar Mukherjee on 30th June 1914 corresponding to 16th Asar 1321 B. S. This lease has been marked as Ex. B, see p. 63 of the second part of the paper-book. The kabuliat also recites that this was a temporary Bharatia tenancy at will in respect of 6 bighas 8 cottas of rent-paying land. It contains further an important clause about which there has been some discussion as to the question as to whether having regard to that clause the appellant is entitled to any compensation. That clause runs as follows:

Further be it mentioned that if the Municipality or the Government acquires the said land at any time for any purpose, then you shall get the compensation awarded therefor. I shall not have any concern therewith, and if some portion of the said land be acquired then I shall not get abatement of rent therefor. After the expiry of the term, I shall give up (the said land) without any notice and without any objection.

The third kabuliat was executed in favour of Benoy Krishna Mukherjee on 22nd April 1916 by Radhanath and the terms of this kabuliat, which has been marked as Ex. 2 and printed at p. 67 of the second part of the paper-book, are similar to the terms of the previous kabuliat of 1914. It contains the same clause about the tenant not being entitled to get any compensation in case of acquisition by either Government or Municipality. It is said, however, that this kabuliat was not acted upon. The rent stated in this kabuliat was a sum of Rs. 300, per year and it seems to be the case of both parties that no effect was given to this kabuliat. So it appears clear that Radhanath clearly continued to occupy this land after the expiry of the effective kabuliat, Ex. B, the terms of which expired on 30th June 1919.

We have no doubt, having regard to the object and purpose for which these kabuliats were executed by the tenant in favour of the landlord, that the lease was given for dwelling and residential purposes. It is undoubtedly true that some evidence was given on behalf of the landlord which would go to show that even after the granting of the first lease in favour of Uday a portion of the land in question was being cultivated and paddy was being grown as also other vegetables; and it is argued on the basis of this evidence on behalf of the appellant that having regard to the fact that a large portion of the land was cultivated with paddy and other vegetables by the tenant who for the time being was occupying this land it must be taken that the lease was taken for agricultural purposes, and that this land was agricultural land. It is not possible to accede to this contention. The terms of the different kabuliats to which reference will be made are absolutely clear on the point, namely, that the lease was for dwelling and residential purpose and that the terms of these leases cannot possibly make the tenancy of a raiyat within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The word 'raiya' has been defined in S. 5 of the Act and the word means primarily a person who has acquired a right to hold land for the purposes of cultivating it either by himself or by members of his family or by servants or labourers or with the aid of partners, and includes also the successors-in-interest of persons who have acquired such right.

The relevant kabuliats show that these kabuliats were taken not for the purpose of cultivating the land in the various ways mentioned in S. 5 (2), Ben. Ten. Act. Mr. Pugh realized the difficulty of his position having regard to the terms of this kabuliat and the case which was put forward before us therefore was that between the expiration of the lease of Ganesh in 1904 and the actual execution of the kabuliat by Radhanath in 1906. Radhanath was really holding these lands as a non-occupancy raiyat, the land apparently being according to his contention agricultural land, and he wanted to support this position by the evidence of Bhabataran Basu, the agent of the landlords, that excepting 10 or 12 cottas of land, which was not under cultivation the rest was under cultivation. It is difficult to accept the position taken up in this Court, namely, that Radhanath was really a non-occupancy raiyat seeing that it is in direct conflict with the admission made in the kabuliat which was executed in 1906, and which must be taken or at least presumed to be correct in the absence of evidence to the contrary, for it is now well established that what a man admits to be true must reasonably be presumed to be so. See the observations of their Lordships in 29 All 184 (1). The admission is undoubtedly not conclusive and may be shown to be wrong. But the mere fact that the land to the extent of major part of it was under cultivation does not shift the burden on to the other side of showing that notwithstanding the admission the land was given for cultivating purposes. Very strong evidence would be necessary for the purpose of showing that the tenancy was of a kind different from that indicated in the several kabuliats to which reference has been made.

It cannot be contended having regard to the authorities that the mere fact that, notwithstanding the terms of the kabuli-that the lands were put to a different use, namely, that they were cultivated, would render the lands agricultural lands in which the person in occupation would acquire either a non-occupancy right or a right of occupancy by occupying the same for more than 12 years. We have to consider for the purpose of judging as to whether the tenants on the land were raiyats, whether or not the object, with which these kabuliyats were executed or leases granted was one which brings them within the meaning of S. 5, Ben. Ten. Act. After a careful consideration of the question we are of opinion that the express object with which the lease was given was for dwelling and residential purpose, and these tenancies therefore are governed by the Transfer of Property Act and not by the Bengal Tenancy Act.

An attempt was made in this Court to show that even during the continuance of the lease in favour of Ganesh after Ganesh's death Radhanath was holding the lands in his own rights and it is pointed out that he was paying rent to the gomostha before the execution of the kabuliyat in 1906. It is argued that the tenancy being shown to be in the name of the deceased person Ganesh Chandra Mandal it must be taken on the authorities that he was being recognized as a tenant in his own rights, and we are referred to an unauthorized report reporting the case of Bali Mahammad v. Janati Nath, 1924 Cal 535 (2). This case lays down the proposition that where rent receipts are issued in the name of another person after the death of the last tenant and rent is accepted from him the person from whom the rent is accepted should be regarded as a tenant. The distinction between the facts of that case and the facts of the present case is obvious. It appears from the evidence which has been given by Bhabataran that Radhanath was looking after the infant son of Ganesh and it was really in that capacity, namely, as the de facto guardian of the infant son, that Radhanath was allowed to occupy this land. This witness Bhabataran says this:

Ganesh was in possession for two or three years after Ganesh's death, and during the subsistence of Ganesh's lease, Radhanath came to us with Ganesh's son, Ananta and said that as Ganesh was dead, and he had to look after Ananta the land should be given to him and therefore the maliks, namely, Krishna Babu, Benoy Babu and Anath Babu said that till the remaining period of Ganesh's lease, Radhanath could be in possession of the land.

Looking closely to this evidence there can be no doubt that Radhanath was occupying this land in the character of de facto guardian of Ganesh's son Ananta. This distinguishes the present case from the case reported in All India Reporter 1924, Calcutta. We are referred by the respondents to two cases with regard to the question as to whether the terms regarding compensation money in the lease, the kabuliat of 1914 could be effective if the position be accepted that the tenancy is governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the face of what we have stated it is not necessary to deal with the question, but as the matter has been argued before us we may state here that even in the case of an occupancy raiyat the clause with regard to the tenant abandoning any claim to compensation money has been held to be effective and not to be hit in any way by the provisions of S. 178, Ben. Ten. Act. We may refer in this connexion to the case of 35 C L J 133 (3), where Asutosh Mukerjee and Buckland, JJ., held that an agreement that an occupancy raiyat will not in the event of acquisition by the Crown, claim a share of the compensation money is legal and enforceable. It is further held that such a covenant not affecting the title or status of the raiyat is not affected by Cl. (a), S. 178, Ben. Ten. Act. The question which we have to decide in the first instance is as to whether having regard to this clause about compensation to which we have already referred (Ex. B) the tenant is entitled to get any compensation in respect of this land. The argument on this head falls under two distinct categories.

It is argued in the first place that the clause cannot affect the tenant in the present case as the tenancy is not acquired either by the Government or by the Municipality, within the meaning of the clause, and under the second category or head it has been argued that even assuming that this clause would cover the case of acquisition made by the Board of Trustees for the improvement of Calcutta this, not being an ordinary incident of the holding, cannot be a stipulation which will be binding on a tenant who holds over after the expiry of the lease it being argued that the agreement as to the taking of compensation money is in the nature of a collateral agreement. With regard to the first contention we think that this contention cannot be given effect to if we keep in view the object with which this land was acquired, namely for the purpose of the improvement of the town of Calcutta. Having regard to the provisions of the Calcutta Improvement Act and the Land Acquisition Act as amended by the Act of 1911 it appears clear that the acquisition was really made by the Government. The Calcutta Improvement Act was an Act to provide for the improvement and expansion of the town of Calcutta, and it appears from the preamble that whereas it was expedient to make provision for the improvement and expansion of Calcutta by opening up congested areas, laying out or altering streets, providing open spaces for purposes of ventilation or recreation, demolishing or constructing buildings, acquiring land for the said purposes and for the re-housing of persons of the poorer and working classes displaced by the execution of improvement schemes, and otherwise, and whereas it was expedient that a Board of Trustees should be constituted and invested with special powers for carrying out the objects of this Act that the enactment of the Calcutta Improvement Act was passed. The Board of Trustees for the improvement of Calcutta was a body which was a statutory body appointed under the provision of the Calcutta Improvement Act. The method of acquisition is stated in S. 69, Calcutta Improvement Act, which states that the Board may with the previous sanction of the Local Government, acquire land under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 for carrying out any of the purposes of this Act. Under S. 16, Land Acquisition Act, the land, after the award is made, vests absolutely in the Government free from all encumbrances. S. 16 runs as follows: "When the Collector has made an award under S. 11, he may take possession of the land, which shall thereupon vest absolutely in the Government, free from all encumbrances." Under S. 17-A, Land Acquisition Act of 1894, which is the result of the amendment by Act 5 of 1911 it is enacted as follows:

In every case referred to in S. 16 or S. 17

the Collector shall, upon payment of the cost of acquisition, make over charge of the land to the Board (meaning apparently the Board of Trustees for Improvement of Calcutta) and the land shall thereupon vest in the Board, subject to the liability of the Board to pay any further costs which may be incurred on account of its acquisition.

Having regard to the clear principles of S. 16, Land Acquisition Act, which has been made applicable to the acquisition for the expansion and improvement of Calcutta we have no doubt that this is an acquisition by Government and therefore under the clause in question the tenant is not bound to be given any compensation which is offered on the acquisition for the improvement of Calcutta. When we say any compensation we mean any compensation which is due to the value of the land in its unimproved state. We shall have to develop this a little when we deal with the question of the value of the improvement, which is raised in the fourth ground before us. This disposes of the first ground with regard to the clause about compensation. The second head of the argument is this: that the clause with regard to compensation cannot bind a tenant and that when a tenant holds over after the expiry of the lease he does so on the same terms and stipulations meaning them thereby to be such stipulations as are the ordinary incidents of the holding. After the expiry of the lease it appears that the possession of Radhanath was that of a tenant from month to month, and he is undoubtedly bound by such stipulations after the expiry of the lease as are consistent with the stipulations of a monthly tenancy. As is put in the very well-known book of Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, third edition (1934) at p. 275:

When a tenant for a term of years holds over after the expiration of his lease, he becomes a tenant on sufferance, but when he pays or expressly agrees to pay any subsequent rent, at the previous rate, a new tenancy from year to year is thereby created upon the same terms and conditions as those contained in the expired lease so far as the same are applicable to and not inconsistent with a yearly tenancy.

The clause that a tenant is not to receive any compensation in case the acquisition is made by Government or a Municipality is not inconsistent with the nature of the tenancy, namely the tenancy being one from month to month. The clause regarding the non-taking of compensation cannot be said to be a clause which is collateral to the ordinary incidents of the holding. The real test is as to whether this is a clause which has really the effect of affecting the tenancy so long as it exists. We do not see anything inconsistent in this clause with the precarious nature of the tenancy. In the books are to be found clauses which have been held to be collateral to the ordinary incidents of the holding. As for instance the option of the lessee to purchase the reversion has been held to be a provision outside the terms which regulate the relations between the landlord as landlord and the tenant as tenant, and is not one of the terms of the original tenancy which bound the tenant holding over after the expiration of the lease. As has been put in some of the English cases such an option really is inconsistent with the existence of the tenancy but is consistent with the destruction of the tenancy. See the case of (1920) 2 Ch D 548 (4) and the case of (1924) 2 Ch D 440 (5). In the first mentioned case Peterson, J., observed:

An option contained in a lease to purchase the reversion and so destroy the tenancy is not one of the terms of the tenancy. It is a provision outside of the terms which regulated the relations between the landlord as landlord and the tenant as tenant, and is not one of the terms of the original tenancy which will be incorporated into the terms of the yearly tenancy created by the tenant holding over after the expiration of the lease.

Having regard to the true test as laid down in the case which we have just mentioned we are of opinion that this clause regarding the abandonment of compensation money is not in any way inconsistent with the condition under which the tenancy was held under the previous kabuliyat of 1906. This clause does disentitle a tenant to claim any compensation which might be given on the acquisition of the land; subject to this the clause does not preclude the tenant from claiming such part of the compensation as has been the result of the improvements on the land made by the tenant; in other words such part of the compensation as has been the result of improvements which has enhanced the market value of the land. This disposes of the first three grounds taken on behalf of the appellant. It remains to consider now the last ground taken, namely that the president of the tribunal has gone wrong in not awarding any sum of the compensation which has been awarded in this case for the improvements which have been effected by the tenant. The learned president says that the tenant has not put before him an iota of evidence to guide the Court in assessment of such improvements on the land.

It is not exactly right to say that there is no evidence because Radhanath himself deposed in the case and he states that he spent a large sum of money which is about Rs. 25,000 for the improvement. That undoubtedly is a very exaggerated estimate of costs which he had to incur for effecting the improvements, which have been admitted on the side of the landlords, on the land. Indeed it is difficult to accept this statement with regard to the large sum that is said to have been spent for these improvements in the absence of books of account. The only tangible evidence which we have got in regard to this matter from the side of the landlords is that an area of about 2½ bighas was improved in this sense that its level was raised to a considerable height, and that must have meant surely some expenditure. It is true that this is a lacuna or defect of material on which to assess the compensation, but we can proceed by accepting the position as has been admitted on behalf of the landlords. Our attention has been drawn to the statement that 2½ bighas were improved by having the level raised to some height and that circumstance must have influenced the Land Acquisition Authorities in giving a higher value in respect of this piece of land. The Court can certainly arrive at a figure and we think that a little over Rs. 500 per bigha should be awarded to the tenant appellant on this head. We assess the compensation which the appellant is entitled to at Rs. 1,350, with 15 per cent. as the statutory allowance which amounts to Rs. 202-8-0. The appellant is thus entitled to Rs. 1,350 plus Rs. 202-8-0, that is Rs. 1,552-8-0 over and above the compensation which has been awarded to him in this case by the Court below on account of trees and huts. The landlords are entitled to withdraw the compensation money awarded to them by the Court below less the sum of Rs. 1,552-8-0. Each party is to bear its own costs throughout. Let the Appeal No. 672 of 1934, Decided on 13th February 1936, from appellate decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Howrah, D/- 8th November 1933.

(a) Religious Endowment — Alienation — Shebait Gomasta—Power to grant lease—Legal necessity must be for the benefit of estate.

Shebait Gomasta of the Debuttar property is not competent to grant perpetual lease of the land except for imperative legal necessity for the benefit of the estate, such as the preservation of the estate from extinction, defensive litigation and protection from injury and deterioration: 13 M I A 270 (P C); 1917 P C 33; 2 I A 145 (P C) and 6 M I A 393 (P C), Foll. [P 258 C 1, 2]

(b) Religious Endowment — Alienation — Legal necessity—Permanent lease granted—Entire amount raised must be necessary to meet actual pecuniary pressure on estate.

Shebait granting permanent lease at fixed rent must, in order to prove compelling legal necessity, show that the entire amount raised as Selami was necessary to meet the actual pecuniary pressure on the estate. Also he must show that the amount actually required for meeting the pressing need of the estate could not be raised by a lease for a term or even in perpetuity at variable rent. [P 258 C 1]

(c) Practice—Appellate Court — Reversal of findings—Appellate Court must consider relevant evidence in the trial Court.

When the appellate Court reverses the findings of the trial Court it must consider and discuss the relevant evidence in the trial Court where the conclusions of the trial Court mostly depend upon the oral testimony of witnesses. [P 258 C 2]

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for possession, damages and for mesne profits. The plaintiff's case, briefly stated, is as follows: The disputed land measuring about 1 bigha 15 cottas in area is the Debuttar property of Sri Sri Sridhar Jiu Thakur of the Roys of Tajpur in the District of Howrah. The members of the Roy family are many and four elderly members of the four main branches of the family jointly look after the Debuttar estate, and carry out litigations in respect of the same. If any property appertaining to the Debuttar estate is to be leased out the managing shebait obtains the consent of all the shebaites residing at Tajpur, and after publication of notice and announcement by beat of drum settle the same. One Golok Moira and his descendants were Chakran tenants of the disputed land under the Debuttar estate. The family of the Moiras gradually became extinct and the last holder surrendered the land and left the village. The land thereafter remained in the khas possession of the Thakur. Defendant 2 was temporarily entrusted with the supervision of the work of the gomasta of the Debuttar property. Taking advantage of his position he got a kabuliyat secretly executed by his own relation, defendant 1, on 8th Baisakh 1336 B. S. in the name of defendants 3, 4 and 5 and the late Lalit Mohan Roy, the four managing shebaites of the Debuttar estate, without their consent and knowledge.

The other shebaites including the plaintiffs were not aware of this settlement. The kabuliyat was registered on 17th May 1929. Defendant 2 thereafter erected temporary huts on the disputed land and is illegally possessing the same. The rent fixed in the kabuliyat is a nominal rent and the term of the kabuliyat is indefinite. The plaintiffs never accepted defendant 1 as tenants; nor did they authorise the gomastha of the Debuttar estate to grant dakhilas to him. Defendant 2 being himself a shebait acted, in breach of trust, in taking the kabuliyat in the name of defendant 1. The kabuliyat is therefore void. As the shebaites are numerous and as it is not possible to serve the summons on all the shebaites the suit has been brought by two of the shebaites on behalf of the Thakur, under the provisions of O. 11, R. 8, Civil P. C. The defence of defendants 1 and 2 is as follows: The majority of the members of the Roy family do not reside at Tajpur. As it is not possible to obtain consent of all the shebaites in matters relating to the management of the Debuttar estate the practice is to entrust one shebait residing at Tajpur to look after the Debuttar property. Before any Debuttar property is leased out, his duty is to consult all the shebaita residing at Tajpur and to announce it by notice and beat of drum. The documents however are taken in the names of four persons representing the four main branches of the Roy family. Golak and his descendants held the disputed land at a money rent of Rs. 3. The land became khas after the extinction of Golak's family and in spite of best efforts no tenant was available. At the time of the settlement of the disputed land one Ganesh was entrusted with the supervision of the Debuttar estate.

There was a pressing need for money for meeting the expenses of many litigations concerning the Debuttar estate. The shebaita repeatedly asked Ganesh to let out the land in kaimi right by taking selami. After consulting defendants 3 to 5 and Lalit Mohan Roy and other shebaita residing at Tajpur, there was publication of notice and announcement by beat of drum about the intended settlement. Bibhuti Roy, son of defendant 2, offered the highest bid, paid a selami of Rs. 201 and took the bandobast at a rental of Rs. 5 in the name of defendant 1; and in accordance with the practice a kabuliyat was taken in the name of the representatives of the four branches of the family. With the money obtained as selami Ganesh met the costs of the litigation relating to the Debuttar property without any objection from any of the Shebaita. The settlement had thus benefited the Debuttar estate. Bibhuti was subsequently added as defendant 2-Ka. He filed a written statement supporting defendants 1 and 2. The other defendants did not contest the suit. The findings of the trial Court are these: (1) No litigation was pending at the time of the settlement. (2) There was no want of money. (3) The practice regarding the settlement of Debuttar land was not followed at the time of settlement. (4) All the managing Shebaita did not consent to the settlement. (5) No selami was paid. (6) The kabuliyat was taken secretly and the settlement was not at all bona fide. On these findings the suit was decreed by the trial Court.

Defendant 2-Ka appealed to the lower appellate Court. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal came to the conclusion that there was legal necessity for granting the permanent lease on the following facts: (1) Some rent suits were pending in which the deity was the plaintiff. (2) An execution case in which the deity was the decree-holder was also pending. (3) Money was required for the conduct of the above cases and the gomastha in charge of them was making repeated demands for money. (4) Less than one rupee was in the coffer of the deity. He also found that the selami was paid as alleged by the defendants; that the receipt of the selami was acknowledged by the four managing shebaita and nine other shebaita by Ex. G; that the plaintiff was present at the time of the settlement and that he was one of the intending lessees; that the plaintiff had failed to show that any other shebaita was left out or not consulted that the procedure obtaining in the Debuttar estate in making settlement of land was followed and that the entire body of shebaita residing at Tajpur for the time being made the settlement. He accordingly allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiffs appeal to this Court.

The first contention of the learned Advocate for the appellant is that Ex. G is not admissible in evidence inasmuch as it is not registered in accordance with the provisions of the Registration Act. By S. 17 (1) (c), Registration Act, a non testamentary instrument which acknowledges receipt of payment of any consideration on account of creation, declaration, assignment limitation or extinction of any such right, title or interest is compulsorily registrable. Ex. G is a receipt which acknowledges receipt of Rs. 201 as selami for a permanent lease of the disputed land. It therefore required registration. It is, therefore, not admissible in evidence to prove that any consideration was paid as selami for the permanent lease alleged to have been granted by the shebaita. The next point urged by the learned Advocate for the appellant is that on the facts found by the learned Judge the lease cannot be said to have been granted for legal necessity.

"To create a new and fixed rent for all time to come, though adequate at the time, in lieu of giving the endowment the benefit of an augmentation of a variable rent, from time to time would be a breach of duty in a shebaita." See the case in 13 M I A 270 (1) at p. 275. But there would be no breach of duty if the shebait is constrained to do so by unavoidable necessity. The principle applies equally to agricultural lands and building sites in villages: see the case in 44 I A 147 (2). The authority of a shebait is analogous to that of a manager of an infant heir. It can only be exercised rightly in a case of need or for "the benefit of the estate." The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred, are the criteria to be regarded: see the cases in 2 I A 145 (3) and 6 M I A 393 (4). It is not possible to state precisely the meaning of the words "benefit to the estate." The reported cases show that preservation of the estate from extinction, defence against hostile litigations affecting the estate, protection of the estate or portions of it from injury or deterioration by inundation, have been taken as "for the benefit of the estate." The shebait is not entitled to sell a Debutter land solely for the purpose of investing the sale proceeds for a larger income than what was being derived before.

Again in order to show imperative necessity compelling the shebait to grant a permanent lease at a fixed rent it must be found that the entire amount raised as selami was necessary to meet the actual pecuniary pressure on the estate. It must also be shown that the amount actually required for meeting the pressing need of the estate could not be raised by a lease for a term or even in perpetuity at a variable rent. The findings of the learned Judge do not show what was the amount which was actually necessary for meeting the costs of the litigation pending at the time. It has not been found that there was no immediate prospect of getting sufficient money from the rents and profits of the debutter estate and that unless money had been immediately raised the rent suits and the execution case would have been dismissed. There is also no finding to the effect that the actual amount necessary could not be raised by giving a lease for a term or in perpetuity with variable rent. The learned Judge, in my opinion, did not correctly appreciate the real nature of the controversy between the parties on this point.

The last contention of the learned Advocate for the appellant is that in reversing the findings of fact arrived at by the trial Court the learned Judge did not at all consider the reasons given by the trial Court and that he did not at all apply his mind to the evidence on which the trial Court had based its findings. This contention is well founded. As regards the question whether the practice prevalent in connexion with the granting of settlements was followed by the shebait in the present case the trial Court in a very careful judgment, after considering all the relevant evidence, came to the conclusion that the practice was not followed. The learned Judge without advertting to the reasons given by the trial Court, and the evidence on which it relied, disposed of the matter in one solitary sentence with the words: "The procedure obtaining in debutter estate of the plaintiff deity in making settlement of land was also followed in this case." His findings on other facts are not also satisfactory. He did not discuss all the relevant evidence and did not give any reasons for his inability to agree with the trial Court in its conclusion on these facts which depended mostly on the oral testimony of certain witnesses whom the trial Court heard and whom he had no opportunity of hearing. In my judgment there was no proper hearing of the appeal by the lower appellate Court. The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court are set aside and the case is sent back to that Court for a rehearing of the appeal in the light of the observations made above. Costs will abide the result.

Bhola Giri Mohunt—Accused.

Criminal Ref. No. 186 of 1935, Decided on 18th February 1936.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 144—Order for injunction must be absolute and definite and not conditional—Party violating conditional order is not guilty of offence under S. 188, Penal Code.

The order for injunction under S. 144 must be an absolute and definite order and it must be left to the party to apply for rescinding the order by having recourse to the procedure laid down in sub-ss. (4) and (5) of S. 144. S. 144 does not contemplate the passing of a conditional order to be made absolute later on. [P 259 C 2]

Where, therefore, a Court by its order under S. 144 directs a party, either to refrain from doing certain acts, or to show cause, if any, against the order, such order not being definite, does not come within the terms of S. 144 and no charge can be sustained under S. 188, Penal Code, for violating such order. Order.—It appears that a certain plot of land was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act for the purpose of extending the Gun and Shell Factory at Cossipore. Within the plot there is a Siva temple belonging to the accused Bhola Giri. The site of the temple was not acquired. Various disputes arose between the accused and the officers of the Gun and Shell Factory, but they resulted in compromises, and ultimately it was agreed that a space of four cubits was to be left open for the purpose of affording access to the temple. On 21st September 1934 a certain complaint was made to the learned Police Magistrate at Sealdah by the officer in charge of the Cossipore Police Station. The learned Magistrate on that date passed an order after reciting the acts said to have been committed by the accused which according to him would lead to a disturbance of the peace on the following terms:

As the said breach of the peace is imminent and immediate preventive measures are desirable, I do hereby under S. 144, Criminal P. C., order and direct the person named in the margin (the accused) either to refrain from doing any of the acts set forth above and exercising any other act set forth above beyond using the passage as a passage; or to show cause, if any, against the said orders of injunction on 2nd October 1934.

In pursuance of this order, the accused showed cause before the learned Magistrate. The charge against the accused was under S. 188, I. P. C., that he violated the order of injunction passed on 21st September 1934 by doing certain acts between the 10th November, and 21st November 1934. He has been convicted by the trying Magistrate and the learned Additional District Magistrate of Alipore has made this reference under the provisions of S. 438, Criminal P. C. In my judgment the conviction cannot stand. It can only stand if there was an injunction on the petitioner under S. 144, Criminal P. C. That section contemplates the passing of an absolute order directing any person to abstain from any act or take certain order with certain property in his possession or under his enjoyment. The order can be passed either ex parte in case of emergency under the provisions of sub-s. (2) or it may be passed after giving an opportunity to the person against whom an order is proposed to be passed. But the order must be an order which is absolute and definite in terms. S. 144, Cls. (a) and (b) do not contemplate the passing of a conditional order to be made absolute later on. As I read these provisions the order for injunction under S. 144 must be an absolute and definite order, and it must be left to the party to apply for rescinding the order by having recourse to the procedure laid down in sub-ss. 4 and 5 of the said section. In the present case the order is in the following terms: " either to refrain from doing any of the acts set forth above or to show cause, if any, against the said order."

It is not an order which comes within the terms of S. 144, Criminal P. C., at all. The order is not definite. In this view, and having regard to the fact that there was no order for injunction as contemplated by S. 144 passed on the accused on 21st September 1934, the charge for violating an imagined injunction cannot be sustained. For these reasons I accept the Reference, set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the accused and acquit him of the charge. The fine, if already paid must be refunded.

Judgment.—The facts relating to this appeal lie within a narrow compass. They may be shortly stated as follows: Three persons, Atal Behari Mahala, Jogendra Nath Mahala and Basanta Kumar Mahala, by the terms of a sole-nama, undertook to pay maintenance to a Hindu widow, by name Haramani Dasi. This undertaking was in exchange for her interest in lands formerly belonging to her deceased husband. The maintenance was not properly paid and Haramani Dasi assigned the arrears to one Harey Krishna Nayek. Subsequently, the three Mahalas sold the land to one Fakir Chandra Pal, who undertook by the terms of the sale deed to continue the maintenance to the widow. In the Court of the Munsif at Jhargram Harey Krishna Nayek sued the three Mahalas and Fakir Chandra Pal for the arrears of maintenance. He also added Haramani Dasi as a pro forma defendant. The three Mahalas did not appear, nor did Haramani Dasi. Fakir Chandra Pal, however, did, and strenuously contested the suit. In the result the Munsif decided that Fakir Chandra Pal was liable to the plaintiff for the greater part of the arrears. He also gave judgment against the Mahalas and Haramani Dasi in default of appearance. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge of the third Court at Midnapore, the decision of the Munsif was reversed. The learned Subordinate Judge for reasons which commended themselves to him (but do not commend themselves to us) came to the conclusion that the kobala under which the deceased husband's land passed to defendant 4 did not show that there was any consideration for the promise of defendant 4 to pay the maintenance. Moreover the learned Judge was of the opinion that the terms of the kobala showed no charge upon the land and that the only liability to the widow rested with the Mahalas.

It seems to us that the whole question turns on whether or not the facts giving rise to this litigation and the terms of the agreements entered upon can be brought within the well-known rule laid down in the English leading case of 1 B & S 393 (1), a decision which has long been recognised in the Indian Courts as binding upon them. The principle of that case is this: that, where in a contract it can be shown that a third party holds a beneficial interest in its performance, and, where, the Court can properly appraise the position of the third party as one of a cestui que trust, the third party is entitled to sue for the purpose of obtaining a declaration enforcing his right. This rule is an equitable corrective of the Common law principle which lays down that a stranger to the consideration of a contract cannot sue upon the contract, as there is no legal nexus between the contracting parties and himself. We think that when Fakir Chandra Pal purchased the land from the Mahalas, he established himself in a fiduciary capacity, qua the payment of Haramani Dasi's maintenance, under the specific clause in the sale deed undertaking the payment; and we further consider that Haramani Dasi in these circumstances held a beneficial interest in the contract between the Mahalas and Fakir Chandra Pal; and that she was impliedly in the position of a cestui que trust vis a-vis the contracting parties. It is not necessary for us to consider whether we come to this conclusion because of our agreement with the recent decision of Mr. Justice Lort-

Williams and Mr. Justice M. C. Ghose in 61 Cal 841 (2), a decision which was greatly pressed upon us. This case appears to us to be an extension of the rule in 1 B & S 393 (1), on general grounds of equitable policy which do not necessarily apply to the case before us.

We see no reason to doubt that in law an assignment for value of a beneficial right under a contract can be enforced under the principle discussed, just as much as the right of the original assignor. The assignment of the arrears of maintenance by Haramani Dasi to the appellant was a transfer of an advantage under the contract; and this class of assignment has always been recognised in law. For these reasons we are of the opinion that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is wrong and that the original decision of the Munsif, save that Haramani Dasi will be dismissed from the suit, must be restored in the appellant's favour, with costs both here and below. As Haramani Dasi did not appear there will be no order for costs either for or against her.

Criminal Revn. No. 1273 of 1935, Decided on 11th February 1936.

Penal Code (1860), Ss. 379, 447—Land and structures jointly owned by co-sharers—Accused purchasing share in them in execution of decree against one of them—Huts belonging to co-sharers blown away—Accused utilizing old materials and building huts on same land—They are not guilty under S. 379 or under S. 447.

Where certain persons, purchasing a share in the land and structures jointly owned by some co-sharers, in execution of a decree against one of them and taking possession through Court, utilize some of the old materials of huts belonging to the co-sharers which have been blown away and build a hut on the same land, they are not guilty of an offence under S. 379, there being no dishonesty on their part or any wrongful loss to other co-sharers. Nor can the persons be convicted under S. 447 as being part owners of the land. They enter upon the land for the purpose of exercising their rights of ownership.

Order.—The petitioners before me have been convicted under S. 379, I. P. C., and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 30 each, in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for four weeks. They have also been convicted under S. 447, I. P. C., and each of them sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 15, in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for two weeks. It is against both these convictions that the two petitioners have moved this Court. In my judgment, on the findings arrived at by the Courts below, these convictions are not sustainable in law. The position is this: that the complainant Rupai, his brothers Serajuddi and Sonajuddi, and others were the owners of a plot of land situate in Anguria Bazar, and they were also joint owners of some huts which were on that land. The complainant's case is that this piece of land and the huts standing thereon were inherited from their father Osimaddi, not only by the complainant but also by Sonajuddi. For the purpose of this case, it is not necessary to mention the names of other co-sharers. The complainant's further case is, and that is also the finding, that the complainant and his other co-sharers including Sonajuddi were in possession of the land and huts. But about three days before the occurrence the huts were blown away, and the two petitioners utilized some of the old materials of those huts and built a hut on the same land.

The two petitioners, in execution of a decree obtained against Sonajuddi, purchased four anna share in the land and the structures and they had taken possession through Court. As against Sonajuddi this possession is effective in the eye of the law and it amounts to actual possession. The question is whether under these circumstances these persons can be convicted under the above-mentioned sections. If Sonajuddi had utilized the materials and had built a hut on the same joint land he could not have been convicted under S. 379. This is my firm opinion because there would be no dishonesty on his part. 'Dishonesty' has been defined in the Penal Code to mean 'wrongful loss' or 'wrongful gain.' A co-sharer in possession of a joint property has the undoubted right to remove a moveable property in his possession and also in the possession of other co-sharers from one spot of the joint land to another spot of the same land. There would be no wrongful loss to the other co-sharers in such a case. Having regard to the fact that the possession of the two accused was effective against Sonajuddi, I do not see how they can be convicted of any offence in such a case. One of the elements of theft, namely dishonesty, is absolutely absent in this case. I do not see also how they can be convicted under S. 447. They are part owners of the land, they have obtained effective possession of Sonajuddi's share and they had entered upon the land for the purpose of exercising the rights of ownership. If the other co-sharer comes to resist them, and in spite of the protest they remain upon the land, I do not see how it can be said that they entered the land to intimidate, insult or annoy the other co-sharers. They wanted to go in peacefully, and it was only the obstruction of the complainant which led them to enter in spite of the protest. For these reasons I set aside the conviction and sentence under both the sections aforesaid and acquit both the petitioners. The fines, if paid, must be refunded.

Appeal No. 139 of 1933, Decided on 6th February 1936, from original decree of Dist. Judge, 24-Parganas, D/- 24th April 1933.

Mahomedan Law — Wakf — Mutawalli — Removal of—Mutawalli setting up personal title to portion of wakf property—Mutawalli also guilty of breach of trust and negligence of duty—He is liable to be removed from office.

Setting up a title to wakf property is not by itself a sufficient ground for the removal of a mutawalli from his office, if it is established that there was honest administration of the wakf and upon conformity to and not in defiance of the trust for which the religious institution is established. Where, however, in addition to the fact that the mutawalli had set up his personal right to a portion of the wakf property which was not established the evidence shows that the mutawalli has practically no accounts of his management of the wakf property and that he has been guilty of misfeasance, breach of trust, and negligence of duty, the mutawalli is liable to be removed from his office: 1928 P C 106, Ref.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs in the suit in which this appeal has arisen prayed for reliefs contemplated by S. 92, Civil P. C., and succeeded in obtaining a decree for the removal of the defendant, a Mutawalli of the Wakf property consisting of a mosque, tombs, trees, and out-houses, standing on about 3-1/2 bighas of land, premises Nos. 12 and 12/1 Mayerpore Road, Alipore, and granting other incidental and ancillary reliefs claimed in the suit.

The questions raised in support of this appeal by defendant appellant, was mainly whether the learned District Judge in the Court below, was right in proceeding, almost entirely, on a previous decision of this Court in which it was held that the defendant in the suit had set up his own title to a part of Wakf property. The result of the decision was that the Mutawalli had set up his personal right to Wakf property which was not established on evidence. As has been held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, setting up a title to Wakf property as his personal estate might not by itself be sufficient ground for removal of a Mutawalli from office, if it were established that there was honest administration and management of the Wakf, and upon conformity to, and not in defiance of the trust for which a religious institution was established. A breach of these obligations on the part of the trustee would be a ground for removal from office: see 47 C L J 542 (1). In addition to the position regarding which there cannot be any controversy, in view of the judgment of this Court dated 30th September 1929, in appeal from appellate decree No. 1618 of 1926, that a portion of the wakf property which the mutawalli defendant claimed, in his personal right, was not the personal property of the defendant, and that it was wakf property, the evidence in the case before us, including the evidence of the defendant himself, establishes the fact that the mutawalli has practically no accounts of his management of the wakf property; and the definite evidence in the case coming from the side of the plaintiffs-respondents, relating to misfeasance, breach of trust and neglect of duty on the part of the mutawalli, as alleged in the plaint, stands un rebutted. In our judgment there cannot be any doubt, on that evidence, that the income of the trust property was being misapplied and misappropriated, and further that the duties imposed by the trust were being persistently neglected.

On the materials before us, therefore, in addition to the decision of this Court, clearly establishing the petition that the mutawalli defendant was persistently setting up a title of his own to a portion of the wakf property as his own personal estate, there was ample proof of the allegations as to breach of trust and neglect of duty on the part of the trustee justifying his removal. A question was raised in support of the appeal, that the decision and decree, as passed by the trial Court for accounts, do not mention the period of accounting. The learned counsel appearing for the plaintiffs-respondents has no objection to the period of accounting being fixed by this Court, and to that period being limited to six years before the date of institution of the suit. The decree of the Court below is to be varied to that extent, fixing the period of accounting. In the result, with the modification mentioned above, the decision and decree passed by the Court below are affirmed and the appeal is dismissed. There is no order as to costs in this appeal.

Bengal Tenancy Act (8 of 1885), Ss. 26-J and 111—Application under S. 26-J for recovery of money and not for determination of status of tenant—Court is not empowered to stay application under S. 111, although question of status may have to be gone into.

A suit or proceeding can be stayed under S.

Where therefore the prayer in an application under S. 26-J is not for the determination of the status of a tenant but is for recovery of a sum of money and it is a money claim which the landlord wants to enforce the mere fact that the question of status may have to be gone into because the defendant has raised it, will not authorise the Court to stay the application under S. 111: 1928 Cal 388, Rel. on.

Urukram Das Chakravarty—for Petitioner.

Order.—This rule is directed against an order of the learned Munsiff, Additional Court, Balurghat, dated 27th May 1935, by which he has stayed an application made by the petitioner before me, under S. 26-J, under the provisions of S. 111, Ben. Ten. Act. In my judgment, S. 111 does not apply to this case. The opposite party according to the case of the petitioner, took a transfer on the footing that the holding was not an occupancy holding, but a holding at a fixed rent. On that the petitioner before me filed an application under S. 26-J, and in answer to that application the opposite party has stated that the holding in question is a holding held at a fixed rate of rent. He also made an application for stay of the hearing of this application on the ground that an order has been made under S. 101, Ben. Ten. Act, directing the preparation of the record of rights. In my judgment simply because a defendant raises a question of status it cannot be urged that a pending proceedings should be stayed under the provisions of S. 111. 32 C W N 132 (1), is an authority for this proposition. A suit or proceeding can be stayed under S. 111 only if the suit or the application is filed for the determination of the status of any tenant. The prayer in an application under S. 26-J is not for the determination of the status of a tenant but for the recovery of a sum of money although in deciding the said claim of the landlord, the question of status may have to be gone into. It is a money claim which the landlord wants to enforce, and the fact that the question of status has to be gone into because the defendant has raised the question of status, will not authorise the Court to stay the application under S. 111. I accordingly make this Rule absolute and direct the learned Munsiff to proceed on with the application under S. 26-J. As there is no appearance on behalf of the opposite party, there will be no order for costs.

Civil Rule No. 53 of 1936, Decided on 19th February 1936, from order of 1st Addl. Sub-Judge, 24-Parganas, D/- 25th November 1935.

Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (v), Cl. (e)—Suit for possession—Valuation of subject matter—Legislature draws distinction between cases where subject matter is land and where it is house or garden—If subject matter is garden case comes under S. 7 (v), Cl. (e).

For purpose of computing valuation of the subject-matter in a suit for possession, the legislature had drawn a distinction between the case where the subject-matter is land and where the subject-matter is house or garden. If the subject-matter in suit is a garden it would come under Cl. (e), sub-s. (v), S. 7 and Court-fee will have to be paid on the market value of the garden and not on the basis of annual revenue of land. [P 264 C 2]

Probodh Chandra Chatterjee and Bireswar Chatterjee—for Petitioner.

Kushi Prasun Chatterjee—for Opposite Party.

Order.—The defendant is the petitioner before me. The plaintiff instituted a suit to recover possession of certain property described in the schedule to his plaint. There had been a revenue sale. He was the former proprietor; and his case in the plaint is that the revenue sale is illegal, a nullity and has not passed title to the defendant. Secondly, he prays for setting aside the revenue sale in any event; and his third prayer is for recovery of possession.

The suit is a suit for recovery of possession and for the purpose of Court-fees and valuation it comes within sub-s. 5, S. 7, Court-fees Act. The question is whether under Cl. (a) or Cl. (e) of that sub-section such valuation is to be made. In the schedule to the plaint the land is described as "garden land together with trees, etc." The land is comprised in holding No. 39, Touzi No. 1298/2833 of the Collectorate of the 24-Parganas. Of this holding a separate revenue has been assessed at Rs. 21-3-5. The plaintiff's valuation has been arrived at by multiplying the said sum by 10; and the Court-fee was paid on the said sum. The defendants stated that the Court-fee was to be paid not on the basis of revenue assessed but on the basis of the market value, and he said that the market value was more than Rs. 5,000 and so the suit was beyond the jurisdiction of the Munsif at Alipur. The learned Munsif held that the value should be computed in accordance with Cl. (e), sub-s. 5, S. 7, Court-fees Act. He also held that as the market value exceeded his jurisdiction the plaint should be returned for presentation to the proper Court and he ordered the return of the plaint.

An appeal was taken by the plaintiff and it was heard by the learned Subordinate Judge. When the suit was pending in the Court of the Munsif, the plaintiff by way of amendment wanted to strike out the words "garden" and "trees, etc." and the learned Subordinate Judge held that that amendment ought to have been allowed, and if that amendment be allowed, the suit would be a suit for recovery of land and it would come under Cl. (a). Para. 1, sub-s. 5, S. 7 begins by saying that in suits for possession of land, house and gardens the Court fees are to be paid according to the value of the subject-matter. Then follows certain clauses which deal with the method of computation of the value. Immediately after para. 1, it is said: where the subject-matter is land, the method of valuation is to be as indicated in four clauses, (a) to (d). Reading these clauses and Cl. (e) it appears to me that for the purpose of computing valuation of the subject-matter in a land for possession, the legislature has drawn a distinction between the case where the subject-matter is land, and where the subject-matter is a house or garden. If the subject-matter of the present case is really a garden, in my opinion it will come under Cl. (e), sub-s. 5, S. 7, Court-fees Act, and the Court-fee will have to be paid on the market value of the garden and not on the basis of annual revenue of the land. If the subject-matter is a garden, the application of the plaintiff for amendment would have no bearing upon this question.

Inasmuch as, it has not been held whether the subject matter is land or garden, I consider that the question must be gone into after giving the parties an opportunity to lead evidence. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the property is a garden it will direct the plaintiff to file the plaint in proper Court. If not the suit will be retained in the Court of the Munsif. To have this question decided I remand the case to the Court of first instance with liberty to the parties to adduce evidence on this point. The rule is made absolute. Costs of this rule will abide the result, hearing fee one gold mohur.

Civil Rule No. 757 of 1935, Decided on 10th February 1936, from decree of Judge, Sm. C. C., Darjeeling, D/- 30th March 1935.

Susil Chandra Sen—for Petitioner.

Basak, Gopesh Chandra Chatterjee for Asitranjan Ghose—for Opposite Party.

Order.—This rule, which has been obtained by the defendant, relates to the claim of the opposite party to minimum charges for the supply of electric energy. Dr. D. N. Roy was the owner of a house within the limits of the Darjeeling Municipality known as the "Roy Cot." The said Municipality obtained a license in the year 1913 from the Local Government for the supply of electric energy in Darjeeling. It constructed a plant and began supplying electric energy. Dr. Roy applied about fifteen years ago for the supply of electric energy to his premises, and he was required to enter into a written contract before he was allowed the supply. This written contract must have been entered into in pursuance of Cl. 6 of the schedule annexed to the Indian Electricity Act of 1910. At the time when the contract was entered between Dr. Roy and the Municipality, there was no clause in the said schedule which, subject to such additions and modifications as may be made by the Local Government, was incorporated in every license by the provisions of Cl. (f), S. 3 of the said Act. In the year 1922 the Act was amended and a clause 11-A, was added to the schedule. The clause is in these terms:

A licensee may charge a consumer a minimum charge for energy of such amount and determined in such manner as may be specified by his license and such minimum charge shall be payable notwithstanding that no energy has been used by the consumer during the period for which such minimum charge is made.

The license of the Municipality has not been produced, but a copy of the Calcutta Gazette dated 22nd January 1925 has been produced by the plaintiff. The notification dated 19th January 1925 in the Calcutta Gazette runs as follows:

It is hereby notified for general information that, in exercise of the powers conferred by Cl. (6), sub-s. (3), S. 4, Electricity Act 1910, (IX of 1910), the Governor in Council is pleased to make the following amendment in Cl. 5 of the Darjeeling Electric License, 1913, published under the Public Works Department notification No. 1 M. P. 1, dated 14th July 1913: After Cl. 5, sub-s. (b) of the Darjeeling Electric License, 1913, the following shall be added, namely: Provided that where the total charges for energy in any year fall short of Rs. 72 per kilowatt of the total connected load in respect of any one installation connexion to the licensee's distributing system, the licensee may require the consumer to pay a minimum charge for such year at the rate of Rs. 72 per kilowatt of the total connected load of the installation, and where a minimum charge is made for any such year as aforesaid, the licensee shall not charge separately for any energy consumed in respect of such installation during that period, etc.

On 12th March 1925 the Municipality passed a resolution authorising the Municipality to levy minimum charges for April 1925 in accordance with the terms of the said notification. Dr. Roy died in 1926 and the defendant petitioner is his legal representative. It is admitted by plaintiff's witness 1, Nikhil Chandra Sen

Gupta, electrical sub-overseer of the Municipality, that agreements for payment of minimum charges were taken from consumers after the introduction of the minimum charges in that Municipality, but no such agreement was taken either from Dr. Roy or after his death from his legal representatives. Accordingly no contract to pay minimum charges has been pleaded by the Municipality in its plaint. In the year 1930-31 the actual consumption of "Roy Cot" was Rs. 3-15-0. A bill for that amount was made out by the Municipality and paid by the consumer on 17th August 1932. On 29th September 1932 a further bill for Rs. 9-0-3 was made out and served on the consumer on 17th October 1932. In the said bill the sum of Rs. 12-15-3 was shown as the minimum charges for the year 1930-31 and the sum of Rs. 3-15-0 which was paid by the consumer previously was deducted and a demand was made for the balance of Rs. 9-0-3. The sum of Rs. 12-15-3 would be the minimum charges according to the said Government Notification. The said amount being not paid the present suit was instituted by the Municipality to recover the said sum of Rs. 9-0-3. The defendant pleaded that as there was no contract to pay minimum charges, the suit should be dismissed. This defence has been overruled and a decree has been made by the Small Cause Court Judge of Darjeeling.

Although the amount involved in this rule is a small one, a question of great importance arises in the rule, and in my judgment the defendant is entitled to succeed in the plea taken by her. A license given by the Local Government to a person under the Electricity Act confers the right on the licensee to supply electric energy in a specified area. Certain statutory powers and duties are conferred and imposed on the licensee. These powers are given for the purpose of enabling the licensee, who undertakes a public undertaking, to construct his works, his plant, service mains, etc., and to maintain them and certain duties are also imposed on him for the safety of the public or individuals. The undertaking being for public benefit a duty is imposed on the licensee to supply energy to any person, who wants to take a supply of energy, subject to certain conditions laid down either in the body of the Act or in the schedule which is incorporated in the license subject to any addition or modification which the Local Government may make. The licensee cannot show undue preference to any particular consumer in the matter of rates; subject to this he is empowered to regulate his relations by agreement with his consumers, but even here there are restrictions imposed. He cannot in his agreement with his consumers insert any condition whatsoever, but only such conditions which are consistent with the Act or his license and to which previous sanction of the Local Government had been obtained: Ss. 21 to 23. Subject to these restrictions, the legislature in my opinion intended the rights between a licensee and a consumer to be regulated by contract. Cls. 6 and 5 respectively of the schedule cast the obligation on the licensee to supply electric energy to an applicant or a group of applicants for supply of electric energy only when the applicant or group of applicants enter into a written contract with the licensee. The only power which is reserved to the licensee by the Act in the matter of rates, a power which may be exercised by the licensee apart from contract, is that he can charge on any one of the three alternative modes specified in Cls. (a), (b) and (c) of sub-s. 3 to S. 23 of the Act, and even when the licensee intends to prefer to go upon the basis of Cl. (c) of that sub-section, the consumer can by following the procedure laid down in Cl. 10 of the schedule compel the licensee to adopt either of the modes mentioned in Cls. (a) and (b). In my judgment Cl. (c) contemplates charges made on the basis of consumption. A minimum charge is not really a charge which has for its basis the consumption of electric energy. It is really based on the principle that every consumer's installation involved the licensee in a certain amount of capital expenditure in plant and mains on which he is to have a reasonable return. He gets a return when energy is actually consumed, in the shape of payments for energy consumed.

When no such energy is consumed by a consumer, or a very small amount is consumed in a long period, he is allowed to charge minimum charges by his license, but these minimum charges are really interest on his capital outlay incurred for the particular consumer. Cl. (c), sub-s. 3, S. 23 accordingly in my judgment does not authorise a licensee to levy minimum charges without any agreement with the consumer. I also fail to see how Cl. (c) can also be invoked by the Municipality to support its claim for minimum charges as the Local Government has not exercised their powers under that clause by the aforesaid notification issued by it. In my judgment Cl. 11 (a) of the schedule only empowers or authorises the licensee to levy minimum charges. That clause was inserted by the amendment of 1922 to remove doubts on the authority of the licensee to enter into contracts with intending consumers with terms for payment of minimum charges. But that power in my judgment can only be exercised by a licensee through a contract entered into with an intending consumer. The Local Government by the issue of the aforesaid notification has only amended the license of the Municipality and has simply given it the power or authority to enter into such contracts with consumers for levying minimum charges. The view I am taking is not in my judgment inconsistent with the decision in 35 C W N 933 (1), a case which did not deal with minimum charges. As there was no such contract either with Dr. Roy or his legal representative the Municipality cannot sue for minimum charges. The rule is accordingly made absolute. The judgment and decree of the Small Cause Court are set aside. The petitioner must have the costs of the lower Court. There will be no costs in the rule.

Civil Rule No. 1357 of 1935, Decided on 10th February 1936, from order of 1st Court Munsiff, Krishnagar (Nadia), D/- 15th July 1935.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 115 and 104, O. 43, R. 1—Order directing execution to be dismissed for non-prosecution is not appealable—It is open to revision.

No appeal lies with reference to an order directing an execution case to be dismissed for non-prosecution. Such an order does not fall within the scope of those sections of the Civil P. C., which relate to appealable orders, nor can it be said to be a decree. Such an order is in the nature of one for dismissal for default and is open to revision. [P 268 C 1, 2]

(b) Decree—Execution — Decree-holder is always entitled to apply for execution to Court passing decree although execution is in respect of property situate outside its jurisdiction.

A decree-holder has always a right to apply, as of course to the Court which passed the decree for its execution even if it be in respect of property outside the territorial jurisdiction of such Court and even if execution by such Court can be no more than execution by transmission to another Court: 1931 Cal 312, Foll.; 17 Cal 699 (F B), Disting. [P 268 C 2]

(c) Execution—Transfer of decree for execution—Transferring Court retains jurisdiction over execution though for specific purposes only.

Even after the transfer of a decree for execution to another Court, the transferring Court retains jurisdiction over the execution, though for certain specific purposes only: 1931 Cal 312, Foll. [P 269 C 1]

(d) Decree — Execution — Application for execution to Court passing decree — Such Court can transmit decree to Court where immoveable property sought to be sold is situate along with papers required by O. 21, Rr. 5 and 6, Civil P. C.—Fresh application for execution to transferee Court is not necessary.

Where an application for execution is made to the Court which passed the decree, that Court will transmit the same to the Court where the immoveable property sought to be sold is situate along with the other papers required by O. 21, R. 5 or R. 6, Civil P. C., and then the latter Court will make an order for sale. It is not necessary in such a case to have a fresh application for execution before the Court where immoveable property sought to be sold in execution is situate: 1931 Cal 312, Foll. [P 269 C 1]

Edgley, J. — This rule is directed against the order of Babu D. N. Pal, Munsiff of Krishnagar, dated 15th July 1935, in which he directed that a certain execution case should be dismissed for non-prosecution. The facts of the case appear to be that the petitioner's mother obtained a money decree against the opposite party on a promissory note in the Court of the first Munsif at Krishnagar. This decree was then put into execution, but during the course of the execution proceedings a brother of the judgment-debtor and certain other people filed a claim case in respect of the property against which the decree was sought to be executed. This claim case was allowed on 17th November 1934 and it is contended on behalf of the opposite party that, as a result of this claim case being allowed, there remained no property against which execution could be taken.

On 1st April 1935, the petitioner applied for amendment of the execution petition by including therein certain other property not within the jurisdiction of the Krishnagar Courts. The Munsiff allowed the amendment on 30th April 1935. On 20th June 1935 an application was made for transmitting the decree to the Court of the Munsiff at Alipur for execution but with reference to this application on 12th July 1935 the learned Munsiff held that the procedure which the decree-holder desired to adopt was irregular and he directed that the decree-holder should file a definite application stating whether he wished the decree to be sent for execution to the Alipur Court. Such an application was filed and on 15th July 1935, the learned Munsiff directed that the execution case should be dismissed and that the decree-holder should make a fresh application in proper form for a transfer of the decree for execution. It is against the latter order that this rule has been obtained.

It has been urged by the learned advocate for the petitioner that the learned Munsiff acted illegally in dismissing the execution case and that the effect of his order has been to compel the petitioner to file a fresh application for execution in the Alipur Court which, having regard to the circumstances of the case, may possibly be held to be time-barred. A preliminary objection has been urged with reference to this rule inasmuch as it is contended that no application lies for the revision of the order dated 15th July 1935 because no appeal with reference to the order in question was preferred to the District Judge. It appears however that no appeal lies with reference to an order of this nature. Such an order does not fall within the scope of those sections of the Civil Procedure Code which relate to appealable orders and in no circumstances can it be held to be a decree, and in any event, having regard to the provisions of S. 2 (2), Civil P. C., the order from its very nature appears to be an order for dismissal for default. We are not prepared to accept the argument which has been urged in connexion with this preliminary objection.

The learned advocate for the opposite party next contends that the order of the learned Munsif dated 15th July 1935 was correct inasmuch as the Court of the Munsif of Krishnagar, after the passing of the order of 3rd April 1935, was functus officio in view of the fact that the only property against which execution could then be taken was situated outside the jurisdiction of the Court. With regard to this argument it must be remembered that on 3rd April 1935 the learned Munsif had merely permitted the amendment of the petition for execution. As the matter then stood before him, therefore, there was a pending application for the execution of a decree passed by this Court and such application was with a view to execution proceedings being taken against certain property outside his territorial jurisdiction.

The learned advocate for the opposite party relies in support of his contention upon a decision of the Full Bench of this Court in 17 Cal 699 (1) in which it was held that a Court had no jurisdiction in execution of a decree to sell property over which it had no territorial jurisdiction at the time it passed the order of sale; with reference to this particular case it was however pointed out by Mitter, J., in 35 C W N 77 (2) that the case in question was no authority for the proposition that the Court which passed the decree had no jurisdiction to entertain the application for execution. This is a question which was discussed at great length in 35 C W N 77 (2) and it was held by Mukerji and Mitter, JJ., that a decree-holder had always had a right to apply as of course to the Court which passed the decree for its execution even if it be in respect of property outside the territorial jurisdiction of such Court and even if execution by such Court could be no more than execution by transmission to another Court. Having regard to the clear views expressed by Mukerji and Mitter, JJ., in the above case we are of opinion that there is no force in the contention put forward by the learned advocate for the opposite party with reference to this matter.

2. Sreenath Chakravarti v. Priya Nath Bando-padhya, 1931 Cal 312=192 I C 149=58 Cal 832=52 C L J 569=35 C W N 77.

With reference to the order dated 12th July 1935 it appears to be somewhat unfortunate that the learned Munsif should have directed the decree-holder to file a fresh petition as directed by him in the concluding portion of his order. In view of the fact that a petition for transmitting the decree to the Court of the Munsif at Alipur appears to have been made on 20th June 1935 the circumstances indicate that even if the decree-holder had acquired certain papers other than those mentioned in O. 21, R. 6, Civil P. C., to be transferred to Alipur it would have been sufficient if the learned Munsif had directed a transfer of the decree with such papers as might legally be sent, having regard to the provisions of O. 21, R. 6 of the Code. The procedure which was actually adopted in the case appears merely to have the effect of delaying the execution proceedings and to have placed unnecessary difficulties in the way of the decree holder. As regards the order dated 15th July 1935 the learned Munsif appears to have been under a misapprehension in supposing that the execution proceedings could not be allowed to remain pending in his Court after the decree had been transferred to another Court for execution. With regard to this point Mukerji, J., points out in 35 C W N 77 (2):

It may be stated here that even after transfer, the transferring Court retains jurisdiction over the execution, though for certain specified purposes only.

Further, on the same point, Mitter, J., makes the following observations:

If an application for execution is made to the Court which passed the decree that Court will transmit the same to the Court where immoveable property sought to be sold is situate along with the other papers required by O. 21, R. 5 or R. 6 of the Code, and then the latter will make the order for sale and it will not be necessary in such a case to have a fresh application for execution before the Court where immoveable property sought to be sold in execution is situate.

Having regard to the consideration mentioned above we are of opinion that the order dated 15th July 1935 is wrong. This rule must therefore be made absolute with costs and the order against which it is directed is set aside. The petitioner should make such further application as he considers necessary with a view to the transfer of the requisite papers to Alipur. The hearing fee is assessed at three gold mohurs.

Insolvency Case No. 41 of 1935, Decided on 22nd August 1935.

(a) Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (3 of 1909), S. 9 (g)—Notice of suspension of payment of debt—Oral and written notices alleged—Written notice informal—Oral conversation cannot be held to be definite and formal notice.

Where under S. 9 (g), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, both written and oral notices of suspension of payment of debts were alleged and it was found that correspondence comprising of written notice was of formal nature, it cannot be held that the conversation amounting to oral notice was definite, formal and deliberate, intended to be understood in that sense: Ex parte Oastler, 13 Q B D 471, Ref. [P 271 C 1, 2]

(b) Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (3 of 1909), S. 9 (g)—Difference between S. 13 (4) (b) and S. 9 (g)—Under S. 9 (g) debtor must be unable to pay and also convey his intention to his creditor not to pay.

Section 13 (4) (b) provides that the Court shall dismiss a petition for adjudication if the debtor appears and satisfies the Court that he is able to pay his debts. But S. 9 (g) contemplates something entirely different. Not only must the debtor be unable to pay his debts, but he must also convey to the creditor his intention not to pay: 1933 Cal 417, Ref.

(d) Hindu Law—Joint family—Institution of suit for partition by member operates as severance of joint status from date of institution—Separation of one does not involve separation of all members—What amounts to separation of all is a question of fact—Subsequent conduct and intention should be decided.

There can be no doubt that the institution of a partition suit by a member of a joint family operates as a severance of the joint status as from the date of its institution. The member who institutes the suit intimates to his co-sharers his clear and unequivocal intention of his desire to sever himself from the joint family and the status of the plaintiff as separate in estate is brought about by his assertion of his right to separate. The separation of the plaintiff however does not automatically involve the separation of the other branches of the family and it is a question of fact in each case whether the other members of the family separated or remained united. Their subsequent conduct must be scrutinised and thus their intention must be decided. [P 273 C 2]

(e) Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (3 of 1909), S. 113 — Rules framed by Calcutta High Court—Petition of insolvency by creditor—Rules of procedure explained.

There are particular rules dealing with an application by a petitioning creditor and the rules contemplate only a formal petition with an affidavit in support and a notice by the debtor specifying the statements which he intends to deny or dispute. No other affidavit, notice or pleading is suggested, but R. 81 contemplates an adjudication on the materials before the Court including any oral evidence that may be tendered at the hearing and on adjournment if either party desire to produce further oral evidence so long as the rules indicate a particular form of procedure that procedure should be observed. Order.—This is an application for adjudication as insolvents of 19 members of a joint Mitakshara Hindu family who are alleged to be carrying on business under the firm name of Kishorelal Mukundlal at various addresses in Calcutta. That firm is alleged to be indebted to the petitioners in a sum of about rupees 75,000 on Khatapeta account. The petitioners were three members of a Mitakshara family trading as Radha Kisen Beniprasad at 10 Cotton Street, Calcutta. Kanhyalal is said to be the Karta of the family, Manoharlal is his brother and Baikuntha is the infant son of Kanhyalal who acts as his next friend. The petition was presented on 18th April 1935 and was ordered to be served on the debtors, the hearing being fixed for 21st May. The third petitioner Manoharlal died on 2nd May and his interest devolved on his brother Kanhyalal. Owing to Manohar's death the hearing was adjourned to 18th June and has since been adjourned on various occasions by consent. On 24th January 1935, a letter of demand was sent to the debtors and a reply was received dated 30th January from solicitors for 4 of the alleged debtors viz., Banwarilal, Budriprasad, Sangamlal and Samsunder who are represented on this application by the learned Standing Counsel.

The debtor family are the descendants of Dwarkaprasad who had 5 sons and for convenience I shall refer to the various alleged debtors according to the 5 branches of his family which these sons represent: (1) Harnamdas, (2) Mohanlal. These two branches are represented before me by Mr. Sen, (3) Kisorilal's branch represented by the learned Standing Counsel, (4) Kanhyalal represented by the learned Advocate-General, and (5) is Mukundlal's branch which is unrepresented. In January 1926, Protap Chandra, a member of branch 2, filed a suit for partition of the joint family properties. A preliminary partition decree was made on 14th February 1927 by the Subordinate Judge of Allahabad. There was an appeal from that decree and on 13th January 1931 a consent decree was passed. It is clear from the pleadings in the partition suit that the Calcutta business of Kishorilal Mukundlal was included in the joint family properties being valued in the plaint at Rs. 30 lakhs. There were also numerous other businesses carried on under different names in the large towns of India and in Burma. They include a business in Allahabad where the partition suit was brought and where many of the alleged debtors reside.

The alleged debtors oppose this application on the ground that they ceased to be "partners" in the firm of Kishorilal Mukundlal on the filing of the partition suit in January 1926, which they claim formed a severance of the joint family and a cessation of the joint family business. Alternatively, they contend that their interest, at any rate in the Calcutta business, ceased in February 1927, the date of the preliminary decree, or in January 1931 when the decree was made by the appeal Court embodying the terms of settlement. They further contend that no act of insolvency has been committed and branches 1, 2 and 4 plead that it has not been established that this Court has jurisdiction within the meaning of S. 11, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. I will deal first with the alleged acts of insolvency. These are based on S. 9 (g), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and are said to be notices of suspension of payment of debts. Two oral notices are alleged: (1)

28th February 1935 and (2) 5th March 1935, and two written notices in the form of letters dated respectively 30th January 1935 and 6th March 1935.

Admittedly at sometime prior to 1926 the firm of Kishorilal Mukundlal in Calcutta was a branch of a vast family business operating throughout India. The petitioners claimed to be creditors of the Calcutta branch for a sum of Rs. 74,805-3-0 calculated upto 24th January 1935, and on that date their solicitors sent a letter demanding payment to 42 members of the joint family. On 30th January Messrs. Dutt and Sen replied on behalf of branch 3 admitting the debt. This is alleged to be the first written notice of suspension. On 28th February the petitioners sent their gomastha Shewgolam Sukul to the debtor's office in Shib Thakur Lane. Shewgolam says in his affidavit that he met Banwari Lal, Songam Lal and Badri Prasad, 3 of the members of branch 3 from whom he demanded payment immediately. "They informed me" he says:

that they and other members of the joint family were unable to pay the debt, had practically closed the business and had already suspended payment of their debts to all their creditors.

The second oral notice of suspension is said to have taken place on 5th March when Jivanram, the creditors' munim gomastha, called and interviewed the same persons and received the same reply, which he was told to convey to his masters and to state "that they will be writing to them in the matter." A letter was written on 6th March, which is relied on as the second written notice of suspension. This letter of 6th March does not mention either of the interviews and considering that it was supposed to be written immediately after Jivanram's call, and in pursuance of an alleged statement to him that it would be written, the failure to mention the interviews is noteworthy. Again, at the interviews it was alleged that the debtors stated that they had suspended payment of all their creditors. This is not the statement in the letters, and it is contrary to fact, for it appears that several creditors were paid, though comparatively small sums, throughout March and until the middle of June. It may be that the alleged interviews took place, though even that is denied on oath by Sangam Lal, but I cannot believe that those conversations were definite, formal, and deliberate notices and intended to be understood in that sense; in view of the somewhat informal nature of the correspondence—anything less is inadequate: see 13 Q B D 471 (1) at p. 475. I am not prepared to accept the statements of Shewgolam and Jivanram, and I hold that no act of insolvency has been proved at the alleged interviews. Turning to the alleged written notices, the letter on 30th January is set out in para. 6 of the petition. It recites the partition suit and states that the firm of Kishorilal Mukundlal, from whom the debt is due, is one of the joint family businesses subject to the partition suit. The debt is admitted and it is asserted that the assets of the joint family will be considerably more than the amount of the debt. "There is therefore," the writers say:

no real cause of apprehension for non-payment of your clients' debt; only there may be a little delay in payment. Under the circumstances our clients hope that your clients will be good enough to stay their hands for the present.

The letter of 6th March set out in para. 11 of the petition is written by the debtor firm and purports to explain the reasons for delay in meeting their obligations. It explains the vast activities of the family and the difficulty of getting out the accounts and the valuation of their properties. They then write:

We are sorry to say, due to the most unpleasant and hostile attitude of the fighting plaintiff lately, the situation became very serious and we were obliged to put a stop to most of our business activities A commissioner however had been appointed and remarkable progress had been made. "As for your dues," they write:

We have no doubt whatever in respect of their repayment to the last pie, because our liabilities are quite insignificant in comparison with the assets of our family business, but it is only a question of time. Due to this unfortunate litigation we feel absolutely helpless at the moment and we feel sure that things will straighten out in course of the next few months. We cannot but express our most sincere thanks and gratitude for your patience and reliance on us and we do sincerely hope that in view of our past unstained business relations you will be so good as to allow us time and give us opportunity to pay back your dues. To enable us to expedite matters further we shall thank you to furnish with the amount of your dues both principal and interest up to 28th February 1935

1. Ex parte Oastler, (1885) 13 Q B D 471=54 L J Q B 23=1 Morrell 207=33 W R 126=51 L T 309.

That was to the end of the preceding month. It is contended that these letters do not give notice that the debtor has suspended or is about to suspend payment of his debts. No composition is offered and there is a definite offer to pay, and to pay in full, and although the letter of 6th March contains the statement "we were obliged to put a stop to most of our business activities . . .", this is not a categorical assertion that payment has been suspended. The meaning appears to me to be, our trade is at a standstill owing to the disputes connected with the partition, but there really has been some progress recently: the money is there, and we hope very shortly it will be available for distribution. I have been referred to numerous cases both under the English Act, in which the relevant clause is in the same words, and under the Indian Act, and I quote Lord Justice Bowen's words in (1887) 4 Morrell 25 (2), at p. 32, which have been referred to with approval in most of the reported cases:

Suspension of payment is a business term usually applied to traders . . . It seems to me that it means not meeting your engagements, and paying your debts in the ordinary course of business as they become due, and as you are called upon to pay them. What, therefore, is the question that arises when we are presented with a statement of a debtor, and we are asked to consider that it falls within the mischief at which this provision of the statute strikes? We have in each case to ask ourselves, and in each case to answer the question, what is the reasonable construction which those who receive this statement of the debtor would have a right under the circumstances of the debtor's case to assume, and would assume, to be his meaning as to what he intends to do with respect to paying or suspending payment of his debts. Having said that, I protest that I hope we are not going to have a series of cases which are to be cited hereafter as determining that special words used by a special debtor in a particular case do or do not amount as a matter of law to notice of suspension.

It does seem to me that applying as far as I can the only real legal test to this circular to bring it within the statute, we ought to take the circular in its business sense, then to find the circumstances of the debtor under which he makes it, and then to see what the statement came to . . .

No useful purpose can be served by comparing the words used by one debtor with the words used by another; in each case it must depend on the construction of a particular document and the circumstances under which it was written. We do however find from the cases the legal tests to which the words should be subjected and the principles by which the Court should be guided in coming to a conclusion. It is noteworthy that most of the English cases deal with a circular letter sent by the debtor to all his creditors, but in the case of (1896) 1 Q B 619 (3) the debtor was an unmarried lady of no occupation who lived with her mother at Broadstairs, and the petitioning creditors relied on statements made by the debtor in conversation with one of her creditors as amounting to a notice of suspension of payment. During that conversation the debtor, in answer to the question, "Wont you pay Mr. Lewis's account as you promised?" replied, "No, I won't pay anybody now." In the report of his judgment at p. 623 Vaughan Williams, J. said:

If we were to hold that every refusal to pay a debt when demanded was a notice of suspension of payment, merely because it was based on the excuse of inability to pay the debt at that moment, we should be giving far too wide an application to S. 4, sub-s. 1 (h),

(which is the equivalent section in the English Act), and at p. 624 the learned Judge, while holding for other reasons that the notice came within the meaning of the section, said:

I do not hold that this notice comes within the section, on the ground that it is based on inability to pay; if that were all, it would not be sufficient . . .

In (1891) A C 316 (4), there was a general circular by the debtor to all his creditors and Lord Selborne referring to the words of Bowen, L. J., in (1887) 4 Morrell 25 (2) viz., what effect would the circular produce on the mind of a creditor receiving it as to the intention of the debtor with regard to his creditors?

said, "That is the true test," and both he and Lord Watson were of opinion that the words of that particular circular implied that the debtor meant to pay no creditor in full. In (1905) A C 442 (5), the House of Lords held by a majority that a stock broker's circular did not amount to an act of bankruptcy. Lord

Macnaughten, who dissented, held that the words did amount to a notice within the meaning of the Act. There was no divergence of opinion as to the proper construction of the section and Lord Halsbury in his speech referred to the opinions of Lord Selbourne and Lord Watson in (1891) A C 316 (4), that a declaration of inability by a debtor does not of itself and without reference to context or circumstances satisfy the statute. The same propositions have been considered and applied in 49 All 321 (6). For the petitioning creditor reliance has been placed on the decision of this Court in 60 Cal 345 (7), where it was held that although a debtor may have assets which, if liquidated, would provide sufficient money to discharge his debts, yet if he has no liquid assets wherewith to pay his debts at present, he is not able to pay his debts within the meaning of S. 13 (4) (b), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. That Section provides that the Court shall dismiss a petition for adjudication if the debtor appears and satisfies the Court that he is able to pay his debts. Had the writer of the letter of 6th March appeared he might have found difficulty in persuading the Court that he was able to pay his debts, but S. 9 (g) contemplates something entirely different. Not only must the debtor be unable to pay his debts, but he must also convey to the creditor his intention not to pay.

In the English cases to which I have referred the House of Lords have laid it down quite definitely that a declaration of inability to pay does not of itself constitute an act of insolvency. In the present case I am unable to hold that the reasonable interpretation of the two letters is that the debtor intended to give notice to the petitioning creditor that he had suspended or was about to suspend payment of his debts. In the letter of 30th January there is not a word which suggests a general suspension of payment, and with regard to the particular debt there is definite assurance of payment in the near future. I have already given my reasons for considering that the letter of 6th March did not constitute a notice of suspension. For these reasons in my opinion there has been no act of insolvency and this application must be dismissed, but in case the matter is taken further, I will record my opinion on the question which was argued at some length regarding the liability of the branches 1, 2 and 4. Reference is made to S. 11, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and it is contended that the Court has jurisdiction to make an order of adjudication only if the debtor has carried on business in person or through an agent within the limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of this Court. Branches 1, 2, and 4 urge that there has been a partition of the joint family and that they are no longer carrying on business in Calcutta so as to be liable to adjudication on failure by the Calcutta branch to meet its liabilities.

There can be no doubt that the institution of a partition suit by a member of a joint family operates as a severance of the joint status as from the date of its institution. The member who institutes the suit intimates to his co-sharers his clear and unequivocal intention of his desire to sever himself from the joint family, and the status of the plaintiff as separate in estate is brought about by his assertion of his right to separate. The separation of the plaintiff however does not automatically involve the separation of the other branches of the family, and it is a question of fact in each case whether the other members of the family separated or remained united. Their subsequent conduct must be scrutinised and thus their intention must be decided. It is urged in the present case that there was a severance of the joint family and a partition of the joint family properties on the institution of the suit in 1926. There was undoubtedly a severance of status; but it is a question of fact how far the various businesses remained the joint family property subject to subsequent division.

To ascertain the intention of the parties the most important evidence is the partition decree. The preliminary decree of 14th February 1927 declared that the property in the schedules to the plaint was joint family property. The Calcutta business was specifically set out in Sch. A to the plaint, and the plaint itself alleged that the joint family business was carried on in Calcutta among other places. "The business" it states is transacted jointly, and the business in every shop and in mills is carried on in the name and supervision of some one or the other member of the family aforesaid.

These allegations are admitted in the written statements of members of branches 2 and 4. The consent decree of 13th January 1931 provides for division of the entire property into five lots of equal value. Each item of property was to be valued by a commissioner and the true valuation of the "shops with business" should be "according to the present existing net assets as disclosed by the account books of those shops."

There was a further provision that the entire net income, after meeting the necessary expenses and losses during the pendency of the suit, shall be a part of the divisible property. The petitioners rely strongly on this provision which they contend shows that the businesses were to continue as part of the joint assets and indicate the intention of the co-sharers to carry them on as undivided joint property pending the allocation of shares by a commissioner. Reference has also been made to recent proceedings in the Allahabad Court. The affidavit containing these proceedings was filed only on 13th August and was objected to. As it consisted almost entirely of certified copies of affidavits and orders, I admitted it and it has been referred to and relied on by both sides.

In these proceedings the original plaintiffs and other members of branch 2 applied for the appointment of a receiver for the preservation of the business and properties under partition, and the Subordinate Judge appointed an interim receiver to take charge as such and submit a scheme for starting the business which had already closed down. That receiver was discharged within a few weeks and each side relies on isolated sentences in the judgment as supporting his view. The compromise decree shows that the property was divided into five lots for apportionment between the five branches of the family, but there is no clear evidence as to how the businesses were being carried on. It is alleged that the members of branch 4 were actually participating in the management of the Calcutta business, but again there is no evidence to support that allegation nor is it clear that these were debts for which all the members of the family would be liable. All that can be said is that by operation of law the persons who carried on the joint family business have changed their status from that of joint tenants to tenants in common.

There is no evidence as to the manner in which the debts were contracted nor as to the powers of the Manager of the Calcutta business to bind members of the family who are occupied in other branches of the business. Even assuming that after partition the business remained a joint family business there is no evidence that this debt was a debt for which the other members of the family would be personally liable, and the petitioning creditor cannot get an adjudication order against members of the other branches unless he can prove their personal liability. An argument has been based on the proposition that "all the members of the family, and therefore all their property, divided and undivided, are liable for debts contracted on behalf of the family by one who was authorised to contract them" and it is urged that the managers of the Calcutta business are the "accredited agents of the family and authorised to bind them for all proper and necessary purposes within the scope of their agency."

This is a proposition of law and refers to the position of the managing member of a Hindu joint family. The family here is no longer joint and the extent of the authority that was vested in the managers of the various businesses after the partition decree was made is a question of fact which cannot be determined on the evidence before me. The burden of proving that the members of branches 2, 3 and 4 are personally liable rests on the petitioning creditor and that burden he has not discharged. In view of my findings the petition must be dismissed with costs as against all the appearing parties, including Nos. 5, 6, 7, 18 and 19, who have not appeared at the hearing. The learned Advocate-General, in opening his case, contended that the procedure adopted was incorrect and objected to the use of any affidavits in reply on a petition of this nature. This is a creditor's petition and R. 66, Insolvency Rules, provide that it shall be in form No. 8 in the appendix with such variations as circumstances may require. R. 71 provides for the petition to be verified by the applicant and R. 72 provides for affidavits in support. The petition is then presented to the Registrar, and, if approved, admitted and referred to Court. R. 74 (2) enables the Court forthwith to make an order of adjudication or to adjourn the hearing and have the petition served on the debtor. R. 79 provides that a debtor who intends to show cause should file a notice with the Registrar specifying the statements in the petition which he intends to deny or dispute. Under R. 81 the creditor has to prove the matters disputed, and if any new matter is introduced the Court is empowered to grant the debtor such further time as may be reasonable to show cause.

These are the particular rules dealing with an application by a petitioning creditor, and it seems quite clear that the rules contemplate only a formal petition with an affidavit in support and a notice by the debtor specifying the statements which he intends to deny or dispute. No other affidavit, notice or pleading is suggested, but R. 81 contemplates an adjudication on the materials before the Court including any oral evidence that may be tendered at the hearing and an adjournment if either party desires to produce further oral evidence. I was told on inquiry that this procedure is not adopted and that the ordinary practice is to present a petition supported by affidavits, and if this is accepted, to proceed by notice of motion with affidavits in support, in opposition, and in reply. This may be the procedure as formulated in Rr. 17 to 27, but it does not appear to be the correct procedure in an application by a petitioning creditor for which the special rules to which I have referred have been laid down. In view of the practice which has become prevalent I have dealt with this application on all the affidavits that have been filed although in my opinion no affidavits in reply are permissible. So long as the rules indicate a particular form of procedure that procedure should be observed, and in future, in an application by a petitioning creditor, only such affidavits will be admitted as are contemplated by Rr. 70 to 87. In view of the above findings the petition is dismissed with costs to all the parties who have appeared including debtors Nos. 5, 6, 7, 18 and 19. Costs as of a defended suit.

Henderson, J.—The first point which arises for decision in this rule is whether the deposit which is required by proviso (b), sub-s. (3), S. 174, Ben. Ten. Act, is to be made at the time the application is filed, or before the application is allowed. The petitioners filed an application and the learned Subordinate Judge directed them to deposit the amount recoverable under the decree within ten days. The petitioners then obtained this rule. They are supported by the decision in 61 Cal 338 (1). On the other hand the opposite parties rely on certain general arguments and certain observations made by Mukerji, J., in 60 C L J 112 (2). On behalf of the opposite parties it is contended that inasmuch as the applicants cannot get any relief without making the deposit, it would be futile to provide that the deposit will not be required until some subsequent date; further if the intention of the legislature was to discourage false and frivolous applications, it is obvious that that object can only be obtained if the deposit is made at the time when the application is filed. So far as attaining this object is concerned Lort-Williams, J., referred to this difficulty. Mukerji, J., also in the other case said this:

1. Mofjuddin Muhuri v. Mofizuddin, 1934 Cal 491=151 I O 94=61 Cal 338=59 C L J 69=38 C W N 334.

The learned Judges have pointed out the enormous difficulties that are experienced in construing the clause. We are very doubtful if it was not the intention of the legislature that the word 'allowed' in the clause should be read in the sense of 'entertained', because we are unable to hold that unless it is so read the difficulties can be solved; the solution suggested in the aforesaid decision, in our opinion is not a satisfactory solution of the difficulties.

On the other hand the learned Advocate who supported this rule asked us to examine the matter from the point of view of an applicant who is unsuccessful. His contention is that when the application may be dismissed on the merits it would be unreasonable to call upon the applicant to deposit a sum of money which might have to be returned. Finally the matter may be examined from the point of view of the destination of the money. No doubt if the section merely provided that a deposit is only to be made when the applicant is the judgment-debtor, it might be argued that it is quite reasonable to ensure that whatever might be the result of the application, the admitted debt may be liquidated and a stop put to further proceedings in execution. The difficulty here is that the deposit is to be made whether the judgment-debtor is the applicant or not. We entirely agree with the opinion of Lort-Williams, J., that it is impossible to decide what should be the proper destination of the deposit without taking into consideration the facts of each particular case. We have therefore come to the conclusion that it is quite impossible to decide this important point by attempting to decide what was the intention of the legislature, and to what extent that intention has been carried out by the actual provisions of the section; in our opinion the only satisfactory way to decide the question is to consider the words which have been actually used. If that is done there can, in our judgment, be no doubt that to admit an application is not the same thing as to allow it, and we accept the reasoning adopted by the learned Judges in the case reported in 61 Cal 338 (1). It cannot be said that this decision has been directly affected by the observations of Mukerji, J., in 60 C L J 112 (2), because he was not expressly deciding the point, and did not go further than to enunciate a certain doubt. On the other hand the view taken by Lort-Williams, J., has also been taken in Civil Revision No. 1215 of 1933 by Mallick and Jack, JJ.

It is further contended on behalf of the opposite parties that this is a matter with which we cannot interfere under the provisions of S. 115, Civil P. C., as the only point involved is one of a wrong decision on a point of law. It is clear that the learned Subordinate Judge has gone further than that. What he has really done is that under an erroneous construction of the section he has refused to entertain and decide an application which the statute directs him to decide. Such a matter is clearly within the purview of S. 115 of the Code. Lastly it was contended that we ought not to interfere because the petitioners have another remedy by way of appeal. Certainly, if the learned Subordinate Judge had dismissed the application, the petitioners could have filed an appeal, and if they did not do so, we might refuse to give them any relief in revision; but in the present case we do not even know that the learned Subordinate Judge will dismiss the application. He may keep it pending indefinitely. Furthermore when once the rule has been issued, no useful purpose would be served by discharging it and leaving the parties to get the same point decided in appeal.

For these reasons we make the rule absolute, and direct the Subordinate Judge to determine the petitioner's application in accordance with law. Costs of this rule will abide the result. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Khundkar, J.—I agree.

NASIM ALI AND HENDERSON, JJ.

Jitendra Nath Ray—Plaintiff—Appellant.

Jnanada Kanta Das Gupta — Defendant 1 and others—Respondents.

Appeal No. 1923 of 1934, Decided on 22nd January 1936, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Jessore, D/- 28th August 1934.

(a) Court-fees Act (1870), Ss. 12 (ii) and 28—Document not properly stamped is not nullity—Written statement by defendant claiming set-off accepted although not stamped—Court subsequently directing payment of court-fees—Court-fees still deficient—High Court can, under S. 12 (ii) and S. 149, Civil P. C., direct payment of additional court-fee.

A document not properly stamped is not a nullity. [P 278 C 1]

Where, a written statement claiming a set off is accepted by the trial Judge, through mistake or inadvertence, although not stamped, and the trial Judge although he subsequently directs the party to pay the court-fees does not realise the full court-fees, the High Court can in second appeal under S. 12 (ii), Court-fees Act, and S. 149, Civil P. C., direct the payment of the additional court-fees : 1929 P C 147, Rel. on. [P 278 C 1, 2]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 8, R. 6 and O. 20, R. 19 (3) — Set-off may be purely defensive or may be by way of counter-claim—In case of defensive set-off, set-off claimed must be recoverable at date of plaintiff's suit—In counter-claim sum claimed by defendant must be legally recoverable when he files written statement claiming set-off — Indian Courts make distinction between defensive set off and counter-claim.

A set-off may be purely defensive, that is, it may amount to an adjustment or satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim or it may be a counter-claim under which the defendant claims a decree for the surplus amount due to him. In a defensive set off, the set off claimed must be recoverable at the date of the plaintiff's suit. In a counter-claim the sum claimed by the defendant should be legally recoverable at the date when he makes the claim, i. e., at the date when he files the written statement. The words "legally recoverable" in O. 8, R. 6, mean legally recoverable at the date of the institution of the suit in one case and mean legally recoverable at the date when the counter-claim is made in the other case. Although in O. 8, R. 6 and O. 20, R. 19, there is no clear distinction between a mere set off, i. e., a defensive set-off and a counter-claim, a distinction has been made in Indian Courts in accordance with the law of England, as it is based on a sound principle.

(c) Second Appeal—Finding of fact—Question as to when arrears claimed by person became due is one of fact.

The question as to when the arrears of pay claimed by a person became due is one of fact, depending upon the contract between the parties. [P 279 C 1]

(d) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 102 — Suit for recovery of money alleged to be due from dismissed employee—Defendant claiming set off on account of arrears of pay — Plaintiff filed within three years of dismissal admitting that arrears are recoverable — Written statement claiming set off filed within three years of filing of plaintiff — Defendant's claim for arrears is not barred.

Where in a suit by a person for recovery of a certain amount, alleged to be due from an employee who has been dismissed from service, the defendant files a written statement claiming set off on account of arrears of pay and the plaintiff in his plaintiff which is filed within three years of the dismissal of the defendant, admits that the arrears are recoverable from him and in fact deducts the amount from his claim in the suit, the defendant's claim for the arrears of pay cannot be said to have been barred at the date of the written statement which is filed within three years from the date of the filing of the plaintiff. [P 279 C 1]

(e) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 35—Suit for recovery of amount alleged to be due from employee dismissed from service — Claim found to be substantially false—Defendant's claim for set-off allowed in full — Court can grant costs to defendant and refuse them to plaintiff.

Where in a suit for recovery of a certain amount alleged to be due from an employee dismissed from service, the plaintiff's claim has been found to be substantially false and the defendant's claim for set off on account of arrears of pay is allowed in full, the Court is justified in giving defendant his costs and refusing costs to the plaintiff. [P 279 C 1]

C. C. Biswas, Bireswar Bagchi and Joy Gopal Ghose—for Appellant.

Gopendra Nath Das, Nirmal Kumar Sen and Satyendra Nath Mitra for Deputy Registrar—for Respondents.

Nasim Ali, J.—Plaintiff's case is that he is the Zamindar of Taraf Kalia in the District of Jessore. He had a Kutchery in a village called Kalia. Defendant 1 was his Naib in that Kutchery from 18th Pous 1329 to 5th Falgoon 1335 B. S. He was dismissed on 6th Falgoon 1335. He made over all the papers and cash to the plaintiff. On examination of these papers and deducting the amount due to defendant 1 Rs. 1,747.5-9 was found due from defendant 1. The present suit is for the recovery of this amount. The defence of defendant 1 who contested the plaintiff's suit in the Courts below is that nothing was due from him and that he was entitled to get Rs. 1,076 from the plaintiff, namely Rs. 576 for his pay and Rs. 500 which he deposited with the plaintiff at the time when he was appointed Naib. The learned trial Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit and passed a decree for Rs. 838.15-0 in favour of defendant 1. The plaintiff filed an appeal before the lower appellate Court and defendant 1 filed cross-objections. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed but the amount of the decree in favour of defendant 1 was enhanced to Rs. 865.9-6 by the lower appellate Court. Hence this second appeal by the plaintiff. Defendant 1 has also filed cross-objections.

The first point urged by the learned advocate for the appellant is that the claim for set off by defendant 1 is not maintainable as the written statement pleading the set off was not properly stamped. This objection was not raised in any of the Courts below. But it is not disputed by the learned advocate for defendant 1 that the written statement should have been stamped with court-fee stamp on Rs. 1,076, the amount pleaded as set off in the written statement. The written statement however though not stamped was accepted by the trial Judge through mistake or inadvertence. It appears however that the trial Judge directed defendant 1 to pay court-fees on Rs. 838.15-0 when he passed a decree in his favour for that amount, and defendant 1 paid court-fees on this amount accordingly. By S. 6, Court-fees Act, no document on which Court-fees are payable under the Court-fees Act shall be filed in Court unless in respect of such document the court-fees have been paid. A document not properly stamped is not however a nullity: 10 Lah 737 (1) at p. 743. S. 28, Court-fees Act, lays down that no document which ought to bear a stamp shall be of any validity unless and until it is properly stamped. But if any such document is through mistake or inadvertence filed or used in any Court without being properly stamped, the presiding Judge may, if he thinks fit, order that such document be stamped as he may direct and on such document being stamped accordingly the same and every proceeding relating thereto shall be valid as if it had been properly stamped in the first instance. Defendant 1 was liable to pay Court-fees on Rs. 1,076. He was however directed by the trial Judge to pay Court-fees only on Rupees 838.15-0 and has paid Court-fees on that amount. His written statement claiming set off is not therefore even now properly stamped. The question of amount of Court-fees payable by defendant 1 has been wrongly decided to the detriment of revenue. Defendant 1 in his written statement undertook to pay proper Court-fees on the amount of set off claimed by him. The trial Judge through mistake did not realize the full Court-fees. The learned Advocate for defendant 1 states before us that his client is willing to pay the additional Court-fees. Under S. 12 (ii), Court-fees Act, and S. 149, Civil P. C., we direct defendant 1 to pay the additional Court-fees. On such payment being made the question of the validity of the claim for set-off by defendant 1 will no longer arise.

The next point urged by the learned Advocate for the appellant is that the amount which defendant 1 claimed as set off was not legally recoverable at the date when the set off was claimed in the written statement and consequently the Courts below should have wholly rejected the plaintiff's claim for set off in respect of Rs. 1,076. A set-off is either legal or equitable. Legal set off must be in respect of an ascertained amount. O. 8, R. 6 is restricted to legal set off. Claim for equitable set-off is allowed when the demands arise out of the same transaction or are so connected in their nature and circumstances that they can be looked upon as a part of one transaction. Equitable set off is allowed if the amount be unascertained. O. 20, R. 19 (3), recognizes equitable set off. Again a set off may be purely defensive, that is it may amount to an adjustment or satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, or it may be a counter-claim under which the defendant claims a decree for the surplus amount due to him. Limitation applies to both these claims. In a defensive set off the set off claimed must be recoverable at the date of the plaintiff's suit. In a counter-claim, the sum claimed by the defendant should be legally recoverable at the date when he makes the claim, that is at the date when he files the written statement. The words "legally recoverable" in O. 8, R. 6, mean legally recoverable at the date of the institution of the suit in one case and as meaning legally recoverable at the date when the counter-claim is made in the other case. It is true that in O. 8, R. 6, and in O. 20, R. 19, there is no clear distinction between a mere set-off, that is, a defensive set off and a counter-claim. But in Indian Courts a distinction has been made in accordance with the law of England as it is based on a sound principle. The sum of Rs. 1,076 which is claimed by defendant 1 as set off consists of: (1) his arrears of pay, (2) deposit made by him with the plaintiff. So far as the claim regarding the deposit is concerned it comes either under Art. 120 or Art. 145, Lim. Act. There is nothing to show that the cause of action for recovering this amount arose beyond six years from the date of filing the written statement. So far as the arrears of pay are concerned the question is when these arrears had become due: (Art. 102, Lim. Act.) This is a question of fact. It depends upon the contract between the parties.

The question of limitation was not raised in any of the Courts below. Under these circumstances it is not possible for us in second appeal to decide when the arrears became due to defendant 1. It may however be mentioned here that in the plaint which was filed within three years from the date of defendant 1's dismissal, the plaintiff distinctly admitted that the arrears were recoverable from him and, in fact, he deducted this amount from his claim in the suit. Under these circumstances we are not in a position to hold that defendant's claim for arrears of pay was barred at the date of the written statement which was filed within three years from the date of the filing of the plaint. Defendant 1 is therefore entitled to claim the entire amount, that is Rs. 1,076 both as defensive set off as well as a counter-claim. There is therefore no substance in this contention. The last point urged by the learned advocate for the appellant was about costs. The learned Judge has definitely found that defendant 1 explained all the papers to the plaintiff. The claim of the plaintiff has been found to be substantially false. Defendant's claim for set off has been allowed in full. Under these circumstances I am not prepared to say that the trial Judge was wrong in giving the defendant his costs and in refusing costs to the plaintiff. So far as the cross-objection by defendant 1 is concerned, the only complaint is that the learned Judge in appeal should have given defendant 1 his costs in appeal. In view of the facts and circumstances of this case, I am not prepared to say that the learned Judge has not used his discretion properly. The cross-objection is therefore dismissed without costs.

The additional Court-fees which defendant 1 is directed to pay must be paid into this Court within one month from this date. On such payment being made the appeal will be dismissed with costs and defendant 1 will be entitled to recover this amount from the plaintiff and the amount will be included in the decree of this Court in favour of defendant 1 for costs. If however the additional Court-fees be not paid within the time aforesaid the appeal will be allowed in part and the plaintiff will get a decree against defendant 1 for Rs. 210-6-6 with proportionate costs throughout.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (8 of 1885), Sections 26 B and 26-C—Transfer of holding—Title passes to transferee as soon as document of transfer is registered with retrospective effect from date of execution—Transfer is complete although landlord has not received notice of transfer and his fees from Collector.

As soon as the document transferring a holding is registered, the title to the holding passes from the transferor to the transferee with retrospective effect from the date of the execution of the conveyance. The question whether the landlord is served with the notice of the transfer by the Collector or the Collector sends him the landlord's transfer fee is not material. It cannot be said that the transfer is complete as against the landlord only when he receives the notice of transfer and his fees from Collector: 16 Cal 642; 19 Cal 17 and 1923 P C 88, Rel. on. [P 281 O 1]

erty—Doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to transfer of holding during such suit.

The doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to a suit to enforce a claim to a sum of money in which no question of any right to immoveable property is involved. A suit for rent in respect of an agricultural holding cannot be regarded as a claim to charge specific immoveable property, and if during the pendency of such suit the tenant transfers the holding, the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply : 1928 Cal 441, Rel. on.

A decree obtained for arrears of rent can charge the holding under S. 65, Ben. Ten. Act, only if at its date the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendant subsists. Where, during the pendency of a suit for rent of an occupancy holding, the holding is transferred by the tenant to the knowledge of the landlord but the landlord does not implead the transferee as a defendant, the decree passed in the suit is not a rent decree and does not charge the holding under S. 65 and the decree-holder landlord is not entitled to take the aid of the machinery provided for enforcement of what are really rent decrees which charge occupancy holdings, namely the provisions of Chap. 14, to which he is not entitled and thereby deprive the transferee of the holding from preferring a claim under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. Sen Gupta and Urukramdas Chakraburty—for Petitioner.

Nirmal Chandra Chakraburty — for Opposite Parties.

Order.—The question involved in this rule is whether the learned Munsif, Second Court, Rampurhat, had jurisdiction to entertain a claim preferred by opposite party No. 2, Dolejannessa Bibi under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., in Rent Execution Case No. 399 of 1935 started in that Court by the petitioner, Maharaja Bahadur Singh, against the opposite party No. 1, Nari Mollani. The learned Munsif entertained the same and allowed it.

On 17th April 1934 the petitioner instituted a suit for recovery of rent of an occupancy holding from opposite party No. 1 and one Radhika Prosad Mondal.

The period for which rent was claimed in that suit ended with Chaitra 1340. Radhika pleaded that he had no interest in the holding at any time and the suit was dismissed against him on that footing. The Court however passed a decree against opposite party No. 1 on 30th January 1935. It is this decree which was put into execution on 1st March 1935 in the aforesaid execution case under the special procedure provided for in Chap. 14, Ben. Ten. Act. The opposite party No. 1 had during the pendency of the said suit for rent transferred the entire holding to opposite party No. 2 by a registered instrument. The date of this transfer is 26th May 1934, corresponding to 12th Jaistha 1341. In her written statement, filed on 28th June 1934, opposite party No. 1 stated that she had transferred the holding to opposite party No. 2. The petitioner knew of the transfer, but did not add opposite party No. 2 as a defendant in his suit for rent. The notice of the transfer prescribed by Section 26-C, Ben. Ten. Act, and the landlord's transfer fee did not, however, reach the petitioner before the decree in the said suit for rent.

On 4th April 1935 opposite party No. 2 filed her claim under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C. It is admitted that if the decree which the petitioner obtained in his suit for rent was a rent decree within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which could be executed under Chap. 14 of the said Act, the claim so preferred is not entertainable. The provisions of S. 170 (1), Ben. Ten. Act, are clear on the point. If, however, it is a decree which cannot be executed under the procedure of Chap. 14 it is entertainable. The question in my judgment depends upon the question as to whether S. 65, Ben. Ten. Act, is attracted to the aforesaid decree. In 57 I A 214 (1), Sir George Lowndes, in considering the effect of Section 170 (1), Ben. Ten. Act, made the following observations at p. 222 of the report :

The effect of this provision is that there cannot be an investigation in execution proceedings held under Chap. 14 of the Tenancy Act, of claims by third parties to an interest in the tenure . . . In their Lordships' view it is only arrears of rent that are charged by S. 65 upon the tenure, and it is only such arrears, that can be realized in execution by sale of the tenure. Chap. 14 of the Act, does not purport to enlarge or restrict the exercise of this right, but only provides the machinery for working it out. If the landlord seeks to use this machinery for the recovery of something that is not rent, to the prejudice of a third party on whom the decree is not binding, it would be manifest injustice to deny him the right to object, and it would require very clear words in the Act to induce their Lordships to impose this penalty upon him.

In order to decide the question whether the decree for arrears of rent obtained by the petitioner charged the tenure, the position of opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2, on 26th May 1934, the date when the conveyance in favour of opposite party No. 2 was registered, must be considered. S. 26-B, Tenancy Act, has made occupancy holdings transferable. The manner in which such a holding can be transferred by act of parties is laid down in S. 26-C. The registering officer is not to admit to registration the conveyance till he is paid the landlord's transfer fee and the notice of transfer intended for service upon the landlord through the Collector is put in. On these two things being done he is to register the conveyance. In my opinion as soon as the document is registered the title to the holding passes from the transferor to the transferee with retrospective effect from the date of the execution of the conveyance; the question whether the landlord is served with the notice of transfer by the Collector or the Collector sends him the landlord's transfer fee or not is not material. It cannot be said the transfer is complete as against the landlord only when he receives the notice of transfer and his fees from the Collector. This principle has been laid down in connexion with transfers of permanent tenures under the provisions of S. 12, Tenancy Act, which provisions are pari materia with Ss. 26-B and 26-C. 16 Cal 642 (2), 19 Cal 17 (3) and 50 I A 155 (4) at pp. 161 to 162. Accordingly on 26th May 1934, opposite party No. 1 ceased to be the petitioner's tenant and opposite party No. 2 became his tenant, although both of them remained liable to pay the arrears of rent (if due) claimed by the petitioner in his suit. This position is clear from the definition of a tenant given in S. 3. A person is a tenant as long as he holds the land under another person; he ceases to be a tenant as soon as he sells away all the lands of his occupancy holding.

The position then is that at the date of the suit brought by petitioner opposite party No. 1 was his tenant, but at the date of the decree she had ceased to be his tenant. He ceased to represent the holding from 26th May 1934. The decree obtained cannot bind the opposite party No. 2; for, the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply. The petitioner's suit was to enforce a claim to a sum of money. In that suit no question of any right to immoveable property was in question. As has been observed by my learned brother Mitter, J., "a suit for rent" in respect of an agricultural holding "can hardly be regarded as a claim to charge specific property:" 32 C W N 268 (5). A decree obtained for arrears of rent can only charge the holding under S. 65, Tenancy Act, if at its date the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendant subsists. In 41 I A 91 (6), although the facts were that the plaintiff was the landlord who had parted with his zemindari before his suit for the arrears of rent which fell due when he was the landlord, the observations of the Judicial Committee are general. Mr. Amir Ali examined the whole law on the subject and came to the conclusion that the charge under S. 65 on a permanent tenure attaches only if at the date of the decree the relationship of landlord and tenant had continued. The Special Bench in 59 Cal 1202 (7), has also interpreted 41 I A 91 (6) to mean that. In my judgment the petitioner before me cannot take the aid of the machinery provided for the enforcement of what are really rent decrees which charge occupancy holdings—namely the provisions of Chap. 14—to which he is not entitled and thereby deprive the opposite party No. 2 from preferring a claim under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C. I am cognizant of the fact that it may be contended that a landlord would be deprived of the security of the holding by the tenant selling the holding after the decree and just before its enforcement, but that is a question which I have not to decide in this case. Possibly the addition of the transferee, whose liability for the arrears of his vendor's time is declared by S. 146-A, Tenancy Act, in the execution proceedings would preserve the landlord's security. On the facts of this case where the opposite party No. 2 was not added to the rent suit in spite of the landlord's knowledge of the transfer, the principles laid down in Forbes' case (6) and Krishnapada Chatterjee's case (7) prevent me from taking the view that the claim of opposite party No. 2 was inadmissible.

Appeals Nos. 70 and 192 of 1934, Decided on 26th June 1935, against order of Sub-Judge, 1st Court, Bakarganj, D/- 8th January 1934, and Dist. Judge, Bakarganj, D/- 3rd March 1934 respectively.

Companies Act (1913), S. 153—Scheme of composition passed and sanctioned under Act applies to all creditors including judgment-creditors—Scheme of composition passed during execution of decree—Execution cannot proceed.

A scheme of composition passed and sanctioned under the provisions of the Companies Act applies to all creditors of the company including judgment-creditors. Where therefore during the execution of a decree against the company, a scheme of composition is filed under S. 153, the execution of the decree cannot proceed. The fact that the decree sought to be executed was passed long before the scheme of composition makes no difference. [P 282 C 2]

Judgment.—These two appeals have arisen out of proceedings in execution of decrees in which applications under S. 47, Civil P. C., were filed. The question raised in this application under S. 47 related to objection by the judgment-debtor company, appellant in this Court, to the execution of the decrees. It was asserted by the judgment-debtor company that a scheme of composition under S. 153, Companies Act, for payment of money due to the creditors of the judgment-debtor company was filed before this Court on 31st August 1933 and a preliminary sanction having been granted to the same, a meeting of the creditors was held in accordance with the order of this Court, and a scheme of composition was passed. The case of the judgment-debtor company was that after the scheme of composition under S. 153, Companies Act, had been filed in this Court and passed at a meeting of the creditors as provided by law the execution as started by the decree-holders could not proceed under the law. As it appears to be clear from the judgments of the Courts below, there was not and there could not be any dispute as to the facts, on which the judgment-debtor's objection under S. 47, Civil P. C., was based. There was no question also that the decree-holders concerned obtained their decrees against the judgment-debtor company long before the date on which a scheme of composition was agreed to between the creditors at a meeting held in pursuance of the order of this Court.

On the facts of the cases before us the composition as passed and sanctioned under the provisions contained in the Indian Companies Act applied to all the creditors of the judgment-debtor company, including the judgment-creditors. The circumstance that the decrees sought to be executed were passed long before the scheme of composition, could not possibly affect the position created by this scheme of composition. If the decrees passed before the scheme of composition were not affected by the same as contended before us, the whole object of the scheme would be frustrated. In our judgment therefore the learned Judges in the Courts below are wrong in holding that the executions could be allowed to proceed as prayed by the decree-holders, and the reason given by them cannot be supported. In the result, the appeals are allowed, and the orders passed by the Courts below are set aside. The execution cases started by the decree-holders respondents giving rise to these appeals are dismissed, the objections by the judgment debtor company, appellant in this Court, under S. 47, Civil P. C., being allowed to prevail. There is no order as to costs in these appeals.

Appeal No. 249 of 1932, decided on 10th January 1936, from original decree of Sub.Judge, 3rd Court, Hooghly, D/- 30th June 1932.

 * Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 78—Provision in S. 78 is exception to general rule that prior mortgagee takes precedence over subsequent mortgagee—Onus is on subsequent mortgagee to prove gross neglect on part of prior mortgagee—Question of gross neglect is question of fact—More care is required on part of mortgagee in case of mortgage by deposit of title deeds—If such mortgagee allows title deeds by negligence to be in hands of mortgagor, he will be postponed to subsequent encumbrancer to whom they are delivered.

The provision contained in S. 78 is an exception to the general rule that the prior mortgagee takes precedence over the subsequent mortgagee. The question of postponement of the prior mortgagee to subsequent mortgagee raises the question as to whether the subsequent mortgagee was induced to advance money to the mortgagor on the security of the mortgage property due to the gross neglect of the prior mortgagee. The onus lies on the subsequent mortgagee who asserts exception to the general rule. The question of gross neglect is always a question of fact; its determination must depend upon the circumstances of each case. A slight neglect or carelessness does not constitute the exception for the general law. As a matter of fact, gross neglect must be found and proved. [P 284 C 2]

Negligence consists in omitting to do something which a reasonable man would do or the doing of something which a reasonable man would not do in either case causing unintentionally some mischief to a third party. Gross negligence is a relative term and means the absence of care that was requisite under the circumstances. Gross neglect by itself and apart from fraud or misrepresentation would be a sufficient ground for postponement under S. 78. [P 287 C 2; P 288 C 2]

A man cannot refuse to abide by the consequence of his wilful and unjustifiable neglect if by that means he has armed another person with the power of going into the world under false colours. Wilful and unjustifiable neglect is something more than mere carelessness or want of prudence. In determining the degree which would satisfy the test of grossness, the test to be adopted is that it must at least be carelessness of so aggravated a nature as a reasonable man would have observed and to indicate an attitude of mental indifference to obvious risks. [P 288 C 2]

Where the essence of the mortgage on the basis of which the prior mortgagee's claim rests is the deposit of the title deeds, with the intention of creating a security on the property to which they relate, much greater care is necessary on his part in the matter of their custody for his own safety and security and also to avoid the risk of the mortgagor being able to represent that the property is unencumbered, merely because there is no document about the transaction which could be traced by an innocent subsequent encumbrancer on search. The principle to be applied is that if the possession of the title deeds is an essential part of the earlier encumbrancer's security then, if he having got the title deeds allows them by negligence to be again, without sufficient reason, in the possession of the mortgagor, he will be postponed to a subsequent encumbrancer to whom they are delivered: 1930 Cal 22; *Dixon v. Judgment.—This appeal has merged out of a suit for enforcement of an equitable mortgage. The plaintiff Dharani Mohan Roy is the appellant. On 15th August 1919 plaintiff's adoptive mother purchased from defendant 2, Khitipati Roy, a property known as Ayma Roy Chak subject to an agreement that the price to be paid would be ascertained within a year, and on that basis executed a promissory note in favour of the latter for Rs. 50,000. On 27th August 1919, Khitipati borrowed from one Mohendra Nath Kundu a sum of Rs. 25,000 on executing a pro note for the amount and depositing certain securities and title deeds in respect of some properties amongst which were premises Nos. 25 and 26 Joy Kissen Street in Uttarpara in the District of Hooghly. These premises will hereafter be called the Uttarpara property. On 8th September 1919, Khitipati endorsed over the promissory note of 15th August 1919 in favour of Mohendra and Mohendra returned to him some of the securities which he had previously taken. In 1922 two suits were instituted on the Original Side of this Court. One was a suit by Mohendra against Khitipati, and the plaintiff on the promissory note dated 27th August 1919, in which Mohendra prayed for a money decree against Khitipati reserving his right to enforce the security created by the deposit of the title deeds. Pending the suit Mohendra on 5th July 1923 executed a deed of assignment in favour of the plaintiff.

It is said that this assignment was in respect of the promissory note as well as the mortgage. On the strength of this assignment the plaintiff got himself transferred to the category of plaintiff in the aforesaid suit in the place of Mohendra and went on with the trial. Later on, on 19th July 1923, the plaintiff obtained a decree against Khitipati for Rs. 34 thousand odd. The other suit was by Khitipati against the plaintiff on the basis of the promissory note dated 15th August 1919. Pending the trial of this suit, the execution of the decree which the plaintiff had obtained against Khitipati as aforesaid was stayed. In this suit, as appears from para. 9 of the plaint in the present suit, the value of the property Ayma Roy Chak which the plaintiff's adoptive mother had purchased from Kitipati was found to be Rs. 23,800. This suit had not been finally disposed of at the date when the present suit was instituted and it has since then come to an end by a decree passed on 17th February 1930. On 11th July 1929 the plaintiff instituted the present suit. He based his claim under the assignment dated 5th July 1923 and prayed for a decree declaring him entitled to enforce the equitable mortgage in Mohendra's favour dated 27th August 1919, in respect of which he had become the assignee. He sought to enforce that mortgage against the properties amongst which were the Uttarpara properties, and he claimed that the said equitable mortgage should be enforced to the extent of the amount which would be found due to him under the decree he had obtained against Khitipati deducting therefrom the amount of the decree which Khitipati had obtained against him (vide, para. 9 of the plaint). Khitipati was impleaded as defendant 2 in this suit. Defendant 1 in the suit was Kumar Pramatha Nath Roy and he was impleaded as defendant for the following reason.

On 20th November 1926 and 17th December 1926, Khitipati and his son borrowed Rs. 2,300 and Rs. 1,200 from the Bengal Central Bank by depositing the title deeds of the Uttarpara property, the very same title deeds which had been deposited by Khitipati with Mohendra on 27th August 1919. On 17th December 1927, Khitipati in order to pay off the amounts due to the Bengal Central Bank on the loans aforesaid executed a simple mortgage bond in favour of defendant 1, Kumar Pramatha Nath Roy, and the title deeds of the Uttarpara property were produced and made over to the said defendant 1. On 18th July 1928, defendant 1 had instituted a suit on the said mortgage and on 27th September 1928 he had obtained a final decree thereon. It may be mentioned here that during the pendency of the present suit, the plaintiff obtained an injunction restraining the execution of the decree which defendant 1 had obtained as aforesaid. The contesting defendant in the suit was defendant 1. Various defences were taken on his behalf. Amongst them the one that was found in his favour was that his mortgage, though later in date, was to have priority over the equitable mortgage which the plaintiff sought to enforce. This defence having succeeded, a decree on that basis was made by the Court below and from that decree the plaintiff has preferred the present appeal. So far as the aforesaid defence is concerned, the Judge of the Court below has dealt with it on a view of the law which he has expressed in these words :

The question of postponement raises the question as to whether Kumar Pramatha was induced to advance money to Khitipati on the security of the mortgage property due to gross neglect of Dharani Mohan Roy. This provision is made in S. 78, Transfer of Property Act; it is an exception to the general rule that a prior mortgage takes precedence over a later one. In this case we are not asked to decide if the other elements of fraud or misrepresentations which are similar grounds for postponement do exist. The onus of the issue is on the defendant, who asserts the exception to the general rule. The question of gross neglect is always treated as a question of fact; its determination must depend on the circumstances of each case. It is again conceded that a slight neglect or carelessness does not substitute the exception for the general law. As a matter of fact gross neglect must be found and proved.

So far as the view of the law is concerned, no exception is taken to it on behalf of the appellant, but his contention is that defendant 1, the subsequent mortgagee, has failed to discharge the onus that rests on him in this behalf. In order to see whether this contention is well founded or not we have got to examine the facts. The equitable mortgage in favour of Mohendra was effected on 27th August 1919. In the written statement of defendant 1 it was denied that Khitipati had really deposited the title deeds with Mohendra or had intended to create an equitable mortgage. The Court below has overruled this defence and the conclusion of the Court below on this point has not been challenged before us by either party. In fact it is abundantly clear that Messrs. B. N. Basu and Co., Solicitors for Mohendra, had taken possession of the title deeds at the time of this equitable mortgage. On 14th September 1919 as appears from a receipt Ex. 3 (a) purporting to have been granted by Mohendra himself the title deeds passed from the custody of Messrs. B. A. Basu & Co. to Mohendra. This fact also cannot be and has not been disputed before us. On 9th August 1922 Mohendra instituted his suit on the Original Side of this Court. It appears from the evidence of Mr. J. N. Basu of Messrs. B. N. Basu & Co., that the title deeds came back to the office of Messrs. B. N. Basu & Co., at or about the time when Mohendra's suit was instituted and thereafter they remained there. On 5th July 1923 the deed of assignment was executed by Mohendra in favour of the plaintiff. This deed is not very happily worded but it is fairly clear from its terms that the assignment which it purported to create was in respect of all interests of Mohendra. That is to say, not merely in respect of his interest in the promissory note on which the suit was founded but also of his right as mortgagee under the equitable mortgage. The deed contains no schedule of documents; but on this no conclusion can be built because in English documents it is not customary to put the schedule of the title deeds that are made to the person in whose favour they are executed.

The plaintiff's case is that on 7th July 1923, Messrs. B. N. Basu & Co., made over to his solicitors, Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhikary the title deeds in question. On this point evidence of Mr. J. N. Basu is important. It is true that he had no personal knowledge of the matters relating to the title deeds, but his evidence taken in conjunction with a receipt to which reference will presently be made leads reasonably to the inference that the title deeds were as a matter of fact made over to Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhikary as Solicitors on behalf of the plaintiff. There are certain circumstances to which the learned Judge of the Court below has adverted and which apparently throw some doubt as regards the nature of the transaction relating to the granting of this receipt. In the first place the receipt, as has been deposed to by Mr. J. N. Basu, appears in the hand-writing of a clerk in his office, but that clerk has not been produced for examination. The receipt is on a plain piece of paper without any printed heading of the name, either of the firm of Messrs. B. N. Basu & Co., or of Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhikary. There is also the fact that the signature of Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhikary as appearing on this receipt is somewhat dissimilar to the other signatures of the same firm that had to be found in some other documents produced in this case. But of this last mentioned fact the explanation may be that it is not always one partner or member of a firm who signs for the firm in the documents. But there is positive evidence of Mr. J. N. Basu which is, in our opinion, unimpeachable, and which is to the effect that the signature appearing on the receipt is the signature of the firm of Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhikary.

It is true that there is no entry in the document delivery book of the firm of Messrs. B. N. Basu & Co., as regards the making over of these title-deeds. But of this, sufficient explanation is to be found in the evidence of Mr. J. N. Basu himself, and he has said that when delivery takes place outside the office it is not entered in the document delivery book of the office and he has also said that an entry about this matter may be found in the day book. This matter was not pursued any further or cleared up. The onus being in defendant 1, even though the circumstances to which we have referred are present in the case, we are unable to hold that defendant 1 has succeeded in establishing that as a matter of fact the title-deeds were not taken possession of by Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhikary as Solicitors on behalf of the plaintiff, from the firm of Messrs. B. N. Basu & Co. This also is the view which the learned Subordinate Judge has taken. We think he was justified in proceeding on this view in considering the other questions that arise in this case. After 7th July 1923, the next date on which we have any evidence as regards the title-deeds, is 20th November 1926, on which date Khitipati produced them before the Bengal Central Bank in connexion with the first of the two loans he took from them. There is nothing to suggest or explain how Khitipati was able to get hold of the title-deeds in order to enable him to produce them before the Bank for the purpose of raising the loan. The question is whether defendant 1 has succeeded in establishing that there was gross neglect on the part of the plaintiff which made it possible for Khitipati to get the title-deeds into his possession and utilise them in the mortgages that he effected in favour of the Bank and of defendant 1. The plaintiff's case on the point is to be found in para. 8 of the plaint which is in these words :

The said firm of Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhikary was in charge of all documents on behalf of the present plaintiff, including the original deed of assignment from Mohendra Nath Kundu and the deeds mentioned in Sch. "B" to this plaint which were made over to them by Messrs. B. N. Basu & Co.; Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhikary did not return the said documents to the plaintiff, and in spite of the best endeavour made by the present plaintiff's Solicitors, Messrs. B. N. Basu & Co., has not been able to get back the said documents. And the plaintiff suspects some fraud and bad thing in respect of the said documents.

The evidence on this point that is to be found in the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff consists of the testimony of three witnesses excluding the evidence of Mr. J. N. Basu which, as already stated, is evidence not given out of any personal knowledge on the part of Mr. Basu himself. P. W. 3 Gopal Chandra Mitter is the Head Clerk of the plaintiff. All that he has said is that the documents had not been received by the plaintiff and that they were not in the plaintiff's sherista. P. W. 6 Suk Lal Mukherjee is the plaintiff's cashier. He has said :

The deed of assignment is not with the plaintiff ; latterly through B. N. Basu & Co., Solicitors, the plaintiff tried to get that document but it failed. The delay in trying to get back the assignment is due to the fact it was not thought urgent as the decree in this suit against Khitipati was stayed against execution by the latter's suit against the former for price of Ayma Chak.

Assuming that the witness wanted to speak not merely about the deed of assignment but also the title deeds in question, the evidence does not give us any indication as what may be the plaintiff's case on the point, namely, as to how the title deeds went over from the custody of Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhikary to the possession of Khitipati. The evidence of P. W. 4, Hridoy Krishna Ghose does not take us very far. He simply proves that commencing from June 1928 enquiries were made by him on behalf of the plaintiff in order to find out where the title deeds were and in order to get them back into his custody as solicitor on behalf of the plaintiff. It may be stated here that the suit of defendant 1 on his mortgage was started on 18th July 1928, that is to say, within a very short time after these enquiries commenced and it is not unlikely that in view of the expected suits themselves, enquiries began to be made. A subsequent enquiry no doubt is not a matter of much importance but is not wholly irrelevant on the question of carelessness or otherwise on the part of the plaintiff, a question which we are investigating for the purpose of the present case. We have it on the evidence of D. W. 2 Paresh Chandra Ghose, Solicitor on behalf of defendant 1, that the firm of Messrs Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhikary was dissolved sometime in 1923-24 and that thereafter the business of the firm was taken over by one or other of the two firms started separately by the partners, one being the firm of Messrs. K. N. Mitter and Co., and the other the firm of Messrs. Deva Prosad Sarbadhikary. There is also evidence to the effect that there were successive changes of attorneys on the part of the plaintiff, the names of the several firms of Solicitors to which his business was entrusted being the firms in the order named, namely, K. N. Mitter & Co., N. C. Mandal, D. Chakravarty and lastly B. N. Basu & Co. Whether this change of Solicitors was in any particular suit in which the plaintiff was concerned or in the suits generally to which he was connected is a matter which to our mind is not of very great importance.

The fact is that these firms successively became his solicitors and from this fact it is not an unreasonable inference to draw that he was perfectly aware that the old firm of Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhikary had dissolved. The plaintiff has not examined himself. The evidence which his witnesses have purported to give is evidence which can by no stretch of imagination be taken to have been given with the object of putting forward a plausible explanation as to how the title deeds came out of the possession of his solicitors to that of Kbitipati. It appears from a petition dated 17th February, 1931 that Mr. Dwijendra Nath Mitter, solicitor, who upon the evidence, such as it is, appears to have been conducting the firm of Messrs. K. N. Mitter & Co., after the dissolution of the firm of Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhikary and Sir Deva Prosad Sarbadhikary himself were cited as witnesses on behalf of the plaintiff. But our attention has been drawn on behalf of defendant 1 to the fact that neither of these two gentlemen was served for the purpose of getting them before the Court to give their evidence. No witness has been produced either from the firm of Mr. N. C. Mandal or Mr. D. C. Chakravarty and indeed no other evidence in any shape or form has been sought to be adduced for the purpose of offering any explanation or throwing any light upon the question. As matters stand, it will have to be taken that after the title deeds were taken possession of by Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhikary on behalf of the plaintiff and right up to the time when defendant 1's suit was about to be instituted and certainly not earlier than June 1928 no attempt was made on behalf of the plaintiff to enquire about the title deeds or to take any care in respect of them.

The question in the circumstances is whether upon the facts as found by us it can be said that the necessary conditions of S. 78, T. P. Act, have been fulfilled so as to entitle the Court to hold that the plaintiff's prior mortgage should be postponed to the subsequent mortgage in favour of defendant 1. These are all the facts relevant on the question we have to consider and on them we have to determine whether a case of gross neglect within the meaning of S. 78, T.P. Act, has been made out or not as against the plaintiff. A commonsense definition of negligence which has been adopted in authorities too numerous to mention is that it consists in the omitting to do something which a reasonable person would do or the doing of something that a reasonable person would not do; in either case, causing unintentionally, some mischief to a third party. To use the well known words of Rolfe, B., gross negligence is ordinary negligence with a vituperative epithet prefixed to it. Gross negligence is a relative term and means the absence of the care that was requisite under the circumstances. And as Montague Smith, J. said in 1 C P 600, affirmed on appeal (1868) 3 C P 476 (1), the use of the term is only one way of stating that less care is required in some cases than in others. There are some old English decisions in which it was held or at least suggested that where title deeds were delivered to an equitable mortgagee and afterwards, by some unexplained accident, came back into the hands of the mortgagor who deposited them with a third party, upon the latter lay the onus of showing gross negligence on the part of the first Mortgagee, which should not be presumed merely from the absence of title deeds. In Sir Rash Behari Ghose's Law of Mortgage, Edn. 5, p. 443, two cases are cited on this point: 5 Hare 272, on appeal, 11 Jur 527 (2), and 3 K & J 617 (3). English decisions, it should be remembered, are complicated by the distinction that exists between equitable and legal estates and the contest between legal and equitable encumbrances, matters which do not arise under the Indian Law. Apart from this, it may also be noted that 3 K & J 617 (3) has too often come in for adverse criticism: See e. g., (1872) 7 Ch 259 (4).

In 5 Hare 272 (2) there was no question of negligence at all; and the decision proceeded in the absence of a specific case against the plaintiff (the prior mortgagee) charging him with acts whereby the mortgagor was enabled to commit the fraud; and it was expressly pointed out that no circumstances were raised or stated which, coupled with the fact that the title deeds were not with the plaintiff, would deprive the plaintiff of his right. In 17 W R 1091 (5), in which it was found that by some unexplained means a deed which was evidence of title had found its way into the hands of the mortgagor and the mortgagor had utilised it for effecting a second mortgage, James, V. C. observed :

What we have then is that after the deed has got into the possession of the mortgagor, the property which was also in his possession was made the subject of an apparently legal mortgage. Now, I am of opinion that in the absence of any reason why the deed was not given up by the mortgagee but was allowed to remain so many years in his possession, the deed was given back for the purpose of representing to the world that he was absolutely entitled to the property.

3 K & J 617 (3) and 5 Hare 272 (2) appear to have been cited in the above case. In 4 W N 660 (6), it was held that the absence of the deed prima facie shows negligence on the part of a person who ought to hold them. The presumption of innocence is an ordinary presumption, and if that presumption is applied, it is not unreasonable, in the absence of any evidence that the mortgagor committed theft or some similar offence to assume that the mortgagor got possession of the title deeds by the permission of one or other of the solicitors with whom it may have been at the time, and if that supposition be correct, then the case would go very near the case of (1864) 2 H & M 242 (7), in which under similar circumstances the prior mortgagee was postponed to the subsequent one. On the other hand in 26 Ch D 482 (8), Fry, L J on an elaborate examination of the authorities classified them under different heads and observed that negligence in the sense in which it is understood in Common Law, as imparting a duty on the part of one person towards another, is not a term which can at all be applied to a prior mortgagee who owes no duty to others but to himself in having to keep the title deeds for his own title and for his own security. And in that view he held that a prior legal mortgage cannot be postponed to a subsequent equitable mortgage on the ground of any mere carelessness or want of prudence on the part of the legal mortgagee, but will be so postponed if the legal mortgagee had assisted in or connived at the fraud which led to the creation of the subsequent equitable estate, of which assistance or connivance the omission to use ordinary care in enquiring after or keeping the title deeds may be sufficient evidence, where such conduct cannot otherwise be explained, or where the legal mortgagee has made the mortgagor his agent with authority to raise money, and the security given for raising such money has by misconduct of the agent been represented as the first estate.

In 56 Cal 868 (9), Page, J., (as he then was) in an elaborate judgment in which all the important decisions bearing on the subject were referred to and discussed, has pointed out why in dealing with a question of priority arising under the law in this country as contained in S. 78, T. P. Act, the decisions of English Courts do not afford a reliable guide. It is too late in the day to contend the gross neglect by itself and apart from fraud and misrepresentation would not be a sufficient ground for postponement under that section. Page, J., in the case aforesaid has, in construing the meaning of gross neglect as used in the section, adopted the principles enunciated by Lord Selbourne L. C. in (1872) 8 Ch 155 (10), at p. 160, namely that a man cannot refuse to abide by the consequences of his wilful and unjustifiable neglect, if by that means he has armed another person with the power of going into the world under false colours. Wilful and unjustifiable neglect is certainly something more than mere carelessness or want of prudence. In determining the decree which would satisfy the test of grossness a useful guide may be to adopt the test enunciated by Eve, J., in (1921) 1 Ch 98 (11), namely:

It must at least be carelessness of so aggravated a nature as to amount to neglect of precautions which the ordinarily reasonable man would have observed and to indicate an attitude of mental indifference to obvious risks.

11. Hudston v. Viney, (1921) 1 Ch 98=90 L J Ch 149=124 L T 305=65 S J 59

Upon the facts we have found, we feel no hesitation at all in finding that the plaintiff was guilty of gross neglect, if that expression is to be understood in the light of the test just referred to. Besides, the essence of the mortgage on the basis of which the plaintiff's claim rests is the deposit of the title-deeds with the intention of creating a security on the property to which they relate. Much greater care, therefore, was necessary on the part of the plaintiff in the matter of their custody for his own safety and security, and also to avoid the risk of the mortgagor being able to represent that the property was encumbered merely because there was no document about the transaction which could be traced by an innocent subsequent encumbrancer on search. In our judgment, the principle on which one should proceed in this case is that if the possession of the title deeds is an essential part of the earlier encumbrancer's security then if he having got the title deeds allows them by negligence to be again, without sufficient reason, in the possession of the mortgagor, he will be postponed to a subsequent encumbrancer to whom they are delivered. To deprive defendant 1 of the benefits of the equitable doctrine contained in S. 78. T. P. Act, it has been contended on behalf of the appellant that the defendant 1 was not a bonafide purchaser without notice but had notice of the prior equitable mortgage. This notice is sought to be attributed to him constructively on the supposition that the searches for prior encumbrances that were made on his behalf were sufficient, and that if they had been more thorough and careful he could have known of the existence of the said prior mortgage. (The judgment then discussed the evidence and proceeded). We must hold that the attempt to affect defendant 1 with constructive notice has failed. The result is that, in our judgment, the appeal fails. It is accordingly dismissed with costs to defendant 1 respondent.

Appeals Nos. 704 to 714 of 1934, Decided on 28th February 1936.

(a) Receiver—Power of—High Court appointing Receiver to estate—Authority from High Court to institute suits on behalf of estate may be filed at any stage of suit.

Where a person, appointed by the High Court as a Receiver of an estate institutes suits on behalf of the estate, an authority from the High Court to institute the suits may be filed by the Receiver at any stage of the suit, the authority being required as a question of the bona fides of the Receiver. [P 290 C 1]

(b) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 130—Landlord and tenant—Raiyat holding land of estate without payment of rent—Limitation against landlord arises only 12 years after landlord comes to know that defendants possess land without rent.

As between the raiyats of an estate and the landlords of an estate, when a raiyat holds land of an estate without payment of rent, limitation against the landlord would only arise 12 years after the landlord has come to know that defendant possesses the land without payment of rent. [P 291 C 1]

A suit for assessment of rent instituted within 12 years from the date of the final publication of the record of rights recording that the tenants have not been, paying rent, but are liable to pay the same is therefore not barred by limitation when there is nothing to show that prior to the final publication of the record of rights the proprietor of the estate was aware that the tenants were holding land without payment of rent: 1864 W R Act X, R. 82; 40 Cal 173 and 1922 P C 272, Ref.; 10 M I A 214 (P C) and 1915 Cal 590, Disting. Judgment.—These 11 appeals are by the defendants in suits for assessment of rent on the ground that the defendants have been holding the lands without payment of rent to the plaintiff landlord. Many suits of the same nature were tried by the trial Court which decreed 3 suits ex parte and dismissed all the other suits on contest. In 16 cases the landlord appealed and the Court of appeal below dismissed one of the appeals and decreed the other 15 appeals. Out of those 15 appeals, second appeals have been filed in this Court in 11 suits. The suits which are in appeal to this Court are suits 86 to 91, 111 to 114 and 184 of the trial Court. The same arguments have been made in all the cases. The first point taken by the learned Advocate for the appellants is that the suits are not maintainable at the instance of the plaintiff. The plaintiff is the receiver appointed by the High Court of the estate in question. It is urged that he did not file the authority of the Court to institute these suits, and without the Court's authority the plaintiff receiver cannot maintain the suits. Upon hearing the learned Advocates on both sides it appears that this point of maintainability was not raised in the trial Court in any of the 11 suits now under appeal and no issue as to maintainability was framed in the trial Court. In only one of the 19 suits tried by the trial Court was the issue of maintainability raised, but the trial Court before judgment recast the issues and tried the issue of maintainability in all the suits. The point was only taken in the argument in the trial Court and at that time on 15th December 1932 the plaintiff receiver filed an application to file the authority of the Court, but the authority which he filed afterwards was found to be an authority to him as receiver of the estate of the ijaradars and not receiver of the present estate.

Afterwards, in the appellate Court, the receiver rectified his mistake and filed an authority granted by an order of this Court in 1920. That authority was granted by Buckland, J., to the Official Receiver of the High Court as receiver of the estate in question. It was not granted by name to the individual holding the position of Official Receiver. That authority therefore covers the plaintiff who was appointed official receiver long after 1920. In the circumstances the plaintiff had authority to institute the suits. Such authority from the Court may be filed by the receiver at any stage of the suit; the authority being required as a question of the bona fides of the receiver. The next point taken by the learned Advocate is that the suits are barred by limitation. This point was dealt with by the trial Judge who held that the defendants were in possession for nearly a century and their possession was open, that the property in suit was tanks, and the defendants had long held possession of them without payment of rent and such open enjoyment made their possession adverse to the plaintiff. The Court of appeal below appears to have committed an error. That Court thought that the trial Court had not decided the issue, but the Court of appeal below upon the facts of the case came to the conclusion that no question of limitation properly arose in these suits. The facts of these cases are that these tanks are within the revenue paying estate of the plaintiff. The defendants are all raiyats in the estate of the plaintiff and they have been for long possessing these tanks of their landlord without payment of rent. It may be stated that the estate from 1836 onwards was in the hands of ijaradars. It was only in 1931 that the estate came into the possession of the official receiver of the High Court.

The learned Advocate for the defendants has cited the cases of 10 M I A 214 (1) and 22 C L J 135 (2). Upon perusal of those cases it appears that the facts of those cases are entirely different from the facts of the present suits. The learned Advocate for the respondent has quoted the case of (1864) W R Act X Rule 82 (3). In that case it was held that where A holds and cultivates B's land, A is by the universal custom of this country B's tenant and is bound to pay him fair rent. In 40 Cal 173 (4) it was held that mere non-payment of rent does not by itself constitute adverse possession in a tenant against his landlord. In 49 I A 399 (5) the tenants and their predecessors had paid no rent since 1839 but the lands being within the revenue paying estate of the landlord, their Lordships held that the burden was on the tenants to prove that they were entitled to hold them free of rent and that their possession was not adverse to the plaintiff so as to render the claim for assessment of rent barred by limitation. In the present suits the defendants are all raiyats of the plaintiff's estate. In course of time they took possession of the khas tanks of the plaintiff and they held possession for many years without payment of rent. The record of rights were finally published on 24th March 1920. It was there recorded that these tanks were within the estate of the plaintiff, that the defendants, tenants of the estate, were possessing these lands as settled raiyats of the villages, that they had been paying no rent for the same but were liable to payment of rent.

The suits were instituted on 24th March 1932 just within 12 years of the final publication of the record of rights. As between the raiyats of an estate and the landlords of an estate, when a raiyat holds land of an estate without payment of rent limitation against the landlord will only arise 12 years after the landlord has come to know that the defendant possesses the land without payment of rent. In these cases there is nothing to show that before the final publication of the record of rights, the proprietor of the estate was aware that the defendants were holding these tanks without payment of rent. These suits are not therefore barred by limitation. In the result these appeals are dismissed with one set of costs. Leave to appeal under S. 15 of the Letters Patent is refused.

Appeal No. 690 of 1934, Decided on 28th February 1936, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, 1st Court, Midnapur, D/- 30th November 1933.

Where a person is in possession of the office of the Shebait which was held by another for more than 12 years and adversely to such person, Art. 124, Lim. Act, applies. As the office is extinguished by adverse possession the right to claim a turn must share the same fate.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of the plaintiff's title to a certain share in the pala or turn of worship of an idol Sri Iswar Krishna Rai Jiu. The plaintiff's case briefly stated is as follows: One Rajjadhar Ray founded this deity. The shebaitship of the deity devolved upon his six grandsons, Nabani Ghanshyam, Lakshman, Pranballav, Rasikram and Dukhuram. There had been a partition of these palas between these six persons. Six of these palas out of Lakshman's 60 palas devolved on Ramgopal by gradual succession. After his death, three of these have devolved upon the plaintiffs and the remaining three upon defendants 2 and 3. Defendant 1 who is the direct descendant of Lakshman's brother Nabani in the male line dispossessed the plaintiff from these three palas on the basis of a gift from Ramgopal. The pala of the deity is not transferable to any person other than the next heir. The material defences of defendant 1 are these: (1) that there is a custom of transfer of palas among the male descendants of the founder, Rajjadhar Ray, for more than hundred years, (2) that defendant 1 being the male descendant of the founder the transfer by Ramgopal of his share in the pala to him is valid and (3) that the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation. The trial Court dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiff to the lower appellate Court the learned Judge has reversed the decision of the trial Court and has decreed the suit. Hence this second appeal by defendant 1.

The first point urged by the learned advocate for the appellant is that the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation. It is clear from the finding of the trial Court that defendant 1 is in possession of the office of the Shebait which was held by Ramgopal for more than 12 years before the institution of the present suit. The learned Judge has not reversed this finding of the trial Court. The evidence in this case also indicates that defendant 1 is in possession of the office held by Ramgopal at least from the year 1915, adversely to Ramgopal and the plaintiff who claims the shebaitship held by Ramgopal by hereditary right in accordance with the Dayabhaga law of succession. There cannot be any doubt therefore that Art. 124, Lim. Act, applies to this case. The plaintiff's claim to the office of the Shebait is therefore barred by limitation (see the case of 27 I A 69 (1) at p. 76). The right to the pala is attached to the office of the Shebait. As the right to the office was extinguished by adverse possession of the defendants the right to claim the pala must share the same fate. Plaintiff's suit is therefore barred by limitation. The result therefore is that this appeal is allowed. The judgment and the decree of the lower appellate Court are set aside and the decree of the trial Court is restored. Parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Jiban Kumar De and others—Opposite Parties.

Criminal Revn. No. 985 of 1935, Decided on 25th February 1936.

(a) Criminal Trial—Plea of guilty — Informal admission as to guilt does not amount to formal plea of guilty—Informal admission of guilt in proceedings under S. 110, Criminal P. C., and similar proceedings does not amount to formal plea of guilty.

A plea of guilty in a criminal Court can only be made in response to a charge made by the Court and informal admission as to guilt does not amount to a formal plea of guilty and such an admission has not the same binding effect as a plea of guilty. It has not the same effect in fact and it has not the same effect in law.

An admission of guilt in proceedings under S. 110, Criminal P. C., or in proceedings of a more informal character does not amount to a formal plea of guilty.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 110, 123—Proceedings under S. 110—Court should not hamper prosecution or defence in any way—Proceedings transferred to Sessions Judge—Order by Sessions Judge directing that no further prosecution witnesses should be examined held improper.

In proceedings under S. 110 and in enquiries of a similar kind, neither the prosecution nor the defence should be hampered in any way. Where the Sessions Judge, on the proceedings under S. 110, being transferred to him under S. 123, passed an order directing that the plea of guilty made by the accused, should be cancelled as it appeared that the accused had pleaded guilty and refused to cross-examine further witnesses by reason of an impression created by the Police Officer conducting the investigation that they would be let off easily on making a confession and further directed that the accused should be allowed to examine further defence witnesses if any but ordered that no further prosecution witnesses were to be examined:

Held: that the order regarding the cancellation of the so-called pleas of guilty was reasonable, as they were really nothing more than mere admissions. But the Sessions Judge had no right to direct that no further prosecution witnesses should be examined.

Anil Chandra Chaudhuri — for Petitioner.

J. C. Gupta and Amrita Lal Mukherjee —for Opposite Parties.

Cunliffe, J.—The petitioners here are the Crown. They obtained a rule nisi on a number of grounds, of which we need only now consider the first two. The rule was directed against an order passed by the Sessions Judge of Faridpur. The learned Judge was dealing with an order made by one of his subordinates, if that is the proper expression to use, Mr. De who is a Sub-Divisional Officer and a First Class Magistrate at Madaripore.

It became De's duty to preside over an inquiry under S. 110, Criminal P. C. That is one of the so-called preventive sections which deals with the liability in time of disturbance of persons implicated to execute bonds for good behaviour. The state of affairs down in Mr. De's district seemed to have been, before this inquiry took place, of a somewhat serious nature. There was apparently a rebellious agitation going on, people were being terrorised on the one hand and other persons were apparently arming themselves. It is obvious from Mr. De's order that living in the midst of scenes like this, he appreciated to the full, in fact, one might almost say, was obsessed with what was going on around him. Having examined over 70 witnesses for the prosecution, nine of whom were cross-examined, the accused were, I imagine, asked to make some statement and in the statements they made, there appeared to have been certain admissions for the purpose of notifying the Court that they would submit to the giving of security. As a result of this inquiry, Mr. De ordered each of the accused and they were ten of them to execute a bond of Rs. 1,000 with two sureties each for the same sum binding themselves over to be of good behaviour for three years, and the Magistrate added that, considering the nature of the evidence against them, the dangerousness of their character, and the enormity of their record, the order cannot be at all regarded as severe a curious piece of self criticism which does not often find in this type of order. Apparently, the securities were not forthcoming and the matter got into the hands of the Sessions Judge at Faridpur under the provisions of S. 123 of the Code and the learned Judge does not seem to have seen very much eye to eye with the Sub-Divisional Officer. In the course of his judgment and at the end of it he says :

For the present I would only order that as the accused refused to cross-examine the witnesses who deposed against them and also pleaded guilty from an idea that they would be let off easily on making a confession and since this impression was created in their minds undoubtedly by the Subordinate Police Officer who was entrusted with the investigation, it would be proper for me under S. 123 (3), Criminal P. C., to direct that the accused should be allowed to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, that their plea of guilty should be cancelled and they should be questioned again under S. 342, and that, if they want to examine any defence witness, they should be allowed to do so.

The order of the Sessions Judge terminates in this way :

After taking down the deposition in this manner, the S. D. O. should submit the record again to the District Judge for considering the evidence on its merits. No further prosecution witnesses will, however, be examined. The record is accordingly sent back to the S. D. O. for necessary action.

It is against that order of the Sessions Judge that the Crown obtained the rule and the first two grounds that we are considering may be regarded as preliminary grounds which are drafted as follows :

(1) For that the learned Judge's order directing the cancellation of the plea of guilty is unauthorised by law ; and (2) for that the learned Judge's order directing that no further prosecution witness would be allowed to be examined is illegal and erroneous.

As regards the first ground, it seems to me that there is a fallacy underlying the contentious argument which consists of the criticism of the learned Judge's direction in relation to the plea of guilty on the part of the accused persons. In point of fact, and in point of law, this plea was not a plea of guilty at all. Strictly speaking a plea of guilty in a criminal Court can only be made in response to a charge made by the Court and an informal admission as to guilt does certainly not amount to a formal plea of guilty and such an admission has not, of course, the same binding effect as a plea of guilty. It has not the same effect in fact and it has not the same effect in law. It is quite obvious that an admission of guilt in proceedings such as this or in proceedings of a more informal character could not support, for example, the plea of autrefois convict and that being so, I think it is only right and proper that we should regard the whole of the action of the Sessions Judge to which exception has been so strongly taken on technical grounds by the Crown from a fair and reasonable standpoint. I think that the learned Judge was of the opinion that having regard to the atmosphere which existed in the Madaripur District to which I made a brief reference at the beginning of my judgment with a purpose that the whole conduct of these proceedings was perhaps of a rather less unimpassioned kind than one would usually find in a Court of justice.

He seems to have suspected too and those of us, who have practical experience in this matter, know that such a thing is not impossible that there might have taken place a bargain on the part of the accused and the Subordinate Police Officers with regard to these admissions. A Sessions Judge is entitled to take that view if he chooses. It is, in my opinion, of very great importance that the Judge in his position should take this broad line and should more specially regard the local difficulties both of the accused and of the prosecution when they are perhaps living in an atmosphere electric with unrest. I think it was reasonable that he should have ordered the cancellation of the so called pleas of guilty which, as I have already pointed out, were really nothing more than admissions. I think that the whole of the rest of his order was perfectly correct and proper, with the exception that I consider that he had no right to direct that no further prosecution witnesses should be examined. Neither the prosecution nor the defence, in enquiries of this kind, ought to be hampered in any way. It ought to be open to the defence to cross-examine these prosecution witnesses if they wished to. The reason for this is that the learned Judge with his experience has referred to the abstention, as if it was part of the bargain possibly between the authorities and the accused, so that the accused should not give further trouble. Therefore, our order on this application is that this rule will be made absolute to a limited extent. It will be on this basis that the learned Judge ought not to have directed that no further prosecution witnesses should be allowed to be examined and on that ground alone his final direction, to which I have referred, be altered.

Henderson, J. — Proceedings were drawn up under the provisions of S. 110, Criminal P. C., against the opposite parties. 70 witnesses were examined for the prosecution. None of them was cross-examined. The opposite parties were then examined under the provisions of S. 342, of the Code and, in reply to the questions asked, they made use of the Bengali words :

An order was then made, directing them to give security for a period of three years. As they were unable to do so, the proceedings automatically came before the learned Sessions Judge under the provisions of S. 123 and he passed an order, the terms of which have been set out by my learned brother.

In my opinion the first ground upon which this rule has been supported is entirely misconceived. The ground taken is that a plea of guilty cannot be withdrawn or cancelled. Of course, the answer to that technical plea is that there never was a plea of guilty, because such a thing is unknown in an inquiry under Ch. 8 of the Code. I entirely agree with my learned brother that a plea of guilty means a plea made to a regular charge at a trial. S. 117, sub-s. (2) specifically lays down that in an enquiry under this chapter, no charge need be framed, and in fact, no charge was framed. The statements made by the opposite parties are, therefore, nothing more than admissions and the position is as follows: When the proceedings came before the learned Judge, the opposite parties made a case to the effect that their conduct at the trial was due to an inducement made by the investigating Police Officer; that they were led to suppose that their security would be accepted, and although they led no serious objection to execute bonds, they strongly objected to being given rigorous imprisonment for a term of three years. Now, there were materials before the learned Judge which would certainly justify him, if he saw fit to do so, to come to the conclusion that there was something in this. Indeed, it is difficult to explain their behaviour at the trial on any other hypothesis. I can find nothing in the law to suggest that in such circumstances, a Sessions Judge is forbidden to direct that the accused persons should be examined again. Taking the view that he did, and it is not for us to say here whether that view was right or wrong, this order was a thoroughly sensible order.

The second ground appears to me to be equally plain. The opposite parties induced the Judge to accept their contention that their conduct was due to an inducement and that their admissions were, therefore, made under a misapprehension. In such circumstances, they asked that they might be allowed to re-open the matter. But it is exactly the same with the prosecution; owing to the attitude adopted by the opposite parties, they did not think it necessary to produce all the evidence which they had at their disposal. I entirely agree with my learned brother that if the matter is to be re-investigated at all, it ought to be a proper and complete investigation. I am bound to say that I find it difficult to appreciate why Mr. Gupta should have thought it worth his while to oppose the rule on this ground and to attempt to shut out evidence which was not produced merely because of the attitude adopted by his own clients. I accordingly agree that this rule should be made absolute to the limited extent indicated by my learned brother.

Before dismissing an appeal summarily, a Judge ought to give the pleader an opportunity of arguing the case. [P 295 C 1]

Sudhansu Sekhar Mukherjee — for Petitioner.

Henderson, J.—This is a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of the 24-Parganas to show cause why an order summarily dismissing the petitioner's appeal should not be set aside. The learned Magistrate in reply says that he has no cause to show and the Crown does not oppose the Rule. The petitioner filed this appeal through a pleader. After hearing the pleader, the learned Judge thought it necessary to call for the record and fixed 24th September. On that date, without giving the pleader an opportunity of being heard, he dismissed the appeal summarily. We do not think there was much use in calling for the record, if the learned Judge was not prepared to hear the pleader. We are of opinion that before dismissing the appeal summarily, he ought to have given the pleader an opportunity of arguing the case. In his explanation the learned Judge says that had the pleader followed him to his chamber at the end of the day and asked for a hearing, he would have been prepared to consider his application. We, accordingly, make this Rule absolute, set aside the order dismissing the appeal and direct the learned Judge to rehear it after giving the petitioner's pleader an opportunity of being heard. The petitioner, who is on bail, will surrender to his bail pending further orders by the Sessions Judge.

Appeal No. 949 of 1935, Decided on 4th March 1936, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, Bogra, D/- 12th April 1935.

(a) Bengal Local Self Government Act (3 of 1885), Ss. 9 (2), 138.-A—Rules under S. 138-A—R. 59—Persons staying with father in residence belonging to him for some months in year—No evidence to show that he has title to house—He cannot be said to have place of residence within meaning of S. 7 of Village Local Self Government Act—Such person not nominated to vote for joint undivided family—He is not only member of family entitled to vote.

A person who stays with his father in a residence belonging to him for only some months of the year cannot be said to have a residence within the meaning of S. 7, Village-Local Self Government Act, so as to entitle him to vote unless there is evidence that he has some title to the place of residence; nor can such person be deemed to be the only member of a joint family entitled to vote within meaning of S. 7, unless he is nominated to vote on behalf of the family. Such a person not having the necessary qualification for a Local Board is not qualified to be member of a District Board.

(b) Election—Validity of—One member found to be not duly qualified—Whole election is not invalidated—Invalid election of member not affecting election of Chairman or vice-Chairman—Their election is not invalid.

The mere fact that one of the members has been found not to be duly qualified does not invalidate the whole election. [P 298 C 2; P 299 C 1]

So also where it is not shown that the invalid election of a member has in any way affected the election of the Chairman or vice-Chairman, the election of the latter is not invalid. [P 299 C 1]

(c) Bengal Local-Self Government Act (3 of 1885), S. 138-A—Election rules framed under S. 138-A—Rr. 1, 26-A, 26-B, 56—Civil Court has no jurisdiction to decide dispute as to qualification of members of District Board—Such disputes are to be decided by District Magistrate whose decision will be final.

A civil Court has no jurisdiction to decide a dispute as to the qualification of the members of the District Board. [P 297 C 1; P 299 C 1]

A dispute as to the qualification for membership of the District Board is a dispute under the rules framed under S. 138-A laying down the qualifications; and under R. 1-A all disputes arising under the rules shall be decided by a Magistrate whose decision will be final. It is clearly intended by the Legislature that the procedure should be a summary one so that disputes as to qualification should not be kept pending in civil Court. [P 297 C 2; P 298 C 1]

Dr. Mukherjee and Subodh Chandra Sen—for Appellant.

Dr. Basak, Amarendra Mohan Mitra, Atul Chandra Gupta and Dwijendra Narain Ghosal—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit for a declaration that the constitution of the present District Board of Bogra is illegal and ultra vires; that the election of the Chairman was illegal and that they are not entitled to assume office as such. The District Board, as at present constituted, consists of 18 members, 12 elected from the two Local Boards, namely the East Bogra Local Board and the West Bogra Local Board, and 6 nominated by the Government. Defendants 1 to 7 were the members from the West Bogra Local Board, defendants 8 to 12 from the East Bogra local Board, and defendants 13 to 18 are nominated members. Defendants 5 to 7 are the nominated members of the West Bogra Local Board and defendants 1 to 4 are the elected members. Defendants 8 to 10 are the elected members, and defendants 11 and 12 are the nominated members of the East Bogra Local Board. Defendant 18 is the father of defendant 5. The plaintiff is an elected member of the West Bogra Local Board and the pro forma respondent who was originally plaintiff 2, and was made a pro forma defendant on his choosing not to proceed with the suit, is an elected member of the East Bogra Local Board. The plaintiff's case is that defendants 5 and 11 had not the residential and other qualifications required by law, and as such they were not eligible for election as members of the District Board; that by the illegal election of defendants 5 and 11 the plaintiff lost his chance of being elected to the District Board, and that the election of defendants 5 and 11 having been illegal, the election of the other elected members and the other office bearers of the District Board was illegal and ultra vires.

The contesting defendants pleaded that the civil Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit, that defendants 5 and 11 had the necessary qualifications for being elected as members of the District Board, and that the suit was mala fide and brought in collusion with and at the instance of defendant 3. The trial Court dismissed the suit holding that defendant 5 was qualified for election but that defendant 11 was not so qualified as he had not the necessary residential qualification required by law and that the civil Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit. The lower appellate Court came to the same conclusion as regards qualification of defendants 5 and 11 but held that the civil Court had jurisdiction to try the suit, and that the present plaintiff had no right to challenge the election of defendant 11. It therefore dismissed the appeal. In this appeal it is urged that defendant 5 had not the requisite qualification for membership of the District Board and that as a voter of the Local Board the plaintiff was entitled to challenge the election of defendant 11. Under S. 138-A, Bengal Local Self-Government Act, it would be lawful for the Local Government to make rules consistent with the Act for any District Board for the purpose of determining the qualifications and disqualifications of members. On referring to S. 9 (2), of the same Act we find that every person who is qualified to vote at an election of members of a Union Board within the area under the authority of a Local Board shall be entitled to be a member of the Local Board if duly elected thereto. Under R. 59 of the Election Rules under the Local Self-

Government Act, the only persons qualified for election as members of the Local Board in the district are qualified for election as members of the District Board. So that rules have, in fact, been framed laying down the qualifications of members of the District Board. S. 7, Village Self-Government Act, lays down the qualifications of voters and members of the Union Board:

Every male person of the full age of 21 years who, during the year immediately preceding the election has paid a sum of not less than one rupee as cess under the Cess Act, 1880, in respect of lands situated wholly or in part in such Union or who during the year immediately preceding such election has been assessed at and paid a sum of not less than one rupee for the purpose of the Union rate payable under this Act, or who is a member of a joint undivided family, which during the year immediately preceding the election has paid a sum of not less than one rupee as such cess, rate or tax, shall be entitled to vote at an election of members of the Union Board.

By virtue of S. 9 (2), Bengal Local-Self Government Act and R. 59, of the Election Rules under that Act, these electors are qualified to be members of the District Board. The question then is whether defendant 5 and defendant 11 were qualified to vote for the election of members of the Union Board under this rule. It was found that defendant 11 had no place of residence within the Union and he is, therefore, not qualified. As regards defendant 5, it is urged that he has a place of residence within the Union and that he is entitled to vote under sub-cl. (3) of S. 7. It is also claimed that he is entitled to vote under sub-cl. (1), but on the facts found he is clearly not so entitled. It has been urged on the other hand that on the facts found he is also not entitled to vote under sub-cl. (3) as well as owing to the fact that he has no place of residence within the Union. He claims to have a place of residence at Sultanganj within the Union where for some months of the year during the mango season he lives with his father, defendant 18. The finding is that this residence belongs to his father, that he lives in joint family with his father, and that therefore he is entitled to come in under sub-cl. (3). It is clear however that unless there is evidence that he has some title to this place of residence, he will not be eligible as having a place of residence within the Union. It has been found that he and his father both inherited shares in the property left by his mother and it is claimed, therefore, that they are members of a joint undivided family.

The evidence however shows that defendant 5 is mainly supported by his father and that the father has married another wife by whom he has other children and that it would be more correct to say that they are two members of a family having a joint interest in inherited property rather than that they are members of a joint undivided family. In any case, even if they can be regarded technically as members of a joint undivided family, the evidence shows that the cess was paid not by the joint family but by defendant 18, and therefore defendant 5 was clearly not qualified under this rule. It is doubtful also whether he comes under the proviso which states that only one member of a joint undivided family is entitled to vote. It is true that defendant 18 asked that his son, defendant 5, should be allowed to vote in his place. But it is questionable whether he can be said to have been nominated to vote on behalf of a joint family. But both on the ground that he possessed no place of residence within the Union and that he was not a member of a joint undivided family which paid more than one rupee as cess during the year immediately preceding the election, it is clear that defendant 5 had not the necessary qualification to vote for the election of the members. Therefore, he is not qualified to be a member of the District Board. The other point that remains to be decided is whether the civil Court had jurisdiction to decide the dispute as to the qualifications of the members of the District Board. In this connection the relevant rules are first of all R. 1-A of the Election Rules under the Local Self-Government Act which states:

All disputes arising under these rules other than objections under Rr. 15 and 42 shall be decided by the Magistrate of the District and his decision shall be final.

Rule 24 says:

Every person whose name does not appear in the register of voters and who claims to vote may at least, six weeks before the date fixed for the election, apply in writing to the Magistrate of the District or to such other officers as the Magistrate of the district may appoint in this behalf stating distinctly the grounds of his application to have his name inserted in the register or substituted for any name in the register, namely in the register of the elections, for members of the Local Board; and S. 25 says:

Any person whose name is in the register and who considers that any name appearing in the register ought to be omitted, may, at least six weeks before the date fixed for the election, apply in writing to the Magistrate of the district or to such other officer as the Magistrate of the district may appoint in this behalf, stating distinctly the grounds of his application to have such name omitted.

Rule 26-B says:

Every application made under R. 24 or 25 shall be duly considered by the Magistrate of the district, or such other officer as may be appointed by him in this behalf on the date fixed under R. 26-A and the decision of the Magistrate of the District or of the officer so appointed, as the case may be, shall be final.

Rule 56 says:

The names of the persons elected to serve on the District Board shall be forwarded without delay to the Magistrate of the District, who shall ascertain if they are duly qualified and are willing to serve.

Rule 57 says:

If any person having been elected, declined to take office or be found not to be duly qualified, the unsuccessful candidate, if any, who received the largest number of votes, shall be declared to be duly elected. If there is no unsuccessful candidate, a fresh election shall be held to fill the vacancy thus created.

Rule 59 referred to before states:

Only persons qualified for election as members of a Local Board in the district are qualified for election as members of the District Board.

It seems to me that under R. 56, it is for the Magistrate to ascertain whether the persons elected to serve on the District Board are duly qualified or not and it is also the District Magistrate who, at an earlier stage under R. 26-A, is entitled to decide whether any person who claimed the right of voting for the Local Board had or had not that right. Under R. 26-B it is clear that the decision of the Magistrate on such claims is final. Any one can claim to have the necessary qualification and it is open to any one to dispute the qualification of any person who claims to have the necessary qualification and has been elected; both can apply to the Magistrate whose duty it is to ascertain who is duly qualified, and under R. 1-A all disputes arising under the rules shall be decided by the Magistrate and his decision is to be final. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that this is not a dispute arising under the rules. But any dispute as to the qualification for membership of the District Board appears to be a dispute under the rules which lay down the qualifications. It was clearly intended by the legislature that the procedure should be a summary one so that disputes as to qualifications for membership and as to election should not be kept pending in the civil Court. In support of the appellant's claim that the civil Court has jurisdiction, the case in 14 Pat 24 (1) has been referred to. That case was decided with reference to R. 68 of the rules framed by the Bihar and Orissa Government under their Local Self-Government Act which states that all disputes arising under these rules in regard to any matter other than a matter the decision of which by any "authority is declared by these rules to be final, shall be decided by the District Magistrate whose decision shall be final."

In that case it was held that the decision of the Returning Officer as to the validity of a ballot paper being made final by the rules, the District Magistrate had no power to decide that dispute and, therefore, that R. 68 did not bar the jurisdiction of the civil Court to entertain the suit. So that that case is no authority for holding that in a case with reference to the rules framed under the Bengal Local Self Govt. Act the civil Court had jurisdiction. However, the argument in favour of the appellants is based on the reference made in that case to S. 138, Bihar and Orissa Local Self-Government Act of 1885 which is in terms similar to the Bengal Local Self-Government Act with regard to which it was held that it was the intention of the legislature that an election tribunal should be set up by the Local Government for deciding all disputes relating to elections upon petitions to have an election declared invalid for any reason such as, for example, such irregularity in the conduct of the election as has materially affected the result thereof, or upon such general grounds as wholesale bribery or public disorder which prevented the voters from exercising their franchise, and that the District Magistrate does not constitute the election tribunal to decide all disputes as contemplated by S. 138; his authority is limited to deciding any dispute relating to the procedure of the election save and except such disputes as are to be decided by the Presiding Officer or the Returning Officer and that where the tribunal so contemplated by the legislature has never been brought into existence, the subject has the right to proceed in the ordinary civil Courts unless and until the legislature carries out its duty of appointing a special tribunal.

It may be that under S. 138 it was the intention of the Local Government to set up a tribunal for determining disputes other than those provided for in the rules already in existence or the rules which have since been framed, but in the case of the qualifications and disqualifications of members of the District Board inasmuch as rules had already been framed laying down the qualifications and stating that the Magistrate of the District was to decide who was qualified, it is not clear why the Local Government should have contemplated the establishing any special tribunal to decide such matters. The rules have already determined the qualifications of the members of the District Board and as regards disputes arising under these rules, it has been laid down that the decision of the District Magistrate shall be final, so that, in my opinion, if the Local Government had the idea of establishing the tribunal, it must have been with reference to other disputes than those already provided for in the rules. The Patna case is only authority for the special case which was then decided with reference to the rules of the Bihar and Orissa Government. The finding of the appellate Court, that the plaintiff had no right to dispute the qualification of defendant 11, has been attacked on the ground that the plaintiff had the right of a voter, i. e., as a member of a Local Board in the district, he was entitled to vote for the members of the District Board and, therefore, he was entitled to dispute the election of defendant 11. But in the plaint his right of action was based only on the fact that he lost his chance of being elected in the District Board owing to the illegal election of defendants 5 and 11. But it is clear that the election of defendant 11 from the Local Board of East Bogra in no way affected the plaintiff's chance of election from the West Bogra Local Board. It was only through the West Bogra Local Board he could be elected and, therefore, his election was not in any way influenced by any illegal election of defendant 11 from the East Bogra Local Board. It is, however, contended now that in any case as a voter for the election or even as a ratepayer he was entitled to dispute the election of defendant 11. But even if he be held to be entitled to dispute the election of defendant 11 it would not follow that the whole election was illegal. R. 57 of the Election Rules states that:

If any person having been elected, decline to take office or be found not to be duly qualified, the unsuccessful candidate, if any, who received the largest number of votes, shall be declared to be duly elected. If there is no unsuccessful candidate, a fresh election shall be held to fill the vacancy thus created.

But the fact that one of the members has been found not to be duly qualified would not invalidate the whole election; and, as regards the election of the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman, in this case it has not been shown that the invalid election of defendant 5 or 11 has in any way affected the election of the Chairman or the Vice-Chairman. So that there seems to be no foundation for the plaintiff's claim for a declaration that the whole election or the election of the Chairman or Vice-Chairman is invalid. However, on the general ground that the civil Court has no jurisdiction this appeal is dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal under S. 15 of the Letters Patent is prayed for and is rejected.

Appeal No. 317 of 1933, Decided on 20th August 1935, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, 4th Court, Mymensingh, D/- 29th June 1932.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), Sch. 3, Art. 3—"Dispossession."

"Dispossession" in Art. 3, Sch. 3 of the Act means dispossession by landlord. [P 300 C 1]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), Sch. 3, Art. 3—Suit to recover possession by tenant wrongfully dispossessed is governed by Art. 3 even though dispossession is brought about through process of Court.

The provisions of Art. 3 are attracted if the raiyat wants to recover possession by a suit from his landlord who has wrongfully dispossessed him from his holding. The reason or excuse given or supposed to be given by the landlord for dispossessing the raiyat has no bearing on the enactment. The mere fact that the dispossession of the plaintiffs is brought about through the process of the Court cannot take away the case from the operation of Art. 3, because the responsibility for the dispossession is on the landlord who resorts to the process of the Court as a mode of effecting ouster: 1927 Cal 488, Rel. on. [P 300 C 1]

(c) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), Sch. 3, Art. 3—Suit for possession by usufructuary mortgagee wrongfully dispossessed is governed by Art. 3.

Basak, Gopal Chandra Das and Bhuban Mohan Saha—for Appellants.

Ramendra Mohan Mujumdar for Dy. Registrar—for Respondents.

Nasim Ali, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession. The trial Court decreed the suit. On appeal the learned Judge has affirmed the finding of the trial Court on the question of plaintiffs' title. He has, however, dismissed the suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation under Art. 3, Sch. 3, Ben. Ten. Act. Hence this second appeal by the plaintiffs.

The only point for determination in this appeal is whether the suit is barred by special limitation. The facts which are material in this connexion are these:

The disputed lands appertain to the occupancy holding of one Meajan under defendants 1 to 5 and some other persons. Meajan died leaving behind a widow Jokarjan, a son Tukani and three daughters Matijan, Rabjan and Mamjan. Plaintiffs 1 to 5 and 9 to 13 claim title to the disputed lands on the basis of certain usufructuary mortgages executed by Meajan and after his death by Tukani. The other plaintiffs are Rabjan, Mamjan and the husband of the deceased Matijan. Defendants 1 to 5, who are co-sharer landlords of the holding purchased the right, title and interest of Tukani's heirs in execution of a money decree on 8th August 1922, and took delivery of possession through Court under O. 21, R. 95, Civil P. C., on 5th February 1923. On 29th May 1923 a proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C., was started, and by an order of the Criminal Court passed on 9th November 1923 defendants 1 to 5 were declared to be in possession. After this one of the defendants brought a criminal case under S. 426, I. P. C., against the plaintiff Anam who was in possession of the disputed lands on behalf of all the plaintiffs. This case was compromised on 4th April 1924. In the petition of compromise it was admitted by Anam that the lands were in possession of defendants 1 to 5. The present suit was instituted on 26th February 1926.

It is therefore clear that the present suit was not commenced within two years from the date of the dispossession of the plaintiffs from the disputed lands by defendants 1 to 5. Defendants 1 to 5 are admittedly co-sharer landlords. "Dispossession" in Art. 3, Sch. 3, Ben. Ten. Act, means dispossession by landlord. The fact that defendants 1 to 5 dispossessed the plaintiffs as auction-purchasers cannot take the case from the operation of Art. 3 inasmuch as it would not be reasonable to add to Col. 3, not merely the words "by the defendants," not merely the words by the landlord, but the words "by the landlord as such": see 31 C W N 634 (1). The provisions of Art. 3 are attracted if the raiyat wants to recover possession by a suit from his landlord who has wrongfully dispossessed him from his holding. The reason or excuse given or supposed to be given by the landlord for dispossessing the raiyat has no bearing on the enactment. Again the mere fact that the dispossession of the plaintiffs is brought about through the process of the Court cannot take away the case from the operation of Art. 3 because the responsibility for the dispossession is on the landlord who resorts to the process of the Court as a mode of effecting ouster. See the observations of Page, J., and Rankin, C. J., in the case cited above.

The usufructuary mortgagees are also hit by Art. 3 inasmuch as they were in possession at the time of the dispossession and therefore they had a right to put an end to the trespass by the landlord by bringing a suit for ejectment within the time prescribed by law. The learned Judge was therefore right in holding that the suit is barred by limitation. The appeal is therefore dismissed. The cross-objections are not pressed and are dismissed without costs.

Appeal No. 95 of 1932, Decided on 19th June 1935, from original decree of Sub-Judge, First Court, Chittagong, D/- 18th December 1931.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), Ss. 104-J and 111-A — Re-opening of area and rent settled by Revenue Officers—Plaintiff must proceed under S. 104-J and not by declaration under S. 111-A.

Where the main reliefs prayed for, relates to the question of area of the tenancy and to the question whether the rent payable by the tenant is liable to enhancement or not, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to proceed under S. 104-J if he wants to have the question of area decided and to have the question of rent settled by Revenue Officers re-opened, and this cannot be allowed to be done by an indirect method of having a declaration under S. 111-A. The civil Court would not be justified in granting a discretionary relief by way of declarations, if the remedy by way of consequential relief is unquestionably barred, and which consequential relief is the ultimate object of the relief prayed by way of simple declarations. [P 301 C 1, 2]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 104-J—Enhancement of rent—Progressive rent for certain number of years—Maximum rent to be in force for fixed period—No rent fixed after existing settlement—On revision of settlement, rent can be enhanced.

There was progressive rent for a certain number of years, and a maximum rent was mentioned which was to be in force for the last five years of the period of the existing settlement and there was no mention about the rent to be paid after the period of that settlement:

Judgment.—The plaintiff-appellant in this appeal instituted the suit in which this appeal has arisen, prayed for a declaration that a raiyati jama held by him which was the subject of the litigation comprised an area of 117 drones odd of land and that the Record of Rights as prepared in the last revisional survey was incorrect and inaccurate; the main relief sought by the plaintiff in the suit was for a declaration that rent in respect of the raiyati holding was not liable to enhancement. The Secretary of State for India in Council was made a defendant in the suit, and the claim, as made in the suit, was contested by him. On the pleadings of the parties, one of the issues raised in the case related to the question whether the suit as instituted was barred by the provisions contained in S. 104-J, Ben. Ten. Act. On this part of the case, the plaintiff asserted that the suit was clearly maintainable in view of the provisions contained in S. 111-A, Ben. Ten. Act, and that the plaintiff was entitled to have the declaration prayed for, irrespective of S. 104-J. The scope of the suit, as indicated by the plaint filed in the case, regard being specially had to the nature of the relief claimed, has to be primarily looked at for the purpose of arriving at a conclusion on the point thus raised. In our opinion there can be no doubt that the question raised by the plaintiff in the suit, related to matters specifically enumerated in Cls. (d) and (e), sub-s. (3), S. 104-A, Ben. Ten. Act; and the general provisions contained in the last paragraph of S. 111-A, could not be invoked for the purpose of nullifying the effect of Section 104-H read with S. 104-J of the Act. The declarations prayed for in the suit related to matters specifically referred to in the Act in regard to which there was no right of suit unless the provisions of the law made in that behalf were complied with, which provisions involved the question of limitation. The main reliefs prayed for related to the question of area of the tenancy and to the question whether the rent payable by the tenant was liable to enhancement or not. It was incumbent upon the plaintiff to proceed under S. 104-J, Ben. Ten. Act, if he wanted to have the question of area decided, and to have the question of rent settled by the Revenue Officers reopened. What was not attempted to be done by having recourse to the specific provisions laid down by law could not be allowed to be done by an indirect method of having a declaration under S. 111-A, Ben. Ten. Act. The civil Court would not be justified in granting a discretionary relief by way of declarations, if the remedy by way of consequential relief was unquestionably barred, and which consequential relief was the ultimate object of the relief prayed by way of simple declarations. In the above view of the case we are clearly of opinion that the learned Judge in the Court below was right in holding that the suit as instituted was not maintainable, regard being had to the provisions contained in S. 104-J, Ben. Ten. Act.

The trial Court has decided the question raised before it on the merits, and we proceed to give our decision on the points raised in support of the appeal, so far as the merits of the case were concerned. In the first place, the question of area as raised in the suit, could not possibly be decided on the materials before the Court. The plaintiff-appellant laid the blame at the door of the contesting defendant in the suit, as papers called for from the Secretary of State for India in Council were not produced in Court. We are unable to hold on the materials, that it was not possible for the plaintiff to place on record materials for the purpose of determining the question of area of the tenancy as raised by him. The lands comprised in the plaintiff's tenancy were not pointed out to the Revenue Officers at the time when revisional settlement was in progress; and the plaintiff was unable to specify the lands which had been omitted from his tenancy. In these circumstances, on the materials before us, the declaration relating to the area comprised in the plaintiff's tenancy could possibly be granted to him. The main controversy in the case centred round the question whether the rent payable by the plaintiff was liable to enhancement or not. The position must be recognized that the landlord had the right to enhance rent payable in respect of a tenancy, unless he was debarred from doing so.

The question to be considered on this part of the case was whether the entry in settlement records on which very strong reliance was placed on the side of the plaintiff-appellant could lead to the conclusion that the landlord had abandoned his right to enhancement: see 54 I A 48 (1). There was nothing on the record which could lead to the inference that the rent payable by the plaintiff was not liable to enhancement. There was progressive rent for a certain number of years, and a maximum rent was mentioned which was to be in force for the last five years of the period of the existing settlement. There was no mention about the rent to be paid after the period of that settlement; and when there was the occasion for a revision of settlement, there could be no bar to the rent being enhanced as was done by the Revenue Officers. The trial Court has on the materials on the record rightly held that there was nothing tangible to show that the rent was fixed in perpetuity or that it could be so fixed in respect of lands situate in a temporarily settled area. Reliance was placed in support of the appeal on statements contained in a compromise petition filed in Court by some of the co-sharer landlords, that the plaintiff was a kaimi mokarari tenant. The statement contained in Ex. 9 (a) in the case was not a statement by the entire body of landlords, and any statement of that kind, even though made by all the landlords concerned, could not bind the revenue authorities, in the matter of settlement of fair and equitable rent under S. 104, Ben. Ten. Act. The plaintiff was recorded as settled raiyat, and not as a raiyat at a fixed rate; the fact that he was a settled raiyat did not imply that the rent payable by him could not be enhanced.

The conclusion arrived at by us lead to the result that the decision of the trial Court has to be affirmed. In our judgment there can hardly be any doubt that the real object of suit as instituted was to get reliefs which could not be granted in view of the specific provisions contained in S. 104-H and S. 104-J, Ben. Ten. Act. The plaintiff cannot be allowed to have a declaration the ulterior object of which is to have a revision of the fair rent settled in respect of his tenancy, by invoking the aid of S. 111-A, Ben. Ten. Act. Furthermore, on the merits, as indicated above, the plaintiff has not established his right to any of the declarations prayed for in the suit. The appeal is dismissed with costs; the hearing fee is assessed at three gold mohurs. The cross-objections are not pressed and are dismissed. We make no order as to costs in the cross-objections.

Appeal No. 196 of 1934, Decided on 4th March 1936, against decree of Sub-Judge, 2nd Court, Sylhet, D/- 22nd August 1933.

Evidence Act (1872), S. 91—Terms of kabuliyat clearly showing a contract by lessor to give khas possession—It is not open for lessor to give evidence to prove any other arrangement under S. 91.

Where it is clear from the terms of the kabuliyat that the contract was that the lessee would get khas possession of the lands and in the circumstances, the oral evidence to show that there was any other arrangement between the parties is not admissible under S. 91.

Nripendra Chandra Das—for Appellants.

Nuruddin Ahmed and Amiruddin Ahmed—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit for recovery of rent for the years 1334 to 1338 at the rate of Rs. 16 per annum on the basis of a registered kabuliyat together with damages at the rate of 25 per cent on the rent due. The suit was contested on the ground that the plaintiffs had not put the defendants into possession of the land which was leased to them, and that the plaintiffs were not the sole landlords having only an eight annas share, a fact which was concealed from the defendants at the time when the kabuliyat was executed. The trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the defendants had not been put into possession of the land. On appeal, the learned District Judge decreed the suit. The kabuliyat on which the suit is based states that the holding in question which was described therein as "owned and possessed by me, namely, the lessor, is mourashi right" and the lessee says:

I, having applied for taking a permanent patni settlement and you having agreed to grant the same, I, do hereby take from you this permanent Mokurari Patni Patta to the following effect.

The deed continues:

We have been owners possessing the aforesaid land with other lands since the time of our ancestors in Maliki right. Your having applied for taking a permanent Patni Settlement of the aforesaid land; we have agreed to grant your prayer, and we having received in cash to-day from you Rs. 225 as Nazarana in respect of the 4½ Kedars of land described in the schedule below and after having accepted the kabuliyat executed by you grant this permanent patta fixing the annual kaimi rent at Rs. 16.

The document goes on to state :

You shall be entitled to own and possess the aforesaid patni right and shall be entitled to make gifts, sales, grant leases and make all sorts of transfers. You, your heirs, representatives and successors in interest shall be entitled to own and possess the patni by exercising all sorts of rights such as rights of digging ditches and pools, constructing pucca houses and pucca walls and by cutting the trees and by burning bricks, etc.

From this it is clear that the intention was that the lessee should get khas possession. Ordinarily, in such a case if the landlord fails to put the lessee into possession he will not be entitled to recover rent. The learned Judge, however, holds that this case stands on a different footing; in the first place, because the kabuliyat is silent on the fact that the lessor will have to put the lessee in possession of the lands demised to the latter; and secondly, because it is the specific case of the plaintiffs that defendant 1, who was eager to have the disputed lands in connection with his business, took settlement of the lands knowing full well that they were in the occupation of certain tenants of the plaintiffs and that he agreed to manage matters somehow with regard to getting khas possession of the lands leased out to him. He points out that the defendants who had their brick-fields and other lands in the vicinity and who were actually conversant with the nature of the lands in suit would have surely insisted on the insertion of a clause relating to the delivery of possession of the lands to them by the plaintiff in the kabuliyat, had the plaintiffs actually agreed to put them in possession of the lands. He says that the absence of such a clause, together with the subsequent conduct of defendant 1 in taking steps to get possession of certain portions of the lands even after expenditure of money, lends support to the plaintiffs' story that defendant 1 who was very eager to have the lands in suit undertook to manage matters somehow regarding his khas possession of the lands in suit. He referred to some evidence, with regard to this kabuliyat, of one Jogendra Nath Guha to the effect that this was agreed between the parties at the time of the execution of the kabuliyat. On the other hand, it is contended that under S. 91, Evidence Act, oral and other evidence is not admissible. Under S. 91 when the terms of a contract have been reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given to prove the terms of the contract, grant or other disposition of property except the document itself. On the other hand, under S. 92, Evidence Act, the existence of any separate oral agreement as to any matter on which a document is silent, and which is not inconsistent with its terms may be proved. It is argued that, in this case, since the document is silent as to whether the lessor was to put the lessee into possession, oral evidence is admissible to show that there was no such agreement. However, although it is not expressly stated that the lessor will put the lessee into possession, that this was understood is quite clear from the terms of the document. The document states that the lessee would be entitled to own and possess the putni by exercising all sorts of rights, such as rights of digging ditches and pools, constructing pucca houses and pucca walls and by cutting the trees and by burning bricks. It is thus clear that the intention was that the lessee will be entitled to have khas possession and, in the circumstances, I think that S. 92, Evidence Act, can have no application.

For the appellant the case in 59 I A 29 (1), has been referred to. There it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that where the tenant denies that he ever got possession of the land it is for the landlord to prove that he has discharged his obligation to put the tenant in possession before he can enforce the tenant's obligation to pay rent. In that case it was held that the respondent knew when he executed the kabuliyat that the whole 16 annas would not be available. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the tenant could not turn round and say that because the landlord could not put him in possession of the whole 16 annas he was not liable to pay rent or that the kabuliyat was not binding on him. Their Lordships agreed with the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge on the evidence that the respondent got possession of that share of the land that was available for possession and that it would be an injustice that the respondent should escape from payment of rent in respect of the possession which he has got under the kabuliyat. In the present kabuliyat however no mention is made to the fact that there were other tenants in possession under the superior landlord and there is no indication that the landlord made any attempt to give possession to the tenants or to give those who were in possession under him notice of the lease to the lessee. It is clear from the terms of the kabuliyat that the contract was that the lessee would get khas possession of the lands and in the circumstances, the oral evidence to show that there was any other arrangement between the parties was not admissible under S. 91, Evidence Act. The trial Court points out that the intention of defendant No. 1 in seeking to recover the riverside lands from the plaintiff's father was to dump his limestone there and burn the same for despatch by boats and that it was not as a mere rent collector or tenure-holder that he sought this settlement so eagerly. The lease stated that the lessor was in possession of the lands and from its terms it is clear that this was a contract for khas possession. In the circumstances, it was not open to the defendant to prove that there was any oral agreement that he should get possession on his own account.

This appeal is, accordingly, allowed. The decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside and that of the trial Court restored with costs in all Courts. The prayer for leave to appeal is rejected.

Jagadish Nath Ray Bahadur and another—Opposite Parties.

Civil Rule No. 1068 of 1935, Decided on 13th January 1936, from order of Munsiff, Raigunj, D/- 10th June 1935.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (8 of 1885), Ss. 26-J and 158 (c)—Composite application seeking two reliefs—Common point for decision—No appeal filed against decision under S. 158 (c)—Revision does lie against order under S. 26-J.

The relief under S. 158, sub-s. (c) must in substance be in the form of a declaration and that under S. 26-J in the form of a decree for recovery of money. Where an application which is filed is a composite application comprised of two applications under S. 158 (c) and S. 26-J, and contains a common point for decision, although no appeal is filed against a decision under S. 158 (c) yet a revision can lie challenging the order under S. 26-J. [P 305 C 2]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (8 of 1885), S. 26-B—Holding transferable—Recognition of landlord is immaterial—Statutory right of landlord to recover transfer fee—Holding under transfer wrongly described—Right of landlord for transfer fee is not affected.

When the law has made holding transferable under S. 26-B, there is no scope for theory of recognition by the landlord. The transfer is good, and passes title from the transferor to the transferee, whether the landlord signifies his acceptance or not. The landlord's right to the transfer fee is now a statutory right. If the deed of transfer describes it as an ordinary occupancy holding and no landlord's fee is paid to the Sub-Registrar he would not register it and the title would not pass; for, the transfer of such a holding can only be by registered instrument. If the document falsely described the holding to be mukarari one, and a fee prescribed by S. 12, Ben. Ten. Act is paid, the document would be accepted for registration by the Sub-Registrar and he would register it, if execution is admitted and document presented in time in accordance with the rules for registration of documents. The false description of the tenancy would not affect the transfer of title. This is plain by reason of the provisions of S. 26-J which proceeds on the basis of a transfer of title, giving right to the landlord to recover, together with the compensation, the money of which he had been deprived by reason of the registration being effected on the basis of the false recital.

(c) Bengal Tenancy Act (8 of 1885), S. 26-J—Principle underlying S. 26-J—Obligation to pay transfer fee arises when instrument of transfer is presented for registration—Transfer in fact and not in law should be considered.

Section 26-J is based on the principle that the transferee cannot be allowed to escape from the liability to pay the landlord's transfer fee by taking a transfer with a false or incorrect recital as to the nature of the tenancy purchased which has led to the Sub-Registrar to register it. The obligation to pay the same arises at that point of time when the instrument is presented for registration. Whether the instrument of transfer is effective in passing title to him, the purchaser, or not, cannot be investigated at the time of the presentation of the instrument for registration. The registering officer has no power to investigate the question, and on principle the legislature has given him no such power, for to do so would be to invest him with the functions of a civil Court.

On principle and on the language of S. 26-C and S. 26-J, when the transfer has been accepted by the purchaser, that is, when there has been a transfer in fact, the transferee is bound to pay the landlord's transfer fee in full, and if not paid amicably it can be recovered by the landlord through the help of the Court, under the provisions of para. 2, S. 26-J. Whether the transfer has in law passed title to him is entirely foreign to the inquiry held by the Court in proceedings started under S. 26-J.

Saadulla and Serajuddin Ahmed—for Petitioner.

G. P. Sanyal and Sourindra Narayan Ghose—for Opposite Parties.

Order.—An occupancy holding belonged to one Abdul Kader, which he held under the opposite parties, who obtained a rent decree against him and in execution thereof in Rent Execution Case No. 226 of 1932 attached the holding on 2nd March 1932. While the attachment was subsisting the petitioner purchased the same from Abdul Kader by a registered conveyance dated 30th June 1932. In the conveyance the property was described as mukarrari mourashi holding and at the time of the registration the sum of Re. 1 only was deposited with the Sub-Registrar as the landlord's fee. The consideration recited in the conveyance is Rs. 849. Out of the consideration the purchaser undertook to discharge the rent decree and to discharge a mortgage on the holding. It is the case of the petitioner that no consideration passed as he did not accept the conveyance on finding that the property was under attachment at the time, but this part of the case has not been adjudicated upon as the learned Munsiff has held that he is not entitled to go into the said question. In rent Execution Case No. 226 of 1932 the holding was ultimately sold on 3rd August 1932 and purchased by the petitioner. Thereafter the opposite parties made an application against the petitioner under S. 26-J, Ben. Ten. Act, for recovery of the transfer fee payable under S. 26-C, after deducting the sum of Re. 1 already paid, together with compensation. In the said application they also prayed for the determination of the nature of the tenancy under the provisions of S. 158, sub-s. (c), Ben. Ten. Act. The basis of their claim made under S. 26-J is that the holding is an occupancy holding, but has been falsely described as a mukarrari holding, in the aforesaid conveyance of 30th June 1932.

Although the question of status of the tenant has been gone into fully by the learned Munsiff, the order only gives the opposite party a decree for the recovery of Rs. 168-12-9, the balance of the landlord's transfer fee payable under S. 26-C and Re. 1 as compensation. In the order there is no declaration given that the tenancy is an occupancy holding. A preliminary objection is raised on behalf of the opposite parties that no revision lies as the said order is appealable, being an order passed not only on an application made under S. 26-J, but also under S. 158, an order under the last mentioned Section being appealable. I cannot give effect to this preliminary objection.

The relief under S. 158, sub-s. (C) must in substance be in the form of a declaration, and that under S. 26-J in the form of a decree for recovery of money. The petitioner not having appealed against the order, regarding it as in part an order under S. 158, sub-s. (C) cannot challenge the finding that the holding is an occupancy holding, but in my judgment he can attack the order for payment of Rs. 169-12-9 to the opposite parties in a manner which would not involve a challenge to the finding that the holding is an occupancy holding. In fact, the petitioner's advocate does not challenge the said finding. In my view the application filed by the opposite parties is a composite application, two applications combined into one, but different in scope though for their adjudication there is a common point involved, namely the status of the tenant. If a memorandum of appeal had in fact been lodged before the learned District Judge, the prayer for discharging the order for payment of Rs. 169-12-9 could not have been urged before him in the appeal. For that reason I hold that the application for revision which has only challenged the said order for payment of money based on S. 26-J is maintainable.

On the merits the points made by Sir Saadulla, appearing for the petitioner, are four in number, namely: (i) that the conveyance having been executed during the pendency of the attachment made at the instance of the opposite parties was not valid against them, and there being no valid transfer in law, no transfer fee is payable under S. 26-C by his client; (ii) that the transfer fee payable under S. 26-C or 26-E is for the purpose of getting recognition of the transferee from the landlord and when the landlords in this case have by their conduct refused such recognition by proceeding to execute the rent decree under Ch. 14, Bengal Tenancy Act, against Abdul Kader, without making his client a party to the execution proceedings, no transfer fee is payable under S. 26-C; (iii) that his client having purchased in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of the holding no transfer fee is payable under S. 26-E; and (iv) that even if the other contentions are not tenable, the Court below ought to have gone into the question as to whether his client had accepted the conveyance; and if the facts alleged by him are found to be true, no transfer fee is payable by him and the landlord's application under S. 26-J ought to have been dismissed.

The third contention proceeds upon a misapprehension. The opposite parties have not laid their claim, basing the cause of action on the petitioner's purchase at the Court sale. They have based it on the petitioner's private purchase, that is, by the conveyance mentioned above. There is accordingly no substance in this point, and I overrule it. In dealing with the first and second contentions, I will proceed on the basis that the conveyance was accepted by the petitioner, and that it represents a genuine transaction. The second point urged by Sir Saadulla does not appeal to me. At a time when occupancy holdings were not transferable by law, fees or selamis paid by a transferee were no doubt a price for recognition of the transfer by the landlord. But when the law has made such holdings transferable, (S. 26-B) there is no scope for theory of recognition by the landlord. The transfer is good and passes title from the transferor to the transferee, whether the landlord signifies his acceptance or not. The landlord's right to the transfer fee is now a statutory right. If the deed of transfer describes it as an ordinary occupancy holding and no landlord's fee is paid to the Sub-Registrar he would not register it and the title would not pass, for the transfer of such a holding can only be by registered instrument. If the document falsely described the holding to be mukurari one, and a fee prescribed by S. 12, Bengal Tenancy Act, is paid the document would be accepted for registration by the Sub-Registrar and he would register it, if execution is admitted and document presented in time in accordance with the rules for registration of documents.

The false description of the tenancy would not affect the transfer of title. This is plain by reason of the provisions of S. 26-J which proceeds on the basis of a transfer of title, giving right to the landlord to recover, together with compensation, the money of which he had been deprived by reason of the registration being effected on the basis of the false recital. When the landlord's non-recognition of the transfer has no effect on the transfer, I fail to see how the conduct of the opposite parties in proceeding with the rent execution in the manner indicated above is material. The petitioner having purchased pendente lite cannot claim to be made a party to the execution proceedings and there was no obligation on the part of the landlords to make him a party thereto. Still the petitioner's purchase by the aforesaid conveyance gave him valuable rights against the landlords, for he, by depositing the amount recoverable under the rent decree and the statutory compensation, could have had the sale set aside, or could have applied for setting aside under S. 174 (1) and S. 174 (3) respectively of the Bengal Tenancy Act if a stranger had purchased the holding at the Court sale. I hold accordingly that the opposite parties are entitled to recover the balance of the transfer fee and compensation if they are not otherwise debarred from doing so. This leads me to consider the first and the fourth contentions urged on behalf of the petitioner, which, in my opinion, are the only substantial points involved in this Rule. For the reasons hereafter appearing I do not agree with the first contention but hold that the fourth contention is a sound one and as the facts bearing upon it have not been investigated by the lower Court, I must remand the case. In dealing with the first point, I accordingly proceed on the assumption that the transfer had been accepted by the petitioner and he paid the sum of Re. 1 as transfer fee.

Although S. 26-C, unlike S. 26-E, does not indicate by whom the landlord's transfer fee has to be paid, para. 1 of S. 26-J makes it clear that it is the purchaser who is under the obligation to pay it to the Sub-Registrar at the time when the instrument of transfer is presented for registration. S. 26-J is in my judgment based on the principle that the transferee cannot be allowed to escape from the liability to pay the landlord's transfer fee by taking a transfer with a false or incorrect recital as to the nature of the tenancy purchased which has led the Sub-Registrar to register it. The obligation to pay the same arises at that point of time when the instrument is presented for registration. Whether the instrument of transfer is effective in passing title to him, the purchaser, or not, cannot be investigated at the time of the presentation of the instrument for registration. The registering officer has no power to investigate the question, and on principle the legislature has given him no such power, for to do so would be to invest him with the functions of a civil Court. The following illustration may serve to make the point clear. A, the occupancy ryot, sells his entire holding to B, but later on sells the same over again to C, who, not knowing of the transfer to B, accepts the transfer and pays the consideration money. C's instrument of transfer is then presented for registration.

In this case he has to pay the landlord's transfer fee, for without it his instrument of transfer would not be registered, although by the transfer he got no title, the property having been already transferred to B. In this case, when he finds no title has passed to him, his remedy would be against his vendor, and he can recover the landlord's transfer fee from him as damages. On principle and on the language of Ss. 26-C and 26-J, I hold that when the transfer has been accepted by the purchaser, that is, when there has been a transfer in fact, the transferee is bound to pay the landlord's transfer fee in full, and if not paid amicably it can be recovered by the landlord through the help of the Court, under the provisions of para. 2, S. 26-J. Whether the transfer has in law passed title to him is entirely foreign to the inquiry held by the Court in proceedings started under S. 26-J. For these reasons I overrule the first contention urged by Sir Saadulla. In view of what I have said above the fourth point does not present any difficulty. I have held above that there must be a transfer in fact to attract the operation of S. 26-J. A transfer of property implies two parties, the person proposing to sell and a person proposing to buy and the terms being agreed to by the said two parties. Suppose an occupancy ryot A, the terms of whose tenancy are onerous, executes a conveyance with a recital that the property is rent free and purports to transfer it to B, his enemy, without the knowledge of the latter, goes to the registration office, presents it for registration and pays out of his pocket the landlord's fee of Rs. 2 to the Sub-Registrar and gets it registered, it would be unreasonable to fix the liability for the payments of the balance of the landlord's transfer fee and compensation on B under the provisions of S. 26-J. In such a case I hold it would be open to B, when proceedings are started against him under S. 26-J, to show that there was no transfer to him in fact, on the ground that he has not accepted the instrument at all. On the said principle, I hold that in this case it was open to the petitioner to plead and prove that before the presentation for registration he resiled from the bargain. In deciding this question, the question whether he paid the sum of Re. 1 as landlord's fee at the time of registration, as also the question as to whether he took possession before his purchase at the rent sale, would be material questions. I accordingly remand the case to the lower Court for adjudication on the limited point which I have indicated above.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute. Hearing fee one gold mohur, to abide final result.

Appeal No. 563 of 1934, Decided on 2nd March 1936, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, D/- 24th October 1933.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 109—Amendment in 1928 — Effect of—Amendment affects procedure only—Right of action is untouched.

By giving the landlord and the tenant option either to continue the proceeding in the revenue Court and get a judgment from that Court or to withdraw from the revenue Court and to endorse the right of action in the civil Court, the legislature did not alter the rights of the parties by destroying or creating a new right of action. The right of action is not touched. The bar imposed by the old section to the trial of the matter in the civil Court is removed. The enactment merely affected the procedure. There can be no objection to an enactment relating to procedure having effect immediately although it should affect past transactions and the mode of enforcement of vested rights: Case law referred.

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), Ss. 30 (b) and 109—Suit in civil Court—Maintainability of—Application under S. 105 to Revenue Court withdrawn in 1929—S. 109 amended in 1928—Suit in civil Court in 1932 under S. 30 (b) is maintainable.

Section 109 as it stood before the amendment deprived the landlord or the tenant of their right to have the question of rent settled by civil Court once an application under S. 105 was made before the Revenue Officer. The section as it stood before its amendment was doing injustice both to the landlords and the tenants inasmuch as it deprived them of having their rights adjudicated even though the matter was not decided in the revenue Court. The proviso was enacted to remedy this evil. In construing such a measure the Court ought to give to it the widest operation which its language will permit. Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of arrears of rent and for enhancement of rent under S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act. The material defences to the suit were: (1) that the arrears were paid and (2) that the claim for enhancement was not maintainable in the civil Court. The Courts below have decreed the claim for arrears of rent but have disallowed the claim for enhancement. Hence this second appeal by the landlords. The only point for determination is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to have the rent of the holding enhanced under S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act. It appears that the landlords instituted proceedings under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act, before the Revenue Officer some time in 1928. The claim for enhancement of rent of the holding under S. 30 (b) of the Act was the subject-matter of this application. On 26th February 1929, when this application was pending before the Revenue Officer, the Bengal Tenancy Amendment Act of 1928 came into force. It was withdrawn on 24th July 1929. The present suit was instituted on 19th

January 1932. The contention of the tenants is that the claim for enhancement in the civil Court is barred by S. 109, Ben. Ten. Act, as it stood before the amending Act of 1928. S. 109 is in these terms:

Subject to the provisions of S. 109-A a civil Court shall not entertain any application or suit concerning any matter which is or has already been the subject of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under Ss. 105 to 108 (both inclusive).

In 52 Cal 894 (1), the effect of the withdrawal of an application under S. 105 came up for consideration before a Full Bench of this Court. Walmsley, J. (Newbould J., C. C. Ghose J., and B. B. Ghose, J., concurring and Subrawardy, J., dissenting) in that case observed as follows:

In my opinion, therefore, it is the making of the application that brings into play the prohibition of S. 109, and the answer that I would give to the reference is to this effect, namely, that if an application is made under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act, and subsequently withdrawn, whether with or without the permission of the Court, a suit on the same subject-matter is barred by the provisions of S. 109, Ben. Ten. Act.

This decision was given on 6th May 1925. In 1928 the Bengal Tenancy Amendment Act was passed and the following proviso was added to S. 109:

Provided that nothing contained in this Section shall debar a civil Court from entertaining a suit concerning any matter which: (a) was the subject-matter of an application under S. 105, or S. 105-A, or of a suit under S. 106, if such application or suit has been dismissed for default or withdrawn; or (b) has not been finally adjudicated upon in such proceeding or suit.

In 1929 the observations of Walmsley, J., were approved by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 56 I A 179 (2). In the latter case their Lordships laid down:

The policy of S. 109 is to prevent multiplicity of procedures by enacting that where an application is made in one or other of the competent Courts it shall be prosecuted in that Court and in no other.

The contention of the learned advocate for the tenants however is that S. 109, as it stood before the amendment, is more than a matter of procedure. In support of his contention he relied upon the decision in 35 C W N 1147 (3). In that case it was held that S. 109, as it stood before this amendment, did not merely lay down a procedure, but by taking away the ordinary right of suit of the plaintiff conferred a very valuable right on the defendant in some cases, viz., the immunity from a civil suit and the right to hold the property in the right mentioned in the Record of Rights without further litigation. On behalf of the landlords it is contended that under the terms of the section, as it stood before its amendment, there was no question of anybody acquiring any right and that the section imposed the disability on intending suitors of which their opponents could take advantage. This contention is supported by the observations of Mukherji, J., in 61 C L J 127 (4). It is not easy to state with precision the exact nature of the distinction between the substantive law and the law of procedure. It is suggested that substantive law defines rights while adjective law determines remedies. There are rights however which belong to the sphere of procedure, as for example, right of appeal.

1. Purna Chandra v. Narendra Nath, 1925 Cal 845=88 I C 637=52 Cal 894=41 C L J 456=29 C W N 755 (F B).
2. Raja Reshee Case Law v. Satish Chandra Pal, 1929 P C 134=116 I C 396=56 I A 179=57 Cal 118 (P C).

To define procedure as concerned not with rights, but with remedies, is to confound the remedy with the process by which it is made available. The law of procedure may be defined as that branch of the law which governs the process of litigation. Although there is a distinction in theory between substantive law and procedure there are many rules of procedure which in their practical operation are wholly or substantially equivalent to rules of substantive law. (Salmond on Jurisprudence, Edn. 5, pp. 437—439).

Whether a landlord or tenant has a legal right to have fair rent settled of the tenancy is a question of substantive law. This legal right implies a power of instituting legal proceedings for its enforcement in Courts. This power of obtaining in one's favour the judgment of a Court of law is called a right of action (Salmond on Jurisprudence, p. 192). The landlord or the tenant has therefore a right to sue in the Court of law for enforcement of his right. In what Court the right is to be enforced is a question of procedural law, ibid p. 438. The selection of forum in no way affects the right of suit itself. See the observation of Sulaiman, A. C. J., in 1931 All 635 (5). The policy of S. 109 as has been observed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 56 I A 179 (2) is to prevent multiplicity of procedure.

While provisions of a statute dealing merely with matter of procedure may properly, unless that construction be textually inadmissible, have no retrospective effect attributed to them, provisions which touch a right in existence at the passing of the statute are not to be applied retrospectively in the absence of express enactment or necessary intendment.

Provisions which, if applied retrospectively, would deprive of their existing finality orders which, when the statute came into force, were final, are provisions which touch existing rights: 54 I A 421 (6). If S. 109 as it stands now does not debar the civil Court from entertaining a suit concerning a matter which was the subject-matter of an application under S. 105 which was withdrawn before the Amending Act of 1928 came into force, it would touch existing rights, as it would deprive the order of withdrawal of its finality under the section in its old form. If by the addition of the proviso to the old section the Legislature removed the bar under the old section in cases in which no final order was made at the time the proviso came into force, there would be no question of depriving any order of its finality. It is true that it is a general rule that when the Legislature alters the rights of parties by taking away or conferring any right of action, its enactments, unless in express terms they apply to pending actions, do not affect them. But there is an exception to that rule, namely where enactments merely affect procedure and do not extend to rights of action: 1 Ch D 48 (7).

By giving the landlord, not the tenant, option either to continue the proceeding in the revenue Court and get a judgment from that Court, or to withdraw from the revenue Court and to enforce the right of action in the civil Court, the Legislature did not alter the rights of the parties by destroying or creating a new right of action. The right of action is not touched. The bar imposed by the old section to the trial of the matter in the civil Court is removed. The enactment merely affected the procedure and comes within the exception to the general rule laid down in 1 Ch D 48 (7). There can be no objection to an enactment relating to procedure having effect immediately although it should affect past transactions and the mode of enforcement of vested rights, see 3 A C 582 (8) at p. 603, provided of course' as Mellish, J., said in 3 Ch D 69 (9), that no injustice is done: [22 Cal 767 (10).] Again in 4 Ch A 740 (11) Lord Hatherley observed as follows:

Baron Parke did not consider it an invariable rule that a statute could not be retrospective unless so expressed in the very terms of the Section which had to be construed and said that the question in each case was whether the Legislature had sufficiently expressed an intention. In fact we must look to the general scope and purview of the statute, and at the remedy sought to be applied, and consider what was the former state of the law and what it was that the Legislature contemplated.

Section 109, as it stood before the amendment, deprived the landlord or the tenant of their right to have the question of rent settled by the civil Court, once an application under S. 105 was made before the Revenue Officer. The interpretation put upon the language of the section by the Full Bench of this Court must have been brought to the notice of the Legislature. The section, as it stood before its amendment, was doing injustice both to the landlords and the tenants inasmuch as it deprived them of having their rights adjudicated even though the matter was not decided in the revenue Court. The proviso was enacted to remedy this evil. In construing such a measure the Court ought to give to it the widest operation which its language will permit. The Court has got to see whether a particular case is within the mischief to be remedied: see the case of 6 I A 137 (12). In view of the language used in the proviso I am inclined to think that the present case is within the mischief intended to be remedied by the proviso. Gosta Behari's suit in the civil Court was instituted before the Amend-

I cannot help observing that I think this Court would be making an extraordinary mess of the rights of the agriculturists of Bengal, if it started to apply the 1928 Act retrospectively so as to turn a suit, which had been bad at the time it was brought, into a good suit that could be decreed, merely because it had been kept in existence for two or three years.

The present suit however was instituted after the Act of 1928 came into force. For the reasons given above, I allow this appeal, set aside the judgments and the decrees of the Courts below so far as they relate to the appellants' claim for enhancement of rent. The suit is remanded to the trial Court. The learned Munsif is directed to try and determine the plaintiffs' claim for enhancement of rent, after taking such evidence as the parties may choose to give in support of their respective cases.

There will be no order for costs in this appeal.

R. C. Mitter, J. — This appeal is on behalf of the defendant, and is directed against an order of the Addl. Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated 18th June 1934, by which he reversed the judgment and decree of the Munsif, First Court, Chittagong, and remanded the case to the trial Court. The judgment is not very clear and the ordinary portion is ambiguous.

One Uma Charan Choudhury and others were the owners of a long strip of land which is described as Dag 792. He divided this Dag into three portions, the eastern portion, middle portion and the western portion. On 27th April 1911 he sold the eastern portion to Tara Charan and Jogendra. The plaintiff purchased it from Tara Charan and Jogendra. The middle portion was sold to the defendant and the western one to one Ishan. There are measurements given in all these three conveyances, it being stated that the breadth of each of these parcels of land is eighteen cubits and four fingers. The defendant constructed his house and to the east of his house there is admittedly a pucca drain belonging to the defendant. The disputed land is a small strip of land north to south in length to the immediate east of this drain. The plaintiff filed the suit on the allegation that this strip of land appertained to the land which was sold by Uma Charan and others to his vendors Tara Charan and Jogendra. He asked for a declaration of title to this piece of land, for confirmation of possession therein for a declaration that the defendant had no right of way over it, and for a permanent injunction restraining him from entering upon the land.

The defendant pleaded that the suit land appertained to the parcel of land which was sold to him by Uma Charan and others. He put forth an alternative plea that if the suit land or a portion of it did not belong to him, he got a right of way over it, and this right he claimed on three grounds. Firstly he says that it is a way of necessity, secondly he has acquired the right by prescription, and thirdly there was an implied grant to him by Uma Charan and others, the common vendors of himself and of the vendors of plaintiff. There was a Commissioner appointed for a local investigation by the Munsif and he submitted a report. The learned Munsiff could not agree with all the findings of the Commissioner but found that the strip of land 2'-10" broad immediately to the east of defendant's pucca drain, belonged to defendant, and the rest of the suit land belonged to the plaintiff. On the alternative defence he found that the defendant had established a right of way over the portion of the suit land belonging to the plaintiff.

There was an appeal by the plaintiff. He contended that the finding of the learned Munsiff that a portion of the strip of land belonged to the defendant was wrong as also the finding of the learned Munsiff that the defendant had a right of way over the rest of the land. The defendant filed cross-objections and contended that the learned Munsiff ought to have found that the whole of the disputed land belonged to him in proprietary right. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that as both the parties had attacked the Commissioner's report, the Court of first instance ought to have appointed another commissioner for local investigation. In this view of the matter he said that for the purposes of determining the proprietary right to the land in suit a new Commissioner, ought to be appointed. For this purpose he remanded the case to the trial Court and directed that Court to determine the question of title on the evidence already on the record. With regard to the form of this remand order the appellant has raised no question nor has the respondent attacked the form of the remand order.

With regard to the claim of easement by the defendant, the Court of appeal below held that inasmuch as the suit was instituted nineteen years, eleven months and twenty five days from the date when Uma Charan and others sold their property to the defendant and the plaintiff's vendor, the claim of the defendant to an easement based on prescription could not be justified. We think that this view of the lower appellate Court is right. During the time of Uma Charan and others, if any portion of Dag 792 was used by them for the purposes of going to the tank, that user was in their character as owners of the land. It is only on 27th April 1911, that Uma Charan and others divided the land into three parts. It is from this date there could be scope for acquisition of a right of easement by prescription. Inasmuch as the suit was instituted before the defendant could use the strip of land as a pathway for a period of twenty years. We agree with the learned Additional Subordinate Judge in holding that the claim based on prescription could not be sustained, because the user of the defendant was not for the requisite period. We do not agree in the contention of Mr. Das that inasmuch as the defendant had in fact been using the pathway after the institution of the suit, his client is entitled to add the period of user after the institution of the suit, for the purpose of acquiring by prescription a right of easement. Such user was not peaceable but disputed after the institution of the suit. In this view of the matter, as we have already said, the claim of the defendant based on prescription, cannot stand.

The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has also found that there could not be any claim based on necessity. He pointed out that the disputed strip of land was not absolutely necessary for the enjoyment of the defendant's land, because he has got other ways to go to the tank. This finding at once demolishes the defendant's claim to the pathway as a way of necessity. Mr. Das in the end very fairly conceded that he could not place his case on the basis that the disputed strip of land is a way of necessity. There remains only the question as to whether the defendant can claim a right of way over the disputed strip of land on the basis of implied grant. In this respect the learned Subordinate Judge is not very happy in his expressions, for in one part of the judgment he makes the following observations:

In Bengal the rule of implied grant does not apply: 96 I C 913 (1); So 8 Cal 956 (2) is not good law, as it was referred to in 8 C L J 289 (3), where there was no pucca metalled road.

If he meant to lay the proposition in the broad way that in Bengal the rule of implied grant does not apply certainly he is wrong. But the last portion of this involved sentence introduces a qualification by saying "where there is no metalled road." Although we are of opinion that this sentence is not a very happy sentence, on the facts which are admitted, there cannot be any question of there being an implied grant in favour of the defendant. The facts are these. Three conveyances were executed on the same day to three sets of persons whom we have already named. In the conveyance in favour of the defendant there was no grant of any right of way over any other land which was conveyed to the other sets of persons. From para. 8 of the written statement it is quite clear that there was no formed road during the time the whole dag belonged to Uma Charan and others. The defendant clearly states in that para that after his purchase of the middle portion and the purchase of Tara Prasanna and Jogendra of the eastern portion the disputed land was left as a common passage by agreement between them. The law on the subject is well settled. Where two tenements are severed, the grantee takes by an implied grant all quasi-easement of an apparent and continuous nature. A right of way is not classed generally amongst quasi-easements of an apparent and continuous character. It is only when there is a formed road that the quasi-easement can be classed as one of an apparent and continuous nature. At p. 165 of "Gale on Easements," 11th Edn., the law is summarized by the learned author, after an exhaustive examination of the leading cases in England on the subject thus:

Where two tenements are severed and at the time of severance a formed road exists over one (the quasi servient) tenement for the apparent use of the other (the quasi dominant) tenement, such formed road being necessary for the reasonable and convenient enjoyment of the quasi dominant tenement, a right to use such formed road will, it is submitted, pass by implied grant with the quasi dominant tenement, even where the only apparent sign is the state of the road on the quasi servient tenement itself. And where the apparent sign of user is a part, not of the tenement retained, but of the tenement conveyed, such as a substantial and permanent door-way or a formed road extending over both tenements, there is ample authority for saying that the doctrine of implied grant applies.

As regards the cases, however, where there is no formed or defined road over the quasi servient tenement so that the way is not evidenced by any apparent sign the rule in the older authorities was clear that upon severance there was no implied grant, in other words, that quasi easements not continuous and apparent in their nature (like an ordinary right of way) did not pass on severance unless the owner used language to show that he intended to create the easement de novo.

We have already said that in the conveyance in favour of the defendant, there is nothing which would imply that an easement was intended to be created. The admission of the parties is that during the time of Uma Charan and others, there was no formed or defined road way in any portion of Dag 792. In this view of the matter we hold that there is no scope for the application of the doctrine of implied grant to the case before us, and on this ground we support the decree of the Court below by which the defendant's claim to easement has been negatived. The result is that the order of the Court below is affirmed, but as there is ambiguity in the order of the learned Subordinate Judge we think it right to summarize the result of the appeal. The result is that the claim of the defendant that he has got a right of easement over the disputed strip of land or any portion thereof is negatived, and the remand order of the learned Subordinate Judge would cover only the question of title to the disputed strip of land. The respondent is entitled to the costs of this appeal; hearing fee is assessed at two gold mohurs. Further costs will abide the result. No order is necessary on the application.

Appeal No. 985 of 1934, Decided on 12th February 1936, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, First Court, Bakarganj, D/- 22nd January 1934.

(a) Mortgage — Validity — Usufructuary mortgage—Subsequent mortgagee also taking usufructuary mortgage, redeeming prior mortgage — Subsequent mortgage is not invalid.

Where a subsequent mortgagee, taking a usufructuary mortgage, redeems forthwith the prior mortgage which is also usufructuary, there can be no conflicting interest as to possession as there are no two usufructuary mortgages subsisting at one and the same time. [P 314 C 1]

(b) Mortgage — Subrogation — Three mortgages executed in respect of same property—Third mortgagee expressly told that there is only one mortgage, namely first mortgage—First mortgage redeemed by third mortgagee with part of consideration of his mortgage—He is entitled to be subrogated to rights of first mortgagee. Second mortgagee is bound to pay to third mortgagee amount paid by him in redeeming the first mortgage.

In deciding whether a subsequent mortgagee is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee each case must be judged on its own facts.

Where the mortgagors having mortgaged the same property with two different persons, expressly state to the third mortgagee that there is only one mortgage subsisting on the property and the third mortgagee redeems the first mortgage with a part of the consideration of the third mortgage and obtains the first person's mortgage bond without notice of the intermediate mortgage, he must be presumed to have intended to keep the prior alive as a shield against any intermediate mortgagee who might be discovered later and is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the first mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems. The second mortgagee bringing a suit on his mortgage is therefore bound to pay the third mortgagee the amount paid by him in redeeming the first mortgage before he can satisfy his own mortgage out of the mortgaged property : 29 Cal 154 (P C) and 39 Cal 527 (P C), Ref. [P 314 C 2 ; P 315 C 1]

Judgment. — This is an appeal by defendant 3 in a suit for sale by enforcing a simple mortgage bond executed by defendants 1 and 2 in favour of the plaintiff in April 1923. The facts which are necessary to discuss the issue raised in this Court are that defendants 1 and 2, who may be called the mortgagors, mortgaged the property in dispute in March 1923 to Moslem Khan. About a month thereafter, in April 1923, they again mortgaged the same property to the plaintiff. Four years later, in April 1927, they mortgaged the same property to defendant 3. In that mortgage bond they stated that the properties were previously mortgaged to Moslem Khan, that about Rs. 700 was due on that mortgage and the mortgagors agreed that defendant 3 should keep the required amount in deposit to pay off the said mortgage, and that on redemption thereof, defendant 3 would keep the bond. They also stated that except that mortgage in favour of Moslem Khan, the properties were not otherwise encumbered. Thereafter defendant 3 paid a sum of Rs. 680 to Moslem Khan and redeemed the first mortgage and obtained the mortgage bond. The present suit was instituted in 1932. Defendant 3 contested the suit. He raised various defences which were repelled by the Court of appeal below and the suit was decreed in full.

In appeal the learned advocate has urged only one issue, namely whether the appellant is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the first mortgagee Moslem Khan. The Court of appeal below decided the issue against the appellant on the grounds that both the first and third mortgages were usufructuary mortgage bonds and two usufructuary bonds could not subsist at one and the same time, and that there could be no subrogation if the subsequent mortgagee paid off the first mortgage out of his mortgage money. Upon hearing the learned advocates on both sides it appears that the first ground of the learned Subordinate Judge is of no weight. The appellant obtained a usufructuary mortgage and though the first mortgage was usufructuary he redeemed it forthwith and there could be therefore no conflicting interest as to possession.

The second point, that there can be no subrogation if the subsequent mortgagee paid off the prior mortgage out of the mortgage money, is a more difficult question of law. It was urged on one side that the issue is governed by S. 92, T. P. Act. On the other side it was urged that that Section had no application as the mortgages were effected before April 1930, when S. 92 came into force. The question is of mere academic importance. If S. 92 does not apply then Ss. 74 and 75 which were repealed would apply and the effect of those Sections is the same as of S. 92 in this case. The question here is whether in the circumstances of his case the Court should presume an intention on the part of defendant 3 to keep the first charge alive for his own benefit. Many cases were cited by the learned advocates on both sides. On the side of the respondent the case in 36 C W N 4 (1) was cited. In that case where the vendee of a half share of a property already mortgaged stipulated to pay, as part of the consideration, half the mortgage-debt, but afterwards he paid the whole of the mortgage money to defeat a Court sale, it was held that in redeeming the mortgage in suit, the said vendee would get no credit for that half of the sum which he was bound to pay under the terms of the purchase, but would get credit for the other half. In that case the vendee had bound himself to pay half of the mortgage money, and it was his duty to pay that half, therefore he could not get subrogation for that half. The case in 62 Cal 677 (2) was also cited. In that case the subrogation was claimed by a purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption; it was refused by this Court.

On the other side is quoted the case in 29 I A 9 (3). In that case the property was mortgaged first to A and then to B and then attached by a certain creditor of a mortgagor. The mortgagor raised money by a third mortgage to C agreeing with him that he would pay the two prior mortgages out of the consideration of the third mortgage and would make over the mortgage-deeds to the third mortgagor. Accordingly the mortgages to A and B were paid off and the reconveyances handed over to C. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held in the circumstances that there was no intention to extinguish the prior mortgages and that the mortgagor paid the debts in pursuance of a mortgage with C for the benefit of C. C was therefore allowed subrogation against the attaching creditor. In the case of 39 Cal 527 (4), where the fifth mortgagee paid off the first mortgage and there were 3 intermediate mortgages, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that he must have intended to keep the first mortgage alive and to stand in the place of the first mortgagee. Every case must be decided upon its own facts. In the present case the mortgagors stated solemnly to the appellant that there was only one prior mortgage subsisting on the property, namely that due to Moslem Khan, and that the properties were otherwise unencumbered. They stated that if afterwards it was found that they

In these circumstances the appellant made an agreement with the mortgagors that they would, out of the consideration money, pay the mortgage of Moslem Khan and make over the deed to him. This was, in fact, done. In the circumstances there can be no doubt that the appellant intended to keep that prior mortgage alive as a shield against any intermediate mortgagee who might be discovered afterwards. There cannot be any doubt about the intention of the appellant.

The next question is whether in justice and equity his prayer for subrogation should be allowed. If the appellant had not paid off the prior mortgage, the plaintiff could not sell the property without the charge of that first mortgage. He would have only got the property after the charge of the first mortgage was satisfied. The appellant has saved the plaintiff from that liability. In justice therefore the plaintiff is bound to pay that sum of Rs. 680 to the appellant before he can satisfy his own mortgage out of the mortgage property. In the result the appeal is allowed with costs. The plaintiff's suit is decreed in part subject to the first charge of Rs. 680 to be paid to defendant 3. Defendant 3 will get his costs against the contesting plaintiff in this Court, and in the lower Courts the parties will bear their own costs. Leave to appeal under S. 15 of the Letters Patent is refused.

Appeal No. 1781 of 1933, Decided on 27th February 1936, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, 2nd Court, Mymensingh, D/. 4th May 1933.

(a) Promissory Note—Suit on — Executant not proved to have received any consideration—Instrument does not create any obligation between parties.

Where it is proved that the executant of the promissory note did not receive any consideration for it, the negotiable instrument does not create any obligation between the holder and the executant.

(b) Negotiable Instruments Act (1881), S. 78—Holder of promissory note manager of firm—Holder electing to treat payment to firm as payment to himself — Payment amounts to payment to holder — Debtor is discharged from liability.

Although under S. 78, payments must be made to the holder of the promissory note, yet if the holder who is the Manager of a firm elects to treat the payment to his firm as the payment to himself, the payment is payment to the holder within the meaning of S. 78 and the debtor is discharged from the liability under the promissory note: *Field v. Judgment. — This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of money due on a promissory note for Rs. 1,000. The plaintiff's case is that he lent Rs. 1,000 to the defendant in cash on the basis of this handnote. The defendant denied this. The Courts have come to the conclusion that the defendant did not receive Rs. 1,000 as consideration for the handnote in question. The suit has been dismissed by the Courts below. Hence this second appeal by the plaintiff.

In view of the concurrent findings of the Courts below that the defendant did not receive any consideration for this promissory note, the negotiable instrument did not create any obligation between the plaintiff and the defendant. It is however contended on behalf of the plaintiff that as the defendant's case is that he executed the promissory note in consideration of the advances made by the firm of which the plaintiff is the managing partner, and as no payment was made to the plaintiff who is the holder of the negotiable instrument, the defendant is liable to pay the amount mentioned in the handnote to the plaintiff. I am unable to accept this contention. From the evidence of Abhoy Saha, whom the learned Judge has believed, it appears that at the time of settlement of accounts between the Firm of which the plaintiff is the managing partner and the Firm of which the defendant is the managing partner, a certain quantity of jute worth Rs. 1,000 delivered by the defendant Firm to the plaintiff Firm was accepted by the plaintiff in full discharge of the obligation under the handnote in question, and the plaintiff agreed to return the promissory note in suit to the defendant. It is true that under S. 78, Negotiable Instruments Act, payments must be made to the holder, but if the plaintiff, that is the holder of the promissory note, elected to treat the payment to his Firm as the payment to himself, the payment was a payment to the holder within the meaning of S. 78, Negotiable Instruments, Act and the debtor was discharged from the liability under the promissory note. See 5 Bing 13 (1). The Courts below were therefore right in dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeals Nos. 169, 170, 174, 175, 176, 177 and 196 of 1936, Decided on 17th February 1936.

(a) Government of India Act (1919), S. 49—Order by Bengal Government directing, in exercise of power conferred by S. 25 of Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, prosecution of certain persons for offences under Arms Act, affixed with Government Seal, is not required to be proved according to S. 78 of Evidence Act—It is original document within meaning of S. 49 and cannot be called into question—Henderson, J., contra.

An order passed by the Government setting out the names of certain persons as having committed various offences under the Arms Act and directing, in exercise of powers conferred by S. 25, Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, that they should be tried by a Magistrate, invested with the power of a special Magistrate, which ends with "by order of the Governor-in-Council" and is signed by the under Secretary to the Government of Bengal and is also affixed with the official seal of the Government of Bengal, is not a copy but an original document within the meaning of S. 49, Government of India Act, and cannot be called into question or required to be proved according to the usual mode of proof of Government documents, which do not prove themselves, as laid down in S. 78, Evidence Act. [P 317 O 2]

Per Henderson, J.—There is nothing in the terms of S. 49 that the proof of the order is dispensed with. S. 49 does not, in plain terms, empower the Court to take judicial notice of such an order. It is, however, open to the prosecution to adopt any legal mode of proof they please. Although S. 78, Evidence Act, provides a convenient mode, it is by its very terms not exhaustive. [P 321 O 1]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 8, 27—Police visiting place where arms are concealed on information given by accused in confession—Arms found concealed there—Conversation taking place between accused and police at time of search is admissible in evidence as proof of conduct.

Where on information, contained in the confession made by an accused, a visit is made by police officers to a spot where arms are concealed and the arms are dug on the information of the accused, and at such time various conversations take place between the accused and the police, the conversations are also admissible in evidence as proof of conduct and the whole evidence cannot be excluded on the ground that it is tainted by verbal communications made by the accused to the police at the time of search, especially when the police act with complete propriety, summoning the search witnesses and conducting the search in their presence: 1935 Cal 184, Foll.; 1919 Bom 162, Disting. [P 318 O 1,2]

(c) Criminal Trial—Confession—Retracted confession—It is unsafe to use retracted confession against co-accused—Judge can, however, after due consideration and considering all extraneous facts such as statements by police, by Magistrate taking down confession and general tone of confession, accept it.

When a confession is retracted it becomes very unsafe to use the contents of that confession against any co-accused who is undergoing a joint trial with the person who made the retracted confession as to his responsibility for the crime that he is accused of. On the other hand a Judge sitting alone after due consideration and taking into consideration all extraneous facts such as the statements made by the police officers who were originally in charge of the persons confessing, the statement of the Magistrate who took down the confession, and, the general tone of the confession itself together with the probabilities to be attached to the explanatory statement retracting confession, can accept the confession as being a true and proper account of the necessary happenings to support the prosecution case before the Court: 22 Cal 164 and Rex v. Thompson, (1893) 2 Q B 12, Rel. on.

(d) Deed—Mode of proof—Proof of document—Objection as to mode of proof of document must be raised when it is sought to be put in evidence—If raised later, it does not deserve serious consideration.

An objection relating to the mode of proof of a document must be raised when the document is sought to be put in evidence and if raised at a later stage, it does not deserve serious consideration. [P 321 O 1]

(e) Criminal Trial—Confession—Confession not voluntary—Facts proved that inducement of some kind although outside terms of S. 24, Evidence Act, was given—Court may refuse to accept confession as true.

If a confession is not voluntary in the wider sense of the term, ex hypothesi the person who made it did not do so with the desire to tell the truth. This fact in itself, introduces an element of suspicion. In such circumstances if facts are proved which suggest, that an inducement of some kind, although outside the terms of S. 24, was in fact given, the Court may well refuse to accept the confession as true. [P 321 C 2]

Cunliffe, J.—In the month of December 1934, 15 persons consisting of young men and boys were put upon their trial for the crime of being engaged in a conspiracy to commit various offences under the Arms Act. The Government had ordered that these 15 persons should be tried by a Magistrate with special powers. The Magistrate convicted 13 of the accused and acquitted the other two. Of the 13 convicted men, two were given light sentences and did not appeal. The remainder are before us now in this group appeal.

Two points of law were taken both before the learned Magistrate and before this Court which I think it is convenient I should deal with at once. The first point was a plea of the jurisdiction of the Court. It was argued that Ex. 1 in the case, Government's order for the prosecution, had not been properly proved; and as it was an order of such a kind that under S. 25, Bengal Terrorists Act, it deprived the accused persons of the right of trial before a Judge and a jury, this want of proper proof was more than a mere technical omission. As I understood the argument which was placed before us, it was this: that the letter in question was not the original order from Government but was merely a copy and as it was a copy only, it was necessary that the provisions of S. 78, Evidence Act, should be closely followed. On the other hand, it was argued by the Crown that this was not a copy of an order at all, that it was an original order and that under S. 57, Evidence Act, the Court in such circumstances would take judicial notice of such a letter without proof; and if judicial notice could be taken, and was taken, of the letter, then the presumption in law set out in S. 79 of the Act, would at once arise and there was no evidence that presumption in law had ever been rebutted or had been attempted to be rebutted. The document in question is headed "Government of Bengal, Political Department, Political Branch, No. 12783 p. Order dated Calcutta 16th November 1934." It then sets out the names of 18 persons who in the opinion of the Governor in Council have committed offences under various sections of the Indian Arms Act and under each and all of these sections read with the criminal conspiracy section of the Indian Penal Code. The letter goes on to say:

Now, therefore, in exercise of the power conferred by S. 25, Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, 1932 the Governor in Council is pleased to direct that the said persons shall be tried by the Sadar Subdivisional Magistrate of Rangpore, Babu Purna Chandra Acharji, who has been invested with the powers of a Special Magistrate.

The letter ends with:

By order of the Governor in Council.

J. George.

Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

16th November 1934.

On the left hand bottom corner of the letter is affixed the official seal of the Government of Bengal. It is my opinion that this letter is not a copy at all. It is an original document within the meaning and intention of S. 49, Government of India Act, 1919, the material portion of which runs thus:

All orders and other proceedings of the Government of a Governor's province shall be expressed to be made by the Government of the province and shall be authenticated as the Governor may by rule direct, so, however, that provision shall be made by rule for distinguishing orders and other proceedings relating to transferred subjects from other orders and proceedings.

Orders and proceedings authenticated as aforesaid shall not be called into question in any legal proceeding on the ground that they were not duly made by the Government of the province.

As I have said, I consider that this letter, which is in the form of an official order, fulfils the requirements of that Section of the Government of India Act, and if it does so, it cannot be called into question. The necessity, therefore, of the usual mode of proof of Government documents which do not prove themselves, and which is alluded to in S. 78, Evidence Act, the Section which embodies the well known English principle of the law of evidence, has no application.

The second point of law which was raised in the case on behalf of one of the accused was this (and it may be said at once that if this contention was good in law, it would have a most material effect on the appeals before us) that whereas, evidence was given before the learned Special Magistrate that on information contained in the confession of an accused a visit was made by that accused himself, together with certain witnesses and Police Officers, to a spot where arms were concealed, and during the time that the arms were dug up on the information of the accused person in custody various conversations took place between the accused and the police which amounted to conversation to the detriment of the accused person and actually adding to the confession he had already made then, on the authority of a decision of the Bombay High Court in 20 Cr L J 681 (1), the whole of this evidence must be excluded because, presumably, the whole incident is tainted by the verbal communications which the accused made to the police at the time of the search. In fact, what we are asked to do is to apply the provisions of S. 27, Evidence Act, the section which deals with statements made to Police Officers, a highly artificial reservation of the law of evidence peculiar to the Indian Empire, which controls and circumscribes the provisions of S. 8, Evidence Act, which deals with the proof of conduct. This section (S. 8) embodies in a statutory form the rule of evidence that the testimony of res geste is always allowable when it goes to the root of the matter concerning the commission of the crime.

The first criticism to be made of this argument is this: that if we examine the Bombay case, we find that the facts on which the Bench of the Bombay High Court acted are by no means cognate to the facts here. There was very little conduct called into question in that case. It was all talking. What, however, is a much stronger criticism of the contention is that such an argument runs straight in the teeth of what a Special Bench of this High Court decided not so long ago in 39 C W N 368 (2), where Mukerji, J., in very cogent language shows how conduct in these circumstances should always be allowed to be proved. I respectfully agree with the view he takes which in my opinion is both good law and good sense, because, if proof of conduct in such circumstances was to be excluded, it seems to me that a certain type of peculiarly subtle crime would probably never be detected at all and it could be effectively withdrawn from detection by some clumsy handling of the case by the police. Here, in my opinion, the Police Officers acted in this regard with complete propriety. They summoned the search witnesses and they conducted the search in those witnesses' presence.

It now becomes necessary for me to refer generally to the facts of this case as shown by the record of the evidence proved before the learned Special Magistrate. It appears that there is in this province a revolutionary society which is known as the Jugantar party. It is a society whose aims are the overthrow of the British Government and it recruits outsiders and prepares for that contemplated overthrow by the collection and provisions of arms to those persons whom it is possible to enlist in its ranks. At the town of Rangpore there were a number of young men undergoing their education and if one may say from the general impression made on one's mind at any rate by the evidence very ordinary simple typical schoolboy individuals they were. The methods of the senior revolutionaries, the persons who were already in the association, were effective and cunning. They would get hold, either by themselves or through likely younger members who had already been recruited, of these boys. They would first encourage them in the habit of reading the books in the Tarun Samiti Library. At the beginning these boys would be encouraged to read works of adventure and romance, books such as Victor Hugo's 'Les Miserables', 'Gulliver's Travels', Lamb's 'Tales from Shakespeare' and Rider Haggard's 'She' (all works perfectly innocuous in themselves). After they had given these books out of the library to these lads to read and had discussed them with them, they then began to increase their education. The boys were given books about national heroes who had achieved the freedom of their country from foreigners. They were given, for example at this stage of the life of Terrence MacSwinney (who starved himself to death in prison), 'Ma' by Gorky, Sun-Yat-Sun, also the life of De Valera and a number of works referring to the revolutionary heroes of their own country. Mixed with these, there were also books about Soviet Russia. We find for example among them the life of Lenin and various other volumes devoted to communist aims and the communist system. By the time the boys had digested this literary collection in a number of cases they were quite ripe for another approach.

They were enrolled as minor conspirators and informed of the aims of the association. They were asked if they would join the underground arms traffic and were duly tested by being given from time to time revolvers, automatic pistols, ammunition for the same and daggers. One cannot help being struck by the fact that it was either part of the system or it was part of the test of these young men that they never seem to have had these arms in their possession and custody for any long time; they were constantly being taken away to somebody else. No doubt that system was very valuable to the revolutionaries for the purpose of putting the police off the scent. Other features of the association which attracted the young men were that it had its athletic side. There is evidence that the boys were extremely interested in a game called the Hadudu in which various teams took part and there was actually a knock-out tournament for this fashion, because we find from the evidence that on a certain day the final of the Hadudu tournament was played and one of the accused was the Secretary of the Hadudu League. For the purpose of interesting them and, no doubt, educating them also, in the evening they used to be taught dagger play and one of the accused also relates how they formed a dramatic society together under supervision and performed a play of a patriotic character in which the boys took the parts of various Hindu patriots headed by the well known historical figure Rana Pratap who was throughout his life in opposition to the Emperor Akbar. That is the outline in brief of what these boys were doing and were persuaded to do.

The evidence before the Special Power Magistrate consisted of confessions; every one of these appellants made confessions except the appellant Dhirendra and, as is not unusual in these cases, every one of them retracted his confession. Then there is the evidence of police watchers, the local persons who were employed by the police to watch the activities of the society and that of course affords very valuable evidence of association necessary to prove where criminal conspiracies were concerned. Then again we have the evidence of various persons who were present when the arms and the ammunition were detected. We have also an arms expert who gives his testimony as to the condition of the revolvers and pistols when they were found and, perhaps outstanding of all, we have the evidence of 3 boys who were the accomplices of the accused persons, but who had turned King's evidence or to use the expression employed in India, had become approvers. I have mentioned that the confessions on which the learned Magistrate placed great reliance were all retracted. It is hardly necessary for me to re-state the law of retracted confessions. As I understand it the old English rule which was laid down, or exemplified perhaps I should rather say, in (1893) 2 Q B 12 (3), which has been followed in this Court in the well-known decision of 22 Cal 164 (4) is this, that when a confession is retracted it becomes very unsafe to use the contents of that confession against any co-accused who is undergoing a joint trial with the person who made the retracted confession as to his responsibility for the crime that he is accused of.

On the other hand a Judge sitting alone after due consideration and taking into consideration all extraneous facts such as the statements made by the Police Officers who were originally in charge of the persons confessing, the statement of the Magistrate who took down the confession and the general tone of the confession itself together with the probabilities to be attached to the explanatory statement retracting confession can accept the confession as being a true and proper account of the necessary happenings to support the prosecution case before the Court. That is what the learned Magistrate has done here and as I know Mr. Justice Henderson's great experience in these matters, I asked him to prepare for me an analysis of the various confessions which I had the benefit to have and that is incorporated in his concurring judgment. I may say I entirely agree with his conclusions about the actual intrinsic value of the confessions themselves. That leaves me with a less heavy task with regard to the remaining evidence. (His Lordship then discussed the evidence and proceeded.) Before I come to the question of the convictions and sentences I wish to say this. I have been a little disturbed by one or two circumstances in this case. I know very little about terrorism and terrorist cases.

This is the first time I have ever presided over an appellate tribunal dealing with revolutionary activity in Bengal. No doubt if I were hand in glove with high personages of Government, if I were to use the elegant expression employed in the Bengal Legislative Council, accustomed to 'hobnob' with eminent gentlemen in the Executive and the Police services, I should not have had to ask the questions that I had to ask during the trial. What disturbed me is this, that in every confession and each statement by an accomplice, there are a number of what I imagine to be senior revolutionaries identified, who have never been put on their trial at all. I had to ask what was the reason of this. An experienced police officer who gave evidence as to the antecedents of the appellants subsequently informed me that the reason was that the authorities had evidence against these men, but it was of such a secret character and if brought to light, so dangerous to the person who gave it, that Government was forced to put these men in detention without placing them on their trial. I have no reason whatever to doubt that this is true. All I can say is that as far as this case is concerned, I think before a Magistrate determined to do his duty (as this Magistrate appears to have been) it would not have been impossible even without collecting any extra evidence at all, to have placed a certain number of these older persons in the dock beside these boys whom, on the evidence of the prosecution itself, the older men had corrupted. It leaves a somewhat nasty taste in the mouth that this should not have been done. (His Lordship then dealt with the conviction and sentence of each of the accused.)

Henderson, J.—Before dealing with the evidence in detail I should like to give the reasons which have led me to the conclusion that the preliminary objection with regard to the jurisdiction of the Special Magistrate ought to be overruled. In order that a Special Magistrate may have jurisdiction to try any accused person it is necessary that the Local Government should make an order in writing within the terms of S. 25, Bengal Act 12 of 1932. What purports to be such an order was put in by the prosecution and marked Ex. 1. I may note that at the trial it was admitted without objection and it was only at the time of the argument that this question was raised. The point which has been argued is that that order has not been properly proved. On behalf of the Crown, it has been contended by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer that in view of S. 49, Government of India Act, such an order proves itself and it is unnecessary to give any evidence. The effect of an order of this character is frequently to deprive an accused person of his ordinary right to be tried by a Judge and a Jury or at any rate to render him liable to a sentence which could only otherwise be passed upon him at such a trial. The question is therefore of great importance and we have thought it necessary to examine it with the greatest possible care.

It seems reasonably plain that S. 49, Government of India Act was enacted in order to provide a means for putting the orders of the Government into proper shape. Sub-S. 1 lays down the form which such orders are to take and then provides for their authentication, that is to say, it provides a method by which it may become known that they really are orders of Government. The method of authentication is to be determined by rules made by the Governor and there can be no question that Ex. 1 purports to be an order drawn up in the proper form and properly authenticated in accordance with the rules of business made by the Governor. Finally, it is provided that an order so authenticated cannot be called in question in any legal proceeding on the ground that it was not duly made by the Government. It seems to me that in a matter of this kind there are two quite distinct questions which arise for the consideration of the Court; (1) Whether in fact any order has been made at all. (2) If so, whether it is one which under the provisions of S. 49, Government of India Act, cannot be called in question in any legal proceeding. Approaching the first question, I cannot find anything in the terms of S. 49 to suggest that proof of the existence of the order is dispensed with. The section does not in plain terms empower the Court to take judicial notice of the existence of such an order. I would therefore overrule the first contention made on behalf of the Crown, and I have accordingly reached the conclusion that Ex. 1 requires to be proved.

It was next contended by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer that in fact that order has been properly proved. While on this point, I only desire to say that in my opinion it is open to the prosecution to adopt any legal mode of proof they please. Although S. 78, Evidence Act, provides a convenient mode it is by its very terms not exhaustive. In the present case, the prosecution chose to produce the original order itself sealed with the seal of the Government of Bengal and signed by Mr. J. George, the Under Secretary to that Government in the Political Department. S. 56, Evidence Act, lays down that no fact of which the Court will take judicial notice need be proved, and under S. 57, sub-s. 7 of that Act the Court shall take judicial notice of the signature of any officer if the fact of his appointment is notified in the Gazette. The most, therefore, that can be said is this that strictly the prosecution should have produced the Gazette in which the appointment of Mr. George as Under Secretary to the Political Department was notified. This objection relates to the mode of proof only and should have been raised when the prosecution sought to put the document into evidence and I am not prepared to say that it deserved serious consideration when it was raised at a later stage. But in any view of the case it has never even been suggested that Mr. George was not the Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal and the proceedings in the lower Court were extremely protracted. In these circumstances, when the evidence has been minutely examined both here and in the Court below, rather than order a retrial I would allow the prosecution to produce the notification in this Court had I thought it necessary to insist upon the point.

The prosecution seeks to bring the charge home to the various appellants mainly by their own confessions and by proof of the recovery of various arms and ammunition. In addition to this, there is the evidence of three accomplices. My learned brother has fully dealt with that evidence and it is not necessary for me to say anything more with regard to it. All the learned advocates who have appeared on behalf of the various appellants have asked us to hold, first, that the confessions were not admissible in evidence at all and, secondly, they were not true. With regard to their admissibility, the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer has pointed out that the term "voluntary" is wider in meaning than the terms of S. 24, Evidence Act. He has then argued that the true position is this. If it appears to the Court that S. 24 applies, the confession must be excluded and there is an end of it. On the other hand, when once it is admitted into evidence, the defence must definitely prove that it was not voluntary in the wider sense of the term before the Court can be asked to refuse to believe it. In my opinion, the second proposition is too broadly stated. If a confession is not voluntary in the wider sense of the term, ex hypothesi the person who made it did not do so from any desire to tell the truth. This fact in itself introduces an element of suspicion. In such circumstances if facts are proved which suggest that an inducement of some kind, although outside the terms of S. 24, was in fact given, the Court may well refuse to accept the confession as true.

Applying these considerations to the confessions which are now before us, the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer first contended that even if we accept the allegations made by the various appellants in their examination by the Magistrate as true, the confessions would not be excluded under the strict terms of S. 24. This argument clearly would not apply to the case of every appellant. Hari Narain says that he was promised that he would be released. Shibendra says that he was told that he would be made an approver. Satyendra refers to some inducements the precise nature of which has not been specified. Romesh refers to a statement which could be interpreted as a promise that he would be let off. Lal Chand and Nagendra do not state the exact reasons which led them to make their confessions. Purnendu says that in addition to other threats he was told that if he did not confess he would be sentenced to undergo solitary confinement. In fact the only two appellants who did not make any very clear statement were Biroo and Shubal who said that after having been beaten in order to extract statements from them they were threatened with another beating in the event of their refusal to confess before another Magistrate. In the result they made their statements out of fear. In my opinion, it is chiefly a matter of academic interest to discuss whether in such circumstances these confessions would be inadmissible in evidence or admissible but practically worthless. Unless we are satisfied that they are voluntary in the ordinary sense of the term we should not be prepared to attach any weight to them.

The appellants make allegations and suggestions to the effect: (1) that they were subjected to ill-treatment and that improper inducements or threats were held out, and (2) that the confessions were in fact false; the police wrote them all out on paper and compelled the appellants to learn them by heart and repeat as much of them as they could remember to the Magistrate; and (3) that the revolvers and the ammunition were all planted in the places where they were found by the police themselves. It is quite obvious that their confessions, though involuntary, may yet be true; but in the present case the contention of the defence is that they were not only involuntary but also false. We have no hesitation whatever in rejecting the story of tutoring. It is entirely opposed to the real facts. What it implies is this: that the police themselves manufactured an entirely imaginary case, that they had everything cut and dried, but statements were written out in order that persons might be induced to learn them by heart and that ammunition and arms were concealed and scattered in various parts of the town. It seems hardly necessary to say that this is a most fantastic suggestion. The plain fact of the matter is that the Police were working in the dark and were not in a position to engineer a case on this scale. They knew of the existence of the Jugantar Party. They were also aware that there had been a good many thefts of arms during the past few months in the town of Rangpore. But apart from that, their knowledge was so scanty that when they made the first arrest, that of Purnendu, they were not in a position to send him up for trial on any charge at all, but were compelled to arrest him under the provisions of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act.

It was only as a result of the statements made by him and other persons arrested, that the Police were able to collect materials such as would justify them in making a specific charge. No facts whatever have been proved which suggest that the arms and the ammunition were planted. The confessions themselves are full and coherent statements and we have not been able to find in them anything which reflects the mind of some person other than the maker. They do not suggest that they were mere repetitions of false stories which had been committed to memory. Some statements cannot possibly have been due to tutoring by the Police. In particular I may refer to a statement made by Subal:

After Biroo's arrest I told Lal Chand, 'People say that 7 revolvers have been imported to Rangpur and the Saheb recovered all of them after sound beating.' Whereupon he said 'we have connections with Calcutta—If we send intimation there revolvers are despatched.'

It appears to me incredible that any Police Officer would have tutored anybody to make a statement of this kind. We have therefore no hesitation in rejecting the suggestion that these confessions were not spontaneous but were mere repetitions of statements dictated by the Police. When the accused persons are capable of making one false suggestion, they are equally capable of making another, and it would be impossible to accept their allegations of beating without proof. There is no evidence of any such thing. None of them had any marks of beating on their persons. Before they made their confessions proper warnings were given to them and they had ample time for reflection. They never made any allegation that they had been beaten. They were produced before the Magistrate on several occasions merely in order that the Police might get a further remand. On none of these occasions did they make any complaint or retract their confessions. It was only when the Police Officers were cross-examined at the trial itself that it became apparent that these allegations would be made. In such circumstances, we cannot accept the bare statements of the appellants themselves and it is therefore necessary to examine the evidence in detail to see whether any facts have been proved which would support an inference that particular confessions were not voluntary. (His Lordship then discussed the evidence concerning each accused and came to the conclusion that the confession made by each was voluntary and was corroborated by recovery of arms and ammunition.)

R.M./K.S. Order accordingly.

Appeal No. 2497 of 1932, Decided on 9th July 1935, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, 2nd Court, Rangpur, D/- 1st August 1932.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 153—Question as to whether certain rent is payable or nothing at all is one deciding question of amount of rent annually payable by tenant—Second appeal is competent.

It is difficult to distinguish on principle a case of total suspension of the rent from a case of abatement of rent or a decree for rent at a rate lower than that claimed by the plaintiff. [P 323 C 2]

Where the Court will have to decide whether rent payable is a certain amount, or in the alternative nothing at all, the question is of the amount of rent payable annually by the tenant, and as such a second appeal is competent: 1917 Cal 208, Rel. on; S. A. No. 1520 of 1924, not Foll. [P 323 C 2]

(b) Landlord and Tenant — Suspension of rent—Sale of land by owner, but his wife continuing in possession subject to payment of certain rent — Suit for rent by purchaser — No question of being put in possession arises.

Where certain land is sold by a person but the property continues to be in possession of the family as before, and the wife of the vendor is to pay rent to the purchaser, in a suit for rent by such purchaser, the wife cannot plead that she has not been put in possession. No such question arises as the wife has got such possession of the demised land as it was capable of being made over to her. [P 324 C 1]

Wahed Hussain and Jnan Chandra Roy—for Appellant.

Birendra Kumar De—for Respondent.

Nasim Ali, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for rent. The defence of the tenant defendant was that as the plaintiff did not put her in possession of a portion of the land, and that as she was also dispossessed by the plaintiff from another portion of the land, the entire rent ought to be suspended. The trial Court accepted the defence and dismissed the suit. On appeal to the lower appellate Court the decision of the trial Court has been affirmed. Hence the present second appeal.

A preliminary objection has been taken to the competency of this appeal on the ground that the value of the suit is below Rs. 100 and the decree of the lower appellate Court did not decide the question of the amount of rent annually payable by the tenant to the landlord. I am unable to give effect to this preliminary objection. In view of the defence taken the Court will have to decide whether the rent payable is Rs. 17 or in the alternative nothing at all. It is difficult to distinguish on principle a case of total suspension of rent from a case of abatement of rent or a decree for rent at a rate lower than claimed by the plaintiff. This view of the matter is supported by a decision of this Court in 34 I C 851 (1), decided on 18th April 1916. The learned advocate for the respondent drew our attention to an unreported case decided by Cuming and Mallik, JJ., (in S. A. 1520 of 1924), decided on 3rd May 1927. No reasons were given in that case and further the attention of the learned Judges does not appear to have been drawn to the case reported in 34 I C 851 (1) cited above. Under these circumstances I am not prepared to hold that the present appeal is incompetent.

It appears that the defendant's husband was the owner of this property. He sold this property to the plaintiff on 8th May 1928 and on that very day his wife took a lease of the lands purchased by the plaintiff from him. There cannot be any doubt therefore that the plaintiff did not take actual possession of the property for a single day. The evident intention of the parties was that the property would continue to be in the possession of the family as before, but the wife would have to pay Rs. 17 as rent. Omrauddin who is in possession of a portion of the homestead is in possession from a very long time and the defendant knew full well that he was in possession at the time when the land was sold by her husband and leased out to her. There cannot be any doubt therefore that the defendant got such possession of the demised land as it was capable of being made over to her. By these transactions the title of the property was transferred to the plaintiff but the possession, as it was with the husband before the sale was allowed to be continued in the wife on payment of a certain amount of rent. No question of being the lessee being put into possession of the property therefore arises in view of the admitted facts of the present case.

As regards the plea of dispossession from some portion of the land by Daulat, the finding of the learned Judge is that the plaintiff had no hand in that dispossession. The proper remedy of the defendant is to take such steps as he may be advised to eject Daulat. Under these circumstances the plaintiff is entitled to get a decree for rent at the full rent. The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the judgments and decrees of the Court below are set aside and the suit is decreed in full with costs throughout.

Sures Chandra Talukdar and Hiren-dra Chunder Ghose—for Appellant.

Sarat Chandra Janah and Mritunjoy De—for Respondent.

D. N. Bhattacharji—for the Crown.

Lort-Williams, J.—In this case the appellant was convicted by a Presidency Magistrate of an offence under S. 420, Penal Code, and sentenced to be detained till the rising of the Court and to pay a fine of Rs. 600 in default six months' rigorous imprisonment. Out of the fine, if realized, Rs. 300 was to be paid to the complainant as compensation. The offence complained of was that of cheating the complainant's firm on or about 3rd July 1934, at Calcutta, by dishonestly inducing the said firm to deliver a bill, that is to say an invoice for Rs. 264-15-0, in exchange for a cheque No. A-7,55,136, upon the National Bank of India, which was subsequently dishonoured.

The case for the prosecution was that the complainant's firm, the Atlas Agency of 20 Strand Road, Calcutta, cleared certain goods on behalf of the firm of M. L. Shaw & Co. Ltd., of which the accused was the Managing Director, from K. P. Dock No. 4 per S. S. "Clan Macnair." The complainant firm sent a bill, Ex. 7, showing that the sum of Rs. 264-15-0 was due in respect of these services rendered and for out of pocket payments in respect of customs duty and other charges. The bill was sent on 21st June 1934, and was acknowledged by the firm of M. L. Shaw & Co. Ltd., on the same date. No payment was made, but on 2nd July 1934, Bholanath Mullick, an assistant in the firm of the Atlas Agency, met the accused and pressed him for payment. It is alleged that the accused then gave a cheque for the amount of the bill and Bholanath receipted the bill by writing upon it "Received by cheque No. A-7,55,136." Underneath that writing is a one anna revenue stamp which is cancelled by a rubber stamp with Atlas Agency upon it. Underneath that is the signature of B. Mullick.

The evidence shows that Bholanath's recollection is not accurate as to the date when the cheque was given. The accused stated that he gave a post dated cheque, and this is confirmed by the fact that in the counterfoil of the cheque book of the firm of M. L. Shaw & Co., the cheque to the Atlas Agency is dated 3rd July 1934, but the next cheque, in favour of the Electric Supply Corporation, is dated 28th June 1934. It seems reasonably clear, therefore, that the cheque was given to the Atlas Agency, either on the 28th, or prior to 28th June 1934. The cheque was dishonoured and returned on 4th July 1934. The complainant's firm then wrote to the firm of M. L. Shaw & Co., and received a reply regretting the dishonour of the cheque and asking the Atlas Agency to send their representative to receive payment of their bill on 9th July. But on this day no payment was made and, therefore, the complaint was lodged on 11th July 1934.

The defence was that the dispute was of a civil nature and that the firm of M. L. Shaw & Co. Ltd., had gone into liquidation, and that these criminal proceedings had been started to put pressure on the accused. M. L. Shaw & Co., went into liquidation about the middle of July 1934. The Magistrate came to the conclusion that these facts showed that the accused had an antecedent intention to defraud the complainant. But that is not the question which he had to decide. S. 420, Penal Code, provides that :

Whoever cheats and thereby dishonestly induces the person deceived to deliver any property to any person or to make, alter or destroy the whole or any part of a valuable security, or anything which is signed or sealed, and which is capable of being converted into a valuable security, shall be punished

The advocate, who has appeared on behalf of the complainant, has argued that what the accused did amounts either to inducing the complainant to deliver property to him, or to make a valuable security, or something which was signed, and which was capable of being converted into a valuable security. With regard to the first part of the argument the goods, which were the subject-matter of the clearing charges, had been delivered to M. L. Shaw & Co. Ltd., on or before 20th June 1934. It is clear, therefore, that the accused did not induce the complainant to deliver any property in exchange for the cheque, because the goods had already been delivered at an earlier date. It can hardly be contended that the piece of paper upon which the account is written is property within the meaning of this Section, or that the receipt is property within that meaning. The learned advocate relied more upon the second part of his argument and contended that the receipt is a valuable security within the meaning of S. 30, Penal Code. That section provides that :

The words "valuable security" denote a document which is, or purports to be, a document whereby any legal right is created, extended, transferred, restricted, extinguished, or released, or whereby any person acknowledges that he lies under legal liability, or has not a certain legal right.

The receipt does not extinguish or release any legal right. Until payment of these charges, the rights of the Atlas Agency against M. L. Shaw & Co. Ltd. remain, and the giving of the receipt does not cancel or extinguish them. The receipt could be given in evidence to prove that the payment had actually been made, but it would always be open to the Atlas Agency to rebut this evidence by showing that in fact no payment had been received by them. Moreover, the receipt does not even purport to be an acknowledgment of payment. It amounts only to an acknowledgment that a cheque, No. A-7,55,136, has been received by the Atlas Agency. Even if the cheque had not been post dated, this receipt would not have amounted to any more than an acknowledgment that the cheque had been received, and it would always be open to the Atlas Agency to show that the cheque had never been paid. Still more is this so, when the cheque was post dated. In either case a cheque is only a promise to pay, either on demand, or upon the date to which it has been post dated. Therefore, the only effect of the receipt is an acknowledgment that a promise to pay has been given by M. L. Shaw & Co., to the Atlas Agency by means of the cheque in question. It is clear, therefore, that this receipt cannot even come within the last part of S. 30 which says "whereby any person acknowledges that he lies under legal liability, or has not a certain legal right."

The Atlas Agency, by writing "received by cheque" on the back of the bill, did not acknowledge that they had not a certain legal right. As I have already stated, all that they acknowledged was that they had received a promise to pay the money, which, if paid, would have extinguished their legal right to receive the amount, Rs. 264-15-0, stated upon the invoice.

It is clear, therefore, in my opinion, that the facts in this case do not support the charge made against the accused. His contention, that no crime has been committed, but that the Atlas Agency has rights against him in a civil Court is correct. The remedy of the complainant lies in a suit for breach of M. L. Shaw & Co.'s contract to pay the amount of the invoice or in insolvency proceedings. Consequently, the conviction and sentence are set aside, and the accused is acquitted. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

Appeal No. 94 of 1934, Decided on 25th February 1936, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, Second Court, Pabna, D/- 23rd May 1933.

(a) Mahomedan Law—Alienation—Guardian—Absolute necessity or minor's benefit should be proved—To record necessity in document is advisable.

In the case of a sale by a guardian of a Mohammedan minor there must be an absolute necessity for the sale, or it must be for the benefit of the minor: 1918 P C 11; 20 Bom 116 and 35 Cal 320, Ref. [P 326 C 2]

Where the property is mortgaged by a guardian of a Mahomedan minor, the same rules apply, i. e., the mortgage also must be for absolute necessity or at least for the minor's benefit. It is always advisable that in such cases the necessity of the mortgage should be recorded in the deed, but in the absence of such record, other evidence of necessity is sufficient. [P 326 C 2; P 327 C 1]

(b) Interest—Compound interest at twenty four per cent with three months rest is excessive.

Interest of 24 per cent if it is simple interest probably will not be too high, but if it is compounded every three months, the interest is excessive and should be reduced: 40 C W N 409, Rel. on. [P 327 C 1]

Judgment.—This is an appeal in a suit on a mortgage bond. The bond was executed in May 1926 for a sum of Rs. 200 at interest of 2 per cent per men-sem with rests of three months. The due date having passed and the defendant not having paid the amount the suit was instituted in November 1931. The bond was executed by a widow, defendant 1, and by defendant 4, husband of her deceased daughter, and by defendants 2 and 3, minor sons of defendant 4 and the deceased daughter. The bond was executed by defendant 4, the father in respect of the shares of his sons, defendants 2 and 3. Various defences were taken. The Court of appeal below decreed the suit fully against the defendants. In appeal the first point taken is that the minor defendants 2 and 3 are not legally bound by the mortgage bond. Under Mahomedan Law the father is the legal guardian of his minor sons, but his power to sell the minors' immoveable property is not absolute. He may sell the immoveable property of the minor in certain conditions stated in S. 263 of Mulla's Principles of Mahomedan Law. The learned Advocate has also quoted the cases of 45 I A 73 (1), 20 Bom 116 (2) and 35 Cal 320 (3). On perusal of those cases it appears that in the case of a sale by a guardian of a Muhammadan minor there must be an absolute necessity for the sale, or it must be for the benefit of the minor. In this case it was a mortgage but a mortgage bond should be governed by the rules applicable to sales.

The question is whether in this case there was necessity for the mortgage and whether it was for the benefit of the minors. In the document it was merely stated that the mortgage bond was made for urgent necessity. No details were given. In the evidence in Court which the Court of appeal below has accepted, it was stated that about Rs. 80 was spent for payment of arrears of rent for 4 years and about Rs. 60 was spent for purchase of plough cattle and about Rs. 60 was spent in getting mutation in the landlord's books. It is urged by the learned advocate that it was the duty of the plaintiff to have it clearly stated in the document for what particular purpose the money was borrowed and that the omission of any such record in the deed is fatal to the success of the plaintiff. This extreme proposition cannot be accepted. The plaintiff would have been wise to have recorded the purpose of the loan in the bond itself, but the evidence which has been accepted by the Court of fact cannot be neglected. When Rs. 80 was spent for arrears of rent, and Rs. 60 was spent for purchasing plough cattle, it may be legally held that the mortgage was for the benefit of the minors. As to the payment of the mutation fee, it appears clear that there was no necessity for this on behalf of the minors, but the same cannot be said about the payment of arrears of rent or the purchase of plough cattle. In the circumstances the finding of the Court of appeal below is correct namely that the sale was for the benefit of the minors.

1. Imambandi v. Mutsaddi, 1918 P C 11=47 I C 513=45 I A 73=45 Cal 878 (P C).

2. Hurbai v. Hiraji Byramji, (1896) 20 Bom 116.

3. Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath Pertab Narain Singh, (1908) 35 Cal 320=12 C W N 256.

The next point taken is that the interest charged in the bond is excessive and the transaction was substantially unfair to the defendants. There is force in this contention. Interest at 24 per cent, if it was simple interest, probably would not be too high, but it was compounded every three months so that the original amount of Rs. 200 increased in 4½ years to Rs. 570. Following the decision of 40 C W N 409 (4), the interest in this case should be reduced. The appeal is allowed in part, namely that the interest is reduced to 18 per cent per annum with yearly rests. The decree of the Court of appeal below is varied accordingly. The parties will get their costs in proportion to their success in all the Courts.

Decree varied.

Appeal No. 28 of 1935, Decided on 13th November 1935.

(a) Companies Act (1913), S. 55—Petition for reduction of capital—Proof of loss of capital is not always essential—Question for decision is whether or not company had duly passed special resolution for reduction—Court should, however, proceed on evidence.

It is not always essential or necessary for the Court to whom a petition for reduction of capital is presented to satisfy itself that there has been a loss of the capital. The only serious question with which the Court is concerned is whether or not the company had duly passed its special resolution to the effect that the capital be reduced. [P 329 C 1, 2; P 330 C 1]

Where, however, the reduction of the capital is based on the ground that capital has been lost or unrepresented by available assets, it is always prudent to proceed on some evidence. That is a sound procedure and one which ordinarily should be acted upon. Where the person opposing the petition accepts the statement of the company that there has been a loss of capital, the Court should act upon the assumption that there is evidence of loss of capital. [P 330 C 1, 2]

(b) Companies Act (1913), Ss. 38, 40 and 55—Application by company for reduction of capital opposed by shareholder on ground that persons voting for resolution for reduction were not duly qualified to vote—No steps taken by shareholder to have register altered or rectified under S. 38—Burden is on him to substantiate his allegations.

According to S. 40, Companies Act, the register of members is prima facie evidence of any matters directed or authorised by the Act to be inserted therein. Where the names of certain persons are entered in the register as shareholders it can be taken for granted that such persons are qualified shareholders. [P 331 C 2]

Where an application by a company for reduction of its capital is opposed by a shareholder on the ground that certain persons who have voted for the resolution for the reduction of the capital of the company were not duly qualified as shareholders so to vote, or to vote at all, by reason of their names not having been properly entered in the register or by reason of their names not having been on the register for a length of time sufficient to entitle them to vote, but no steps have been taken by the shareholder to have the register altered or rectified under S. 38, the burden is on the shareholder opposing the petition to substantiate his allegations, and where he fails to do so the application should be allowed. S. Chaudhury—for Respondent.

Costello, J.—This matter comes before us by way of appeal from an order made by Cunliffe, J., on 18th March 1935, whereby he refused with costs an application made on behalf of the Marwari Stores Ltd. for permission to reduce the share capital of that company. The application was opposed by Gouri Shanker Goenka who is a shareholder of that company and the respondent in the present appeal. The Marwari Stores Ltd., was originally incorporated as a private company on 15th March 1919, having a nominal capital of Rupees two lacs divided into fifty shares of Rs. 4,000 each. On 22nd March 1921, by an extraordinary resolution, the capital of the company was increased by Rs. 3 lacs making a total capital of Rs. 5 lacs represented by 5,000 shares of Rs. 100 each. Shares of the value of rupees two lacs were applied for and issued and a sum of Rs. 1,92,000 was paid up. Shares out of the balance to the extent of Rs. 8,000 were forfeited. The present position, therefore, is this: that the paid up capital of the company is Rs. 1,92,000. A sum of Rs. 4,000 which had been paid in respect of forfeited shares was transferred to the profit and loss account. The Articles of Association of the company contained the usual kind of provision entitling the company to reduce its capital. The relevant article is No. 43. It appears from the petition and from an affidavit of Motilal Lath, who is described as a Managing Director of the company, that up to 31st March 1920 the company made a profit of Rs. 10,026 odd, and up to 31st March 1921 the profit was Rs. 10,105 and some odd annas.

The present respondent became connected with the company on 6th April 1921. It appears that he was taken into the service of the company on or about that time. Towards the end of the year 1921, that is to say on the 30th November of that year, the company was converted into a public company and in the following year the present respondent Gouri Shanker Goenka became a shareholder in the company to the extent of 80 shares. It appears from the years 1922 to 1924 the company sustained a loss amounting to the sum of Rs. 1,10,000 and that is shown in the balance sheets for the years 1922, 1923 and 1924. That fact is stated in para. 8 of the petition on which the present proceedings were founded. It is also set out in that paragraph that the loss has ever since been carried forward. It is further stated that the company was not able to make any profit during the years 1923 and 1924, but since 1925 the company has been making a profit. The amount of the loss has now been reduced to Rs. 96,000. The said sum of Rs. 96,000 was stated to be a loss and not to be represented by any available assets. In the year 1932 the respondent Gouri Shanker Goenka became a director of the company. It appears that in 1933 he was party to the passing of the draft balance sheet which was submitted at the directors' meeting.

Actually from 6th April 1921, the date on which the respondent joined the company down to 4th August 1934 he was functioning as the Assistant Manager and, as such, he assisted in the preparation of each one of the accounts and must be taken to have known the contents of those accounts. On 4th October 1934 Gouri Shanker ceased to be a director of the company. At the end of October 1934 there was a transfer of certain shares which had been held by the Managing Director, Motilal Lath, to some of his relations and in December of that year, Mr. P. D. Himatsingka and Mr. Baijnath Prasad Deora resigned from the Board of the company and in their places, about a month later, two of Motilal Lath's nominees, if they can properly be called his nominees, namely Mr. Bholaram Tibrewalla and Mr. Luxminarain Lath were appointed directors of the company. On 20th January 1935 an ordinary general meeting of the company was held, accounts were passed, and at that meeting the present respondent was in attendance in his capacity as a shareholder of the company. On the same day, namely on 20th January 1935, there was an extraordinary general meeting at which a resolution was passed for the reduction of the capital of the company. That appears from para. 9 of the petition set out at p. 3 of the paper book. That paragraph reads as follows:

Under the provisions of S. 50, Companies Act, and in pursuance of the power contained in that behalf in the Articles of Association the company by special resolution of its shareholders duly passed and confirmed at extraordinary general meetings duly convened and held on 20th January 1935 and 4th February 1935 respectively resolved: that the paid up capital of the Marwari Stores Limited be reduced from Rs. 1,92,000 divided into 1920 Ordinary Shares of Rs. 100 each to Rs. 96,000 divided into 1920 Ordinary Shares of Rs. 50 each and that such reduction be effected by cancelling the paid up capital to the extent of Rs. 96,000 which had been lost and is not represented by available assets and by reducing this nominal amount of all the shares in the company's paid up capital from Rs. 100 to Rs. 50 per share.

It appears therefore that the resolution which was passed at the meeting on 20th January 1935 was duly confirmed at the subsequent extraordinary general meeting held on 4th February 1935. A week later, namely on 11th February 1935 a petition for reduction of capital was admitted by Cunliffe, J. The petition had been verified on 7th February 1935. The 11th

March 1935 was fixed as the date for hearing of the petition and directions were duly given for necessary advertisements. Those advertisements appeared in certain papers on 20th February 1935 as directed by the Court. On 6th March 1935 Gouri Shanker affirmed an affidavit in opposition to the company's petition and on 12th March he put in a supplementary affidavit in opposition. On 18th March there was an affidavit in reply by Motilal Lath on behalf of the company. Then finally, as I said at the outset, the matter came before the Court on 18th March 1935 when the application which the company was making was refused by Cunliffe, J. The company now comes before this Court asking that the order made by Cunliffe, J., be set aside and the company be authorised to reduce their capital in the manner asked for in their petition.

The application of the company is opposed by Gouri Shanker Goenka on two grounds, and Mr. Chowdbury on behalf of the respondent says: (1) there was no evidence before the Court that there had been in fact any loss of capital as averred by the company, and (2) the resolution which purported to have been passed on 20th January 1935 and confirmed on 4th February 1935 was not valid in law by reason of the fact that certain persons who voted for the resolution were not duly qualified as share-holders so to vote or to vote at all. The respondent Goenka, so far as the second point is concerned, challenged the validity of the transfer of certain shares made by Motilal Lath during the month of October as I have already stated. The allegation made on behalf of Goenka was to the effect that although the names of these transferees appear in the register of share-holders of the company, the entry in that register is not a proper or a genuine entry and the transfers could not have taken place at the time when they are alleged to take place, by reason of the fact that Motilal was not in Calcutta on the dates which appears on the transfers or on 30th October, the date on which the entries were made by Motilal in the register of share-holders of the company.

With regard to the first mentioned point, it is not at all certain that it is always essential or necessary for the Court to satisfy itself in proceedings of this kind, that there has been a reduction of capital. The principles on which a Court ought to act in a matter of this description, were laid down by Lord Macnaghten in (1907) A C 229 (1) at pages 238-239. The relevant passage in the judgment of his Lordship is this:

Such being the views expressed in this House without any dissent or qualification, I was surprised to hear it argued by the learned counsel for the appellants that the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a petition for the reduction of capital unless it be proved that the capital which the company proposes to cancel is lost or unrepresented by available assets. No doubt some countenance for that proposition may be found even in cases which have occurred since the decision of this House in (1894) A C 399 (2). In (1900) 2 Ch 846 (3), where the scheme proposed was obviously unfair to the preference shareholders and the petition was very properly dismissed, there are some expressions in the judgment of the learned Judge who decided the case which, taken apart from the context, may appear to support that contention. The decision of Buckley, J., in (1902) 2 Ch 845 (4) goes even further. His language, if correctly reported, seems to imply that because the Act of 1877 specified certain cases and declared that the power conferred by the Act of 1867 'includes' those specified it is to be inferred that in all other cases the jurisdiction of the Court is excluded. If that is the meaning of what the learned Judge said, with all respect I am unable to agree with his view. The condition that gives jurisdiction is not proof of loss of capital or proof that capital is unrepresented by available assets, or that capital is in excess of the wants of the company. The jurisdiction arises whenever the company seeking reduction has duly passed a special resolution to that effect.

Then his Lordships stated this:

In the present case creditors are not concerned at all. The reduction does not involve the diminution of any liability in respect of unpaid capital or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up capital. The only questions, therefore, to be considered are these: 1. Ought the Court to refuse its sanction to the reduction out of regard to the interests of those members of the public who may be induced to take shares in the company? and 2. Is the reduction fair and equitable as between the different classes of shareholders?

It would appear from that passage in the judgment of Lord Macnaghten that the only serious question with which the Court is concerned is whether or not the company had duly passed its special resolution to the effect that the capital should be reduced.

Since the decision in that case, however, there have been a number of other cases and upon one of them Mr. Chowdhury laid considerable stress as indicating that the Court ought to require proof that there has been in fact a loss of capital. The case to which I refer is the case of 1916 SC (H L) 120 (5) a resume of which appears in 1916 W N 70. The account of the case in the Weekly Notes is as follows:

Lord Parker of Waddington, after stating that the law in respect of reduction of capital, as stated in (1907) A C 229 (1), had not been altered by the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, said that where the resolution was expressed to be founded upon loss of capital he understood that since the decision of the House of Lords the practice of the Courts in Scotland had been to dispense with proof of the facts referred to in the resolution, at any rate where there was no reason to suspect the bona fides of the parties. The practice of the High Court of Justice in England had not been uniform. His own practice had been to insist on prima facie evidence of the existence of the state of facts referred to in the resolution. If no such prima facie evidence were forthcoming it might well be that the special resolution had been passed under the influence of some mistake or misrepresentation as to the true facts, and it would be unfair to the minority, if not also to the majority of the shareholders, to confirm a reduction voted under such circumstances. Further inability to produce some such evidence might well suggest want of bona fides in the matter. If capital not really lost or unrepresented by available assets were cancelled, it might be possible thereafter, by some adjustment of the figures in the company's balance sheet, to carry the amount so cancelled to profit and loss account, and so indirectly return paid-up capital to shareholders, thus affecting the rights of creditors. He still thought therefore, that where the reduction of capital was based on the ground that capital had been lost or was unrepresented by available assets, it was, though not necessary, at any rate wise and prudent to insist on some evidence of the fact.

I have no doubt that the proposition that where a reduction of capital is based on the ground that capital has been lost or unrepresented by available assets, it is always prudent to proceed on some evidence. That is a sound procedure and one which ordinarily should be acted upon. In the present instance we are not, however, called on to lay down any general principle with regard to that particular point, because there is clear evidence that in the case of Marwari Stores Ltd., there had in fact been a loss of capital. I have already mentioned the nature of that loss. The evidence with regard to it is the definite statement in para. 8 of the company's petition dated 7th February 1935 as verified by the solemn affirmation of Motilal. The averments contained in that paragraph are not disputed by Goenka. On the contrary in para. 3 of his own affidavit, dated 6th March 1935, he says:

With reference to para. 8 of the said petition I state that the amount of loss mentioned in the said paragraph would have been very considerably reduced had the Managing Director conducted the business of the company in a proper workmanlike manner.

It is clear, therefore, that Goenka was accepting the statements that there had been a loss as stated by the Managing Director, though he was saying that the loss was due to something done or something not done by the Managing Director Motilal. We are of opinion, therefore, that the learned Judge in the Court below ought to have acted upon the assumption that there was evidence of loss of capital. With regard to the other point, on which the objector sought to rely, viz. that the resolution was not properly passed, his complaint is set out in para. 6 of the affidavit at p. 13 of the paper book, where he says:

The following are the transfers alleged to have been made by the said Motilal Lath to the persons hereinafter named who are his relatives as is mentioned: (1) Bholaram Tibrewala, father-in-law of Motilal Lath; (2) Luxminarain Lath, cousin of Motilal Lath; (3) Nural Lath and (4) Hanumanbux Lath, nephews of Motilal Lath, employees of the company; (5) Hariram Khaitan, and (6) Jugalkishore Khaitan, cousins in law of Motilal Lath, and employees of the company.

That I state that on the respective dates the said Motilal Lath is alleged to have transferred the said shares, namely 25th and 27th October 1934, and on the date when he is alleged to have registered the said alleged transfers, namely 30th October 1934, the said Motilal Lath was not in Calcutta at all and could not have transferred the said shares in the manner alleged, nor could he have registered the said transfer in the books of the company on that date. The alleged deeds of transfer purporting to have been executed on 25th and 27th October 1934, by the said Motilal Lath and by the respective transferees at Calcutta are all false and fictitious and are in fraud of the company and its shareholders.

No answer to that paragraph, which of course contains a very serious allegation against Motilal, is given. The latter in his affidavit in reply dated 18th March 1935 in para. 2 (d) says this:

With regard to para. 4 of the said first affidavit I state that the extraordinary general meetings were properly convened, constituted and held. All the persons present as shareholders were in fact share-holders of the company and registered as such by the company. The person who acted as the Chairman was a shareholder duly and properly elected as Chairman and the mover of the resolution was also a shareholder entitled to move the resolution which he did.

and then in sub-para. (e) at p. 27 of the paper book he adds this:

The six persons named in para. 6 of the first affidavit duly became transferees of the shares which have been registered in their names after they were duly approved and they became members of the company, and their names were duly placed on the register of the company. Gourishanker Goenka inspected the register of members several times in December 1934 and early in January 1935 and he saw the said names on the register of the company and he did not then take any objection thereto. No application has yet been made for the removal of the names of the said persons or rectification of the said register of members either by Gourishanker Goenka or anybody else except that Gourishanker is not attacking the said transfers by criminal proceedings and not by appropriate civil proceedings, and by way of side-issue in this application nobody else has raised any objection regarding their becoming members.

Now it is obvious that the allegations that these six persons whose names appear in the register of shareholders were not shareholders, came entirely from Goenka. If he was to be successful in opposing the application which the company was making he was bound to show that the names of these persons were not properly entered in the register or that their names were not on the register for length of time sufficient to entitle them to vote at the meetings which were held on 20th January 1935 and 4th February 1935. In my opinion he has entirely failed to do so. We have examined the register for ourselves and as far as one can see on the face of it, it is perfectly regular and in order. It was open to Goenka to have taken appropriate proceedings under S. 38, Companies Act, to have had the Register corrected had he been so minded. That section is in the same terms as the corresponding section in English Act of 1929, viz. S. 100 and runs thus:

If (a) the name of any person is fraudulently or without sufficient cause entered in or omitted from the register of members of a company; or (b) default is made or unnecessary delay takes place in entering on the register the fact of any person having ceased to be a member, the person aggrieved, or any member of the company, or the company, may apply to the Court for rectification of the register.

Section 40, Companies Act, provides that the register of members shall be prima facie evidence of any matters by this Act directed or authorised to be inserted therein. I think that we ought to take it, in the present instance, that as no steps were taken to have this register altered or rectified and the persons whose names appear therein were qualified shareholders and therefore entitled to take part in the meetings of 20th January and 4th February 1935. In that view of the case Goenka has wholly failed to show any cause whatsoever why the application put forward by the company for the reduction of capital should not be granted by the Court. The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order made by Cunliffe, J., is set aside, and the prayers Nos. 1 and 2 and the first part of prayer No. 3 contained in the petition of the company and affirmed by Motilal Lath on 7th February 1935 are granted. As regards costs of these proceedings, we are of opinion that as, in any event, it was necessary for the company to obtain the sanction of the Court for the reduction of the capital, the company should pay their own costs in the Court below. But we direct that the respondent must pay the costs of the appeal to the appellant company.

Appeal No. 1750 of 1932, Decided on 10th July 1935, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, First Court, Midnapore, D/- 21st April 1932.

(a) Interpretation of Statutes—Same word used in different parts of same statute should have same meaning.

The same word used in different parts of the same statute have the same meaning, unless something to the contrary appears from the context. [P 333 C 2]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885 as amended by Act 4 of 1928), Ss. 5 and 20 — Tenant holding undivided shares in parcels of land could be raiyat even before amendment of 1928 by reason of occupation for 12 years.

Under the Bengal Tenancy Act, even before the amendment of 1928, a tenant holding undivided shares in parcels of land would be a raiyat, and could be a settled raiyat of a village by reason of occupation of such lands for a period of 12 years, for S. 20 of the Act requires that the tenant should be a raiyat and must hold the "land" as such continuously for 12 years : 8 C W N 192 and 751, Rel. on.

A suit for enhancement of rent under S. 30 of the Act before the amendment of 1928 is not maintainable when the tenancy consists entirely of undivided shares in parcels of lands or partly of entire parcels of land, and partly of undivided shares in parcels of land : 8 C W N 751 and 192, Disting. : Case law referred.

(d) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885 as amended by Act 4 of 1928), Ss. 30 (b) and 3 (9)—Tenancy consisting of undivided shares in parcels of land created before 1928—Immunity from enhancement of rent given to such tenant is not taken away by amendment of 1928 as such amendment is not retrospective.

Where a tenancy created before 1928 consists of undivided shares in parcels of land, the tenant enjoyed immunity from action for enhancement of rent. This immunity has been taken away by the amendment of 1928. But the amendment cannot be given retrospective operation and the landlord has no right to sue for enhancement of rent in respect of such a tenancy created before Act 4 of 1928 : *In re Joseph Suche & Co. Judgment.—The defendant is an occupancy raiyat. His tenancy has been in existence from certainly before 1928 and consists of thirteen complete parcels of land and undivided shares in three other parcels. It is held at an annual rental of Rs. 21-3-8. The plaintiffs sued him for recovery of the balance of the rent and cesses due for the year 1337 and claimed damages at 25 per cent. On this part of the claim the only controversy between the parties was in respect of the claim for damages. The first Court allowed damages at the rate of 6-1/4 per cent and there is no further question relating thereto.

The plaintiffs however claimed enhancement of rent on the grounds mentioned in S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act. They filed the suit on 18th June 1931, that is after the Bengal Tenancy Amendment Act (Act 4 of 1928 B. C.), had come into force. This claim of the plaintiffs was resisted by the defendant in the lower Courts and is resisted before me. The learned Munsiff held that the plaintiffs were entitled to enhancement of rent on the grounds mentioned in that section and enhanced the rent by one and half anna per rupee. The learned Subordinate Judge however on appeal has negatived the plaintiffs' claim. The plaintiffs accordingly have filed this appeal, and ask for the restoration of the decree of the learned Munsiff. The question raised in this appeal, as far as I am aware, is of first impression. The case of 33 C W N 1156 (1) approaches the case I have to decide very nearly, but is not exactly the same.

There cannot be any doubt that if the suit had been instituted and decided before the amendment of the definition of "holding" by Act 4 of 1928, the plaintiffs' claim for enhancement on the grounds mentioned in S. 30 would have failed, on the ground that the defendant's tenancy is not a holding as defined in the Bengal Tenancy Act before the amendment of the year 1928. The decisions of this Court on this point are uniform since 1898, when the case in 2 C W N 680 (2) was decided: 40 Cal 29 (3); 24 C W N 1022 (4). The cases of 25 Cal 917n (5), 8 C W N 192 (6) and 8 C W N 751 (7) cited by the learned Advocate for the appellant, have no bearing upon the point, and I may parenthetically observe that I do not see how in any event 25 Cal 917n (5) supports him. In that case on a difference between Petheram, C. J., and Ram-pini, J., the matter was referred to Banerjee, J., who in agreement with Rampini, J., held that a ryoti tenancy which comprised undivided shares in parcels of land was not a holding as defined in the Bengal Tenancy Act then in force and that rent would not be a first charge on such a ryoti tenancy as S. 65, Ben. Ten. Act, made rent a first charge on "a holding." The case of 8 C W N 751 (7), is a case of a different type altogether. There the ryoti tenancy which comprised undivided shares in parcels of land had been created before the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed and when Act 8 of 1869 (B. C.) was in force. The said Act did not define "holding" in terms of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The tenant had acquired occupancy rights under Act 8 of 1869. The right so acquired could not be taken away by the Bengal Tenancy Act. The estate or zamindari under which the said tenancy was held was purchased by the plaintiff at a revenue sale, and he brought the suit to get khas possession of the lands of the said tenancy. The defendant who owned the tenancy set up that his interest was protected by S. 37, Revenue Sales Act 9 of 1859, as he had occupancy right. It was held that he had occupancy right and was so protected from eviction. Even if such a tenancy had been created after the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force (but before Act 4 of 1928 B. C.) there would not have been any difference. A tenant who has been granted lease of land for the purpose of cultivation, would be a ryot even if the demised premises be undivided shares in parcels of land.

In S. 5, Ben. Ten. Act, which defines a ryot the condition is that he must hold 'land' and not a 'parcel' or 'parcels' of land for the purposes of cultivation. In S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act, the Settlement Officer is entitled to settle fair and equitable rent "in respect of the land" held by the tenant. It has been held that a Settlement Officer can settle fair and equitable rent which may be and in most cases is above the existing rent, even where the claim on the part of the landlord to get more rent is put forward on the ground of rise of the price of staple food crops or other grounds mentioned in S. 30, and the ryoti tenancy consists of undivided shares in parcels of land. In those cases the cases, where the enhancement of rent had been claimed by suit under the provisions of S. 30 but refused on the ground that the tenancy comprised undivided shares in parcels of land, were distinguished on the ground that whereas S. 30 contemplates the case of enhancement of rent of "holdings," S. 105 contemplates the case of settlement of fair and equitable rent in respect of "land," the word "land" including "an undivided share in a parcel of land:" 21 C L J 592 (8); 48 C L J 590 (9). Adopting the well-established canon of construction that the same word used in different parts of the same statute must have the same meaning, unless something to the contrary appears from the context, it would not be unreasonable to hold that under the Bengal Tenancy Act, even before the amendment of 1928, a tenant holding undivided shares in parcels of land would be a ryot, and could be a settled ryot of a village by reason of occupation of such lands for a period of 12 years, for S. 20 of the Act requires that the tenant should be a ryot and must hold the "land" as such continuously for 12 years. The case of 8 C W N 192 (6) is of the same type as 8 C W N 751 (7). There also the suit was by a purchaser at a revenue sale to recover khas possession and the defendant put forward a claim for protection on the ground that he was an occupancy ryot. The two cases decide that occupancy rights can be acquired by a cultivator whose tenancy comprises undivided shares in parcels of land. The cases cited by the learned Advocate for the appellant have accordingly no bearing on the point, and do not certainly support his contention that a suit for enhancement of rent under S. 30, Ben. Ten. Act, before the amendment of 1928 would have been maintainable when the tenancy consists entirely of undivided shares in parcels of lands or partly of entire parcels of land and partly of undivided shares in parcels of land. The current of authority of this Court, so far as I am aware, is uniform.

The tenant in the position of the defendant in this case therefore enjoyed immunity from action for enhancement of rent on the grounds mentioned in S. 30. That immunity has been taken away by reason of the amendment of the definition of holding by Act 4 of 1928. Holding, as now defined, may include shares in parcels of land. The question therefore reduces itself to the simple proposition as to whether S. 30, Ben. Ten. Act can be combined with the definition of holding, as now amended, so as to give the landlord the right to sue for enhancement of rent in respect of a tenancy created before Act 4 of 1928 came into force. In my judgment the answer must be in the negative. The effect of the said amendment, is to take away the immunity from an action for enhancement enjoyed by such a tenant upto February 1929 when Act 4 of 1928 came into force, which should not for that reason be given retrospective operation. The following observations of Sir George Jessel in (1876) 1 Ch D 48 (10) at p. 50, are relevant:

I so decide because it is a general rule that when the Legislature alters the rights of parties by taking away or conferring any right of action its enactments, unless in express terms, they apply to pending actions, do not affect them. It is said that there is one exception to that rule, namely, that where enactments merely affect procedure and do not extend to rights of action, they have been held to apply to existing rights, and it is suggested that the alteration made by this section is within that exception.

A statute which takes away a right of action really takes away a right: ubi jus ibi remedium, and if the remedy is taken away what remains of the right! Where a statute confers a right of action which was non-existent before, it generally creates a right with a corresponding obligation. It is on this principle that Suhrawardy, J. when dealing with the effect of the amendment of S. 109, Ben. Ten. Act by Act 4 of 1928 on a pending action held that immunity from a civil suit is a substantive right and a statute which takes away such immunity cannot have any retrospective effect or govern proceedings pending at the time. In 33 C W N 1156 (1), a suit for enhancement on grounds mentioned in S. 30, Ben. Ten. Act had been instituted by the Maharaja in or before the year 1926. The tenancy of the ryot defendant comprised undivided shares of parcels of land. The suit was decided by the First Court on 7th December 1926 and the judgment of the appellate Court was pronounced on 30th June 1927. Both the lower Courts had dismissed the plaintiff's claim for enhancement. While the appeal was pending in this Court, Act 4 of 1928 (B. C.) came into force. The plaintiff contended that as the definition of holding, as amended by the said Act, would cover a case where undivided shares in parcels of land are held by a ryot, he was entitled to succeed on his claim for enhancement. Sir George Rankin held that this Court could not disturb a decision correctly arrived at according to law on the date of the decision, but in the course of his judgment he observed thus:

In my opinion there are no words in the amending Act which show or even tend to show that the amendment of the definition is to be applied with retrospective effect.

These observations were no doubt made in relation to the particular facts of the case and for the purpose of meeting the argument of the Advocate of the Maharajah that effect should be given to the amendment, as the suit, though instituted before the date of amendment, had not been finally disposed of at the date when it came into operation but they definitely point to the view of the learned Chief Justice that that amendment would not govern a pending action, which it would have done, if it was merely procedural and had not affected vested rights. I accordingly hold that as the tenancy had been created before Act 4 of 1928 (B. C.) came into force, the plaintiff's claim for enhancement of rent under S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act has been rightly dismissed. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal under the Letters Patent asked for is granted.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by one of the defendants from a decree for sale which the plaintiff has obtained on a mortgage bond. The plaintiff's case was that the defendant and his three brothers and also their mother executed the bond on 7th Pous 1323 (22nd December 1916) and borrowed Rs. 5,500 at an interest of 14 as. per cent per month compound with six monthly rests in order to pay off two earlier mortgages on some of the properties covered by this bond ; that these two mortgages were one dated 17th Magh 1323 (31st January 1916) for Rs. 2,000 in favour of one Tara Nath Mitra bearing interest at 12 as. per cent per month and another dated 12th Falgun (24th February 1916) for Rs. 1,800 from one Kunja Chakravarty bearing interest at 10 annas per cent per month and also that he had received two sums, namely Rs. 613-2-0 and Rs. 1,365, on account of interest due, the former through one Jogendra Chakravarty, brother of Kunja Chakravarty, and the latter through one Mon Mohan Moulik, Mukhtear of the Bhowal Estate. The Bhowal Estate were the purchasers of one of the mortgaged properties which was sold to them by the mortgagors with the consent of the plaintiff. The claim was laid at the balance due at the date of the suit, namely Rs. 15,932-9-10.

The principal defendants in the suits, of whom the appellant is one, were the mortgagors or their heirs, and the others were subsequent transferees of portions of the mortgaged properties. The defence of the appellant and of the other contesting defendants introduced a long and complicated story. Shortly put, the story was as follows: The plaintiff at the time of the mortgage paid only Rs. 1,433 in cash out of the amount of consideration which was stated in the bonds : viz. Rs. 5,500 and retained the balance Rs. 4,067 to pay off the two earlier mortgages. In 1324 B. S. the appellant was given an appointment by the plaintiff's father as an officer in his employ. In November 1917 the mortgagors sold away their moveables, including furniture, ornaments, cattle, etc., and out of the sale proceeds paid off Tara Nath's mortgage and, on 22nd December 1922 deposited in Court for paying off Kunja Chakravarty's mortgage a sum of Rs. 1923-12-0. Kunja Chakravarty did not accept the amount so deposited as it was short by a small amount, and eventually a creditor of his attached and realised Rs. 129-14-0. Out of this deposit, a balance of Rupees 1,793-14-0, was thus left. On 20th March 1923 a part of the mortgaged properties was sold with the plaintiff's consent, and this sale fetched Rs. 4,365, out of which Kunja Chakravarty was paid Rs. 3,000 leaving a balance of Rs. 1,365. These two amounts of Rs. 1,793-14-0 and Rupees 1,365, making a total of Rs. 3,158-14-0, was paid to the plaintiff on that date, of which Rs. 1,978-2-0 was credited to his dues on the mortgage, and the balance Rs. 1,180-12-0, was paid to him in satisfaction of his dues on certain pro-notes and for certain other charges. Taking the principal amount of the mortgage as Rs. 1,433 and giving credit for Rupees 1,978-2-0 then received, the dues on 20th March 1923 was found to be Rs. 481 12-6 which however the plaintiff's father promised to remit. The plaintiff's father eventually refused to grant the remission and so the appellant left his service. Other defences were also taken : want of legal execution and attestation ; penal and unconscionable rate of interest ; paramount title ; maintainability of the suit ; etc.

The Judge has overruled all the defences and accepting the plaintiff's case has made a decree. The first and most important question in the appeal is whether Rs. 5,500 was lent in cash or only Rupees 1,433 was paid in cash, the balance Rs. 4,067 being retained for clearing off the prior mortgages. On this question considerable reliance was placed upon the words of the bond which after reciting the two prior mortgages and saying that it was necessary to borrow Rs. 5,500 for paying them off and also for other needs of the mortgagors stated : "We, on keeping alive the rights under both the aforesaid mortgages * * * * borrow from your tehbil today the sum of Rs. 5,500." It has been argued that this stipulation shows that the dues on these earlier mortgages must have been retained and that no prudent mortgagee would, if he intended to keep alive his rights under the previous mortgages, in such circumstances, have consented to allow the mortgagors to take the money for paying off the earlier mortgages. We are unable to see that the recital referred to above indicates any such thing. Nor are we able to hold that the story that the plaintiff trusted the mortgagors and left it to them to pay off the earlier mortgages is a story which is so improbable that it is intrinsically unacceptable. It is true that it would be to the interest of the mortgagees to see that the previous mortgages were paid off; but having regard to the fact that the appellant was soon after taken in the employ of the plaintiff's father, it was not an impossibility on the part of the plaintiff's father to be a bit indulgent to the mortgagors so that they might settle their own terms with the prior mortgagees as regards their satisfaction.

It has been next argued that there is no clear statement in the bond showing that the whole amount of Rs. 5,500 was received in cash, and so it should be presumed that a part of it must have been retained. This contention, in our opinion, is unfounded, because the recital is that the amount was being taken out of the tehbil. Such a statement can only mean a cash transaction. On arguments such as these, and so lightly, the question cannot be decided in favour of the appellant. It appears that in the appellant's written statement, in which his story is carefully and in every detail set out, he made a case that when on 20th March 1923 the two payments of Rs. 1,365 and Rs. 1,793-14-0 were made, it was agreed that both the sums would be credited against the principal of the debt and that this agreement was violated.

The learned Judge has rightly pointed out that a sum of Rs. 1,433, which according to the appellant was the principal amount of this mortgage, would not admit of a credit of Rs. 3,158-14-0, even if interest at the full rate in the bond is taken into account. If the plaintiff had withheld the amount due on the prior mortgages, it is extremely unlikely that he should have delayed so long in paying them off, for the debts were running against him and there is no suggestion that he was in want, the evidence, on the other hand, being that the plaintiff's father was a rich man and had a good deal of money-lending. It is not explained why if so much as Rs. 4,067 was being withheld and only Rs. 1,433 was being paid, no mention whatever of that fact was made in the bond itself. The appellant's story is that when he had to sell the moveables, etc., as the plaintiff's father, contrary to the agreement, did not pay off the earlier mortgages, he complained to many persons including the plaintiff's father himself. This is palpably false; nobody has corroborated him and the fact that he continued in this service belies the statement. Is it conceivable that he and the other mortgagors should all remain quiet if they were being cheated in this way? Clearly, no. This strange conduct on their part has been sought to be explained before us by suggesting that the appellant was in the service of the plaintiff's father and so the mortgagors had to put up with the treatment they were receiving.

This explanation, to our mind, is unacceptable. It should be remembered that the appellant's story means that not only was the plaintiff's father playing them false, but that they had to sell their all and become paupers in order to pay off the earlier mortgages. It is not suggested that when the earlier mortgages were paid off any reference was made by those mortgagees to the plaintiff or his father, a fact which makes it exceedingly likely that the plaintiff and his father left it to the mortgagors to settle their own terms with those mortgagees. The probabilities, such as they are, are decidedly against the appellant's story. As regards the actual evidence in the case, a good deal of criticism has been levelled on behalf of the appellant against the direct testimony that there is as regards the passing of the consideration of Rs. 5,500. There may be a doubt as regards the presence of P. W. 6 Phanindra Chandra Chakravarty at the time when the payment was made, but we see no reason to distrust the other evidence that is there of it. A large body of evidence has been adduced on behalf of the defendants to show that the moveables, etc., were sold in order to raise money wherewith the earlier mortgages were eventually paid off. We do not regard this evidence as credible as regards the items that were sold and the prices they fetched. This evidence gives an account which to our mind seems considerably exaggerated. The learned Judge has referred to this evidence in detail and we do not consider it necessary to deal with it here. On the whole we feel no difficulty in endorsing the conclusion which the learned Judge has come to and recorded in these words:

Conceding that all this evidence was true and that from this money Rs. 2,200 was paid to Tara Nath and Rs. 1,993 (should be Rupees 1,923-12-0) was deposited in the name of Kunja, still this does not disprove the plaintiff's case that the whole of Rs. 5,500 was paid to the defendants at the time of the bond. It is quite possible that the defendants spent the money if not all otherwise, and then raised more by sale of moveables. The great delay tends to show that some such thing must have happened.

Some comment has been made on behalf of the appellant on the ground that the plaintiff's father was not examined though he was alive for nearly eighteen months after the institution of the suit, that the jama kharach book has not been produced and some such other matters. We do not think it was necessary for the plaintiff to examine his father when the other evidence that he produced was not inadequate or unconvincing. As regards the non-production of the jama kharach the learned Judge has sufficiently dealt with it. Of the other defences taken, the question of paramount title has been left open and the other questions have all been decided against the defendants. The only other question amongst these that has been argued before us is the question of interest. This question has been raised before us in a different shape from that in which it was presented in the Court below. There it was alleged that the provision as regards compound interest was fraudulently inserted and that the rate was penal and unconscionable. The Court overruled these objections and held further that the bond being of a date prior to 1918, the Usurious Loans Act 10 (B. C.), 1918, did not apply. Here, reliance has been placed upon S. 4, Bengal Money Lenders Act 7 (B. C.) of 1933, and it has been contended that that section, by its retrospective operation, would disentitle the plaintiff to any interest beyond an amount equal to the principal of the loan. The decision of the Court below was passed on 8th August 1931. It is therefore undisputed that the decision was in accordance with the law as it then was. The appeal was filed on 23rd November 1931 and has since remained pending. While it has been so pending, Act 7 (B. C.) of 1933 was passed and came into operation on 1st July 1934. If the appeal had been disposed of on any date prior to the date last mentioned the contention would have been out of the question. The argument of the appellant involves the position that because the appeal has, for congestion in the business of this Court, remained pending, the plaintiff respondent has to lose some five thousand rupees. The appellant says that this cannot be helped because the Act has made such change in the law as we are bound to take notice of and to apply to the case even at this stage.

Now, we do not find either in S. 4 itself or in any other section of the Act anything which would indicate that any retrospective operation to the section was intended. And, in our opinion, the argument is entirely misconceived when it speaks of 'retrospective operation.' The real question is whether at this stage, at the hearing of the appeal, the law which came into force during the pendency of the appeal on 1st July 1934, is to be applied to the case. One difficulty of answering this question in the affirmative is that according to the section the Court shall limit the amount "unless it is satisfied that the money lender had reasonable grounds for not enforcing his claim earlier." To deal with this proviso therefore, an issue of fact will have to be decided necessitating an investigation into facts. To hold in favour of the appellant would mean that in all cases as regards interest pending in first or second appeal or an appeal to the Judicial Committee, a remand or at least a further investigation would have to be made. It is hardly conceivable that such was ever the intention of the Legislature. A number of decisions have been cited before us on behalf of the appellant as supporting his contention that the law, such as it now is, should be applied to the case. Of these those that are said to have any bearing on the contention will now be noticed. 6 C L J 74 (1), 6 C L J 102 (2) and 20 C L J 107 (3) do not assist us because they merely say that facts and events subsequent to the filing of the appeal may, and sometimes should, be taken notice of where, by adopting that course litigation, may be shortened, ends of justice attained or rights of parties preserved. In 47 C L J 530 (4) this proposition was applied to a case in which in an action for ejectment the tenant was held by the trial Court protected by a temporary Act, namely the Calcutta Rent Act of 1920, but during the pendency of an appeal from that decision that Act expired and in the appeal ejectment was ordered which could be justified under the general law as between the landlord and tenant. It was held that:

If the right claimed is one which has either ceased to exist or been modified by certain events which have transpired since the decree of the trial Court, the Court is bound to take notice of it to give just and proper relief to the parties to the appeal before it.

It should be noted that if this view was not taken, and if the appeal was disposed of on the ground that the trial Court has applied the law as it then was the only result would have been that though the plaintiff failed to get ejectment on the ground that the temporary Act gave the tenant protection, he would be entitled to get the relief in a fresh suit which he would institute afterwards. To shorten the litigation and prevent an unnecessary suit the fact that the temporary Act had ceased to operate was taken notice of. In 36 Mad 439 (5), the real question was the meaning of the word 'final' used in connection with a decree under a certain Act; and it being held that it meant a decree which was not under appeal or was not liable to be set aside or modified on appeal certain rights provided for by the Act in such circumstances were allowed. In 40 Mad 818 (6), the relevant facts were that a suit had been dismissed by the trial Court, and after the plaintiff had taken an appeal from the trial Court's decision an Act was passed which was by nature a declaratory one and had retrospective effect; and relying on it the appellate Court held that the plaintiff had no right to sue and so dismissed this appeal. This decision was upheld by the High Court holding that the Act was retrospective in its operation and the appellate Court was entitled to take cognizance of it at the appellate stage. This therefore was a case in which, if the contrary was held, a plaintiff who was unsuccessful in getting a decree from the trial Court would have got a decree from the appellate Court even though he had no right to such a decree at the date on which he was getting it. These cases, in our judgment, are all distinguishable from the present case and are of no assistance to us on the question we are now considering.

On behalf of the appellant considerable reliance has been placed upon the decision in (1882) 9 Q B D 672 (7). In that case it was held that the right given by the Conveyancing Act of 1881 to obtain relief against forfeiture could be claimed in a suit which had been instituted and tried at first instance before that Act came into operation. Jessel M. R. first of all referred to the general proposition that is applicable to such cases. He observed:

The question whether an Act of Parliament is retrospective in its operation must be determined by the provisions of the Act itself, bearing in mind that a statute is not to be construed retrospectively unless it is clear that such was the intention of the legislature.

The expression "the provisions of the Act itself" should be understood in an enlarged and not a limited sense as had been explained by Lord Hatherby in an earlier decision, namely the case of (1869) 4 Ch 735 (8) thus:

Baron Parke did not consider it an invariable rule that a statute could not be retrospective unless so expressed in the very terms of the section which had to be construed, and said that the question in each case was, whether the legislature had sufficiently expressed that intention. In fact we must look to the general scope and purview of the statute and at the remedy sought to be applied, and consider what was the former state of the law, and what it was that the legislature contemplated.

Then it was held that if the Act was not given a retrospective operation and if it was held that it did not apply to breaches committed before it came into operation, the effect would be to take away from the tenant a right of relief against forfeiture similar to what the Act itself gave him, and which he had under a previous Act, namely the Common Law Procedure Act 1852, but which was now lost to him, as the earlier Act was abrogated by that Act. It was next held upon a certain consideration arising out of the wording of a particular section of the Act, and on comparing it with the earlier enactment, that the Act was intended to apply to pending proceedings. In other words, it was held that although the Act was not in existence at the date of commencement of the action, the provisions were to be applied to the action which was pending.

Lastly it was held that even though the trial at first instance was over, the appeal Court was entitled to apply the Act to the case. It will be noticed, if the judgments in the case are carefully perused, that considerable stress was laid, as regards this part of the decision, on the fact that although the judgment had already been given before the Act was passed, and the landlord might have obtained possession, he had not re-entered, but execution had been stayed to give the tenant time to appeal and no possession had been delivered. And putting the provisions of the Act together it was held that the tenant was entitled to the relief so long as the landlord had not taken possession.

There is nothing in the present case similar to the conditions in the case just discussed. The appellant's contention in our judgment is not well founded. We think the decree which the Court below has passed is right. The appeal is dismissed with costs. The days of grace will be extended by six months from to-day.

Cunliffe, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit which was commenced on 18th September 1931 in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge at Alipore. It was an action for the recovery of a sum of money which comprised both capital and interest upon a mortgage bond and it may be stated at once that of the amount claimed which was Rs. 3,238 odd the principal loan only amounted to Rs. 800. It was for an old debt going back as far as the year 1919, and the balance of the amount claimed was for compound interest at about 12 per cent. The learned Judge gave his judgment in the month of December 1933. Then it went up to the lower appellate Court where the judgment was delivered in April 1934. From that judgment an appeal to this Court was preferred. The question of the rate of interest was the real dispute between the parties, and the judgment of the Court of first instance shows, and also the judgment of the lower appellate Court, which is a very short one, demonstrates that this question of interest was pressed very hardly upon both Courts, the provisions of the Imperial Act known as the Usurious Loans Act being prayed in aid by the original defendant. Now after the appeal was preferred an interesting position was created, because during the pendency of the appeal before the matter reached this Court, there came into force a local Act known as the Bengal Money-lenders Act of 1933, which was ordered to become operative on 1st July 1934, and it was then that the defendants realised that they had another weapon in their hands on this question of interest, because the provisions of this local Act in favour of the borrowers are even more advantageous than the Usurious Loans Act. Now what we have to decide here is whether the appellant is entitled to rely upon the provisions of this local Act having regard to the fact that when the respondents first launched the suit, the Act in question was not yet upon the Statute Book and was therefore not law operating in the borrowers' favour. It is argued that we ought to apply in favour of the appellant S. 4, Bengal Money-lenders' Act, which I think I ought to set out in full. It runs as follows :

Notwithstanding anything in any other Act, where in any suit in respect of any money lent by a money-lender before the commencement of this Act it is found that the arrears of interest amount to a sum greater than the principal of the loan, the Court, unless it is satisfied that the money-lender had reasonable grounds for not enforcing his claim earlier, shall limit the amount of such interest recoverable in the suit to an amount equal to the principal of the loan.

That section is a part apparently of the scheme of the Act to benefit the borrowers. Other sections in the favour of those who have got into the hands of the money-lenders with regard to the reduction on interest are Ss. 3, 5 and 6. I am also informed by the learned Advocate that there is a still greater advantage in favour of the borrowers under this local Act because in the Usurious Loans Act the onus of proving that the interest was harsh and unconscionable falls upon the borrowers. Here in this Act the reverse is the case, as the onus is upon the creditor to show that the interest which he has charged does not come into that category. It will thus be seen that it is extremely important from the borrower's point of view to ascertain whether in this particular class of case the operation of this S. 4 can be utilised to reduce the amount due to the lender. It is argued that it is however now settled law that in the peculiar circumstances of a case such as this, where the Act has come into force after a suit has already been launched and after the decision has already been given in the Court of first instance, the Act cannot possibly be applied. The authority for that proposition is reported in 39 C W N 1213 (1). It was a decision of the Acting Chief Justice of this Court together with S. K. Ghose, J. Those learned Judges came to the conclusion that the Section was not applicable to a case such as we are considering now for various reasons. To quote from that judgment I may cite this passage.

Now we do not find either in S. 4 itself or in any other section of the Act, anything which would indicate that any retrospective operation to the section was intended. And, in our opinion, the argument (that is the argument to the contrary) is entirely misconceived when it speaks of 'retrospective operation'.

"The real question is" the learned Judges went on "whether at this stage, at the hearing of the appeal, the law which came into force during the pendency of the appeal on 1st July 1934 is to be applied to the case."

Now I may say at once that I have the misfortune to doubt whether, if I had been a member of this Bench, I should have been able to subscribe to this very specifically enunciated view. Reading the language of S. 4 and the language of Ss. 5 and 6 I am of opinion that the scope of these sections is undoubtedly retrospective. Moreover it seems to me that even S. 3 of the Act has, to a more limited extent, it is true, a reference to retrospective action. If it is held that the expression "any suit" must exclude any suit which has already been instituted and is under appeal, then I think the general principle of the interpretation of statutes and the rules which govern all interpretations of formal documents will be broken. That rule, as I understand it, is that the ordinary meaning of the language employed is to be looked at and it ought never to be necessary to introduce words of limitation or words of qualification to explain the intention of the drafters of the Act. Here if the section is to be read as only referring to suits which have not already been instituted, then it seems to me that it would have been quite easy for the framers of the Act to have given an indication of their intention by the addition of a few qualifying words. It would have been only necessary, e. g. to put in brackets after the word "suit," the words "not already instituted" or "not already under appeal". But that has not been done and it may be further interesting to note that in this Imperial Act, to which I have already referred, the Usurious

1. Brojendra Kumar Dutta Roy v. Sushil Chandra Chakrabarty, 1936 Cal 334=39 C W N 1213.

Loans Act, the class of suits to which the Act applies is specifically definite in Chapter II, Ss. 2 and 3 with three definitive sub-paragraphs so that, so far as the Usurious Loans Act is concerned, no person who wishes to consult it can be in any doubt as to what is meant by the word "suits" to which this Act applies when they are affected by this particular piece of law. It seems to me however that as in the peculiar circumstances of this appeal my learned brother is willing to accept the interpretation of the Bench of the Acting Chief Justice and S. K. Ghose, J., in 39 C W N 1213 (1) referred to above, in that he agreed with them that the words "any suit" in S. 4 must exclude those suits which have already been put on the file, and having regard also to the fact that the number of the persons and the number of the actions which are going to be affected by this particular section in these particular circumstances are a diminishing class, and more especially having regard to the necessity of preserving and supporting the rule which is so well known in our Courts as 'stare decisis' I am not prepared to press my opinion whilst reserving it upon this specific point in the way I have already indicated. I therefore propose, with deference to the views already expressed by the learned Chief Justice and S. K. Ghose, J., and the views which are about to be expressed by my learned brother, to agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Henderson, J. — The short problem which has been propounded for our decision is whether S. 4, Bengal Money Lenders Act, applies to suits which were instituted before that Act came into force. My learned brother has already set out the terms of that section in full and it is unnecessary for me to do so. I do not think it can be seriously disputed that this section will not have such retrospective effect unless it is abundantly clear from the provisions of the Act itself that such was the intention of the legislature. The section really deals with two distinct matters; firstly, suits which are instituted before the Act comes into force and secondly money which was lent before the Act comes into force. Such being the case the legislature might deal with the matter in three ways. The Section might have no retrospective effect at all. Secondly it might be completely retrospective or thirdly it might be retrospective in one respect and not in the other. I have read and re-read the section and the conclusion I have reached is that the intention of the legislature is that it should have no application to suits filed before the Act comes into force but that it should apply to suits relating to money lent before the Act came into force.

My reason for this view is that in my opinion the words "before the commencement of this Act" are intended to qualify only the words "money lent by a money lender." This appears to me to be the natural interpretation of the language used. If the intention of the legislature was that the section should apply to suits instituted before the Act came into force, the words to which I have referred would have no real meaning at all. It is quite clear that a suit which is instituted before the Act comes into force must be concerned with money which was lent before the Act came into force and all that it would have been necessary to say is that the Act is to apply to suits even though they were instituted before it came into force. If this view of mine is correct, the words "before the commencement of this Act" have entirely spent their force by the qualification which I have indicated. The result is that there is nothing left in the section to suggest that it is to apply to suits instituted before the Act comes into force. That being the case the ordinary rule of interpretation ought to apply and in the absence of any indication that the legislature intended it to be retrospective in this respect the contention of the appellant ought to be overruled. This opinion is supported by the decision of the Acting Chief Justice and S. K. Ghose, J. to which my learned brother has referred. There can be no doubt that if that case was rightly decided, the present appeal must be dismissed. We were strongly pressed by Mr. Mukherjee to dissent from that decision on the ground that the chief reason given in support of it appears to go too far. I allude to the sentence which has been set out by my learned brother. In my opinion what the learned Judges say should be interpreted with reference to the context. The only problem which they had to decide was whether the Section applies to suits instituted before the Act came into force. They were not concerned with the further question whether it applies to money lent before the Act comes into force. I am therefore of opinion that they were not intending to lay down the law on this latter point. If however that decision was intended to lay down that S. 4 has no retrospective effect of any kind I entirely agree with my learned brother that I could not interpret it in that way.

The conclusion which is reached by this decision at any rate avoids the absurdity that the question whether the appellant is to make a profit of several hundred rupees depends upon the entirely fortuitous circumstance that he made a delay of some weeks in filing this appeal. There is no room for doubt that had he filed his appeal before 1st July, it would have been summarily dismissed. Then again we should be compelled in second appeal to have an investigation made into facts in order to see whether the respondent has explained a delay which did not require explanation when the suit was brought.

The only other thing I desire to say is that I regret that I should have to differ from my learned brother. But had I agreed with him I should still have been pressed by his opinion that in a matter of this sort, which only affects suits that were instituted before 1st July 1934 and will have soon no practical importance, we ought to follow the decision of a Division Bench of this Court whatever our personal views about it might have been. I therefore agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

Judgment.—This appeal relates to a money suit for recovery of landlord's fees. The suit was dismissed in the trial Court as being not maintainable and this view was also taken in the Court of appeal below, the learned Subordinate Judge holding that since S. 26-J, Ben. Ten. Act, expressly provides for such a case and lays down that the landlord should come to Court and file an application under S. 26-J, a suit for recovery of fees is not maintainable. In support of this view he cited the case of 37 C W N 917 (1), where it was held that such a suit was not maintainable. In that case the earlier cases of 36 C W N 847 (2) and 36 C W N 924 (3) were referred to. But on referring to those cases and also to the unreported case of Civ. Revn. No. 768 of 1931 (4), which was referred to in 36 C W N 924 (3), I find that in those cases all that was decided was that the landlords were entitled under the law to recover the balance of the landlord's fee by means of an application. It was held that although S. 26-J does not expressly mention the procedure to be followed for the purpose of recovering landlord's fee and compensation, it is the intention of the legislature to provide a procedure of a summary nature. But under S. 9, Civil P. C., the Courts have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred, and I do not think that by the provisions of S. 26-J, Ben. Ten. Act, a suit can be said to be impliedly barred so as to be not maintainable. With all due deference to the learned Judge who decided the case of 37 C W N 917 (1), I think he misdirected himself as to the effect of the previous decisions. The proper procedure, to my mind, in a case like this is for the Court to treat the matter as an application under S. 26-J, Ben. Ten. Act, and that is what should have been done in the present case. The learned Subordinate Judge says that it would be a travesty of the procedure to permit this being done. But after all the Courts are there to enable justice to be done between the parties, and the landlord is simply asking for fees which, under the law, are due to him, and the mere fact that he applies in the wrong form is no reason why he should not recover the fees. The court-fees which he has paid for bringing a suit are more than those which he would have to pay on an application. Under S. 151 of the Code it is always within the powers of the Court to take action of this kind.

In these circumstances, the proper order to make will be to set aside the decision of the Court below, and to direct that the matter should go back to the trial Court to be treated as an application under S. 26-J and to be decided accordingly. The result is that the appeal is dismissed since the matter being one for the Small Cause Court, no appeal lies, but the application under S. 115, Civil P. C., is allowed. The parties will bear their costs both of this appeal and the application. The respondents will get their costs in the first two Courts.

Civil Rule No. 1078 of 1935, Decided on 17th February 1936, against order of Munsif, Second Court, Rampurhat, D/- 29th June 1935.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (8 of 1885), S. 26-F (1)—Co-sharer not given notice of transfer—Pre-emption application by another co-sharer — Notice issued on former co-sharer—He can apply to be added as co-applicant within reasonable time—Other co-sharers also can become co-applicants within a month of such co-sharer's application and not necessarily within a month of first pre-emption application.

On a transfer certain cosharer filed an application for pre-emption and notice was served on the other co-sharers of such application. One of the cosharers who had not been given notice of the transfer was served with notice; on getting notice of application he applied to be impleaded as a co-applicant and expressed his desire to pre-empt: within a month of his application, the other cosharers also wanted to be impleaded as co-applicants :

Held : that the cosharer's application should be treated not only as an application to become a co-applicant but also as an independent application for pre-emption.

Held also : that the other cosharers were also entitled to become co-applicants in his application even though they did not do so within a month of application by first co-sharer as they were not bound to exercise their right at the earliest opportunity, i. e., as soon as the first application for pre-emption was made.

Obiter.—Where rights of third parties have not intervened it is not only in the power, but it is the duty of the Court, to relieve a party of the injury done to him by it, by reason of its mistakes and defaults and mistakes or defaults of its officers inadvertently committed. Actus curiae neminem gravabit : this principle ought to be applied even when for relieving a party from such injury the Court has to consider the question of time. Gopendra Nath Das—for Petitioner.

B. C. Mukherjee, Muktipada Chatterjee, Kshetra Mohan Chatterjee for Kshitindra Nath Mitter, A. C. Mukherjee and Narendra Nath Mitter—for Opposite Parties.

Order.—The petitioner and opposite parties 2 to 12 are the owners of a certain patni taluk. There is an occupancy holding under the said patni taluk held directly under the patnidars at a rent of Rs. 7-12-0. Opposite party 1 purchased 3/4th share of the same for Rs. 150. In the document of transfer opposite parties 2 to 11 and petitioner were named as the immediate superior landlords and the notice of the transfer was served on them on 16th December 1934. No such notice was served on opposite party 12.

On 11th February 1935 the petitioner, who had a very small share in the patni filed his application for pre-emption. To the said application he made opposite parties 2 to 12 parties on the footing that they were the remaining co-sharer landlords of the said holding. The said application which was accompanied by the requisite deposits was registered as a miscellaneous case on 25th February 1935. Process fees for the service of notice of the application on all the opposite parties to the application, that is, for service of the notice of the application on the purchaser and on the remaining co-sharer landlords, was filed along with the application, but the Court overlooked the said fact and was under the wrong impression that the said fees had not been deposited. Accordingly it did not direct the issue of the notices and recorded on 30th March 1935, the following order in the order-sheet.

It appears that process has not been filed. Petitioner to file the same at once failing which the petition will stand rejected; fix 6th April 1935 for orders.

On 6th April 1935, the following order was passed :

Process fee filed. Issue notice on the opposite party fixing 4th May 1935 for hearing.

The notices were issued on 10th April 1935 and served on opposite parties 2 to 12 on 27th April 1935. Opposite parties 2 to 6 and 12 applied for being made co-applicants for pre-emption on 4th May 1935, and opposite parties 7 to 11 made similar applications on 24th June 1935. In his application opposite party 12 stated that no notice of transfer under S. 26-C, Bengal Tenancy Act, had been served on him and that he came to know of the transfer for the first time when notice of the application for pre-emption made by the petitioner was served on him through Court. He stated that if the notice under S. 26-C had been served on him he would have applied for pre-emption under S. 26-F, sub-s. (1), and he wanted to pre-empt. This statement has been repeated in the counter-affidavit, filed before me on his behalf. As no evidence was recorded in the lower Court and parties chose to proceed on question of law only, I must accept his statements. He also asked the Court to intimate to him what money he should deposit under S. 26-F, sub-s. 4, Cl. (b), but the Court not having passed any orders on his application he deposited Rs. 82-8-0 being half the amount which the petitioner had deposited with his application for pre-emption.

The purchaser did not oppose pre-emption and the contest was amongst the co-sharer landlords. The petitioner maintained and still maintains that he is entitled to pre-emption on the whole; opposite party 12 maintains that he and the petitioner are the only two persons entitled to preempt, and the other opposite parties, namely 2 to 11, maintain that an order for pre-emption should be made in favour of all the cosharer landlords. The learned Munsif has allowed all the patnidars to pre-empt.

Before me Mr. Das, who appears for the petitioner, has contended that the order of the learned Munsif is wrong and that his client alone should have been allowed to pre-empt. He says that the learned Munsif had exceeded his jurisdiction in entertaining the application of his co-sharers to become co-applicants as those applications had been filed beyond the time mentioned in S. 26-F, sub-s. 4, Cl. (a). This argument would have been unanswerable if opposite party 12, whose application must be considered not only as an application to become a co-applicant but an independent application for pre-emption under sub-s. (1), S. 26-F, had been served with the notice of transfer. The matter is further complicated by the fact that owing to a mistake committed by the Court the notice of the petitioner's application for pre-emption was not issued on opposite parties 2 to 12, the remaining cosharer landlords, within one month of the filing of the said application.

To repel the contentions urged by Mr. Dass, the opposite parties have raised two points, namely : (a) that the time for joining as co-applicants as provided for in S. 26-F, sub-s. 4, Cl. (a) ought to be extended in this case on account of the aforesaid mistake of the Court, and (b) that as opposite party 12's application regarded as an application for pre-emption under sub-s. (1), S. 26-F, is in order, he having come in within a reasonable time of acquiring knowledge of the transfer as no notice under S. 26-C had been served on him, the other opposite parties have the right to become co-applicants in his, opposite party 12's application, within one month from the date of the said application and some of them having applied to become co-applicants on the date when that application was filed and the rest also within a month thereof, the order made by the learned Munsiff is correct.

I hold that both these contentions of opposite parties 2 to 12 are sound and the Rule ought to be discharged. So far as the second of the aforesaid contentions is concerned it is covered by authority. The point came up for consideration before my learned brother Lodge, J., in Tara Sundar Banerjee v. Kishory Mohan Ray (1). He held that under the circumstances present in this case the application of a co-sharer landlord (B), who had not been served with the notice of transfer, to become a co-applicant in the application for pre-emption made by another co-sharer landlord (A), who had been served with such a notice, is to be considered as an application for pre-emption under sub-s. (1), S. 26-F, and as soon as such an application is made the remaining co-sharer landlords C and D would have right to become co-applicants, if they make an application for being made so within one month of B's application for pre-emption, although they ask for pre-emption beyond a month of A's application. This decision is supported by the language of the statute. A simpler case can be conceived. Suppose there are three persons X, Y and Z who are the immediate landlords of the holding sold. The notice of transfer is served on the said three persons on three dates wide apart from each other. The notice of transfer is served on X on 2nd October 1935, and Y on 2nd November 1935, and on Z on 2nd December 1935. Y makes the application for pre-emption under sub-s. (1), S. 26-F on 2nd January 1936, i. e., on the very last date, and Z makes an application for pre-emption under the same sub-section on 2nd February 1936.

Although X cannot become a co-applicant in Y's application for pre-emption if, he makes his application on 4th February 1936, because it would be beyond two months of the date of service of the notice of transfer on him and also beyond one month of Y's application for pre-emption, he would be within time to become a co-applicant to Z's application, for though his application is beyond two months of the service of the notice of transfer on him, he would be within one month of Z's application. A co-sharer landlord may not like to pre-empt the property from the purchaser, he may not have any personal objection to a particular co-sharer having the whole holding to himself by exercising the right of pre-emption, but he may have objection to another co-sharer of his having by pre-emption the whole of the holding transferred. It cannot therefore be held either on the words of the statute or on general principles, that a co-sharer landlord must exercise his right to acquire a share of the holding by becoming a co-applicant at the earliest opportunity, that is as soon as the first application for pre-emption is made by one of his co-sharers.

I accordingly uphold the second contention raised by the opposite parties. This is sufficient for the disposal of the Rule, but in deference to the arguments advanced before me on the first point raised by the opposite parties I express my views thereon. The said point has for its basis the fact that owing to a mistake of the Judge unwillingly, committed, the notice of the application for pre-emption made by the petitioner was not issued promptly but was issued after a month of the petitioner's application for pre-emption. The question is whether the Court should set right the injury caused to the rights of the co-sharer landlords opposite parties. On the facts of this case, it cannot be said that the petitioner's application for pre-emption was not in order. He had filed the said application within time and had made the remaining co-sharer landlords parties. He had put in process fees along with his application for pre-emption. It cannot be urged that he by his act had not given opportunity to his co-sharers to join as co-applicants, but if the Court had done what it was required to do, that is to issue the notice of the application for pre-emption immediately after the process fees were deposited, the notice of the petitioner's application for pre-emption would have been served within a month of the said application. The said notices were served late owing to the Court's mistake. The question is whether the Court has inherent power under these circumstances to do what justice requires.

1. Civil Revn. No. 130 of 1935, Decided on 31st May 1935.

It is true that the Court cannot invoke the aid of S. 5, Lim. Act, as that section has not been extended to applications for pre-emption made under S. 26-F. It is true that it has been laid down, though the decisions are not uniform in that respect, that questions of extensions of time or exclusion of time ought to be answered solely by reference to the provisions contained in the Limitation Act. I have in mind the cases where suspension of time had been pleaded apart from the statute, of which the cases of 12 M I A 244 (2) and 29 C W N 973 (3) are types. In the last mentioned case which has been followed by the Madras High Court in 50 Mad 417 (4) my learned brother Mukerjee, J., after an elaborate review of the case law, repelled the claim for exclusion of time based not on the provisions of the Limitation Act but on equitable principles. But I do not consider that these decisions can be invoked in the case before me. It is an established principle that where rights of third parties have not intervened it is not only in the power, but it is the duty, of the Court, to relieve a party of the injury done to him by it, by reason of its mistakes and defaults or mistakes and defaults of its officers inadvertently committed. Actus curiae neminem gravabit. This principle, in my judgment, ought to be applied even when for relieving a party from such injury the Court has to consider the question of time. I accordingly discharge this Rule with costs. Hearing-fee one gold mohur to be divided between the appearing opposite parties in equal shares.

Appeal No. 368 of 1933, Decided on 11th February 1936, from original decree of Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, Calcutta, D/ 6 September 1933.

Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 23—Principle of valuation — Frontage to highway—If no frontage, propinquity and easy access to high road are powerful elements in value.

Where the value of the land in a populous locality, to be acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, is to be determined, frontage, i. e., immediate contiguity to highway and where there is no frontage, propinquity and easy access to high road are the powerful elements of the value to be taken into consideration: *Metropolitan Board of Works v. S. C. Basak and Bijan K. Mukerji—for Appellant.

Surendra Madhav Mallik and Probodh Krishna Shome—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the Secretary of State for India in Council, against a decision of the President, Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, enhancing an award of the Land Acquisition Collector, Calcutta, made in favour of the claimant, by Rs. 25,645, for reasons stated in the judgment of the learned President. It appears that the President granted certificate that the case was a fit one for appeal on the ground that the Tribunal had for the first time perhaps extended a principle of valuation which the Collector had adopted in regard to small plots of land, to the determination of the market value of a fairly large-sized land on a common passage. In this connection it has to be mentioned, that the acquired premises were described in the Collector's award as "premises No. 670, Beadon Street formed out of No. 67 Beadon Street, (portion)," comprising an area 1 B 12c. 2ch., 36sq. ft. of land, could be approached by a common passage varying from 12 to 16 feet in width and apart from that they were practically landlocked; and one of the material questions raised in the case before the Tribunal was whether, the land should be valued as having a frontage on a sewered ditch from Nilmoni Mitter Street, or having been in the third belt of an 80 feet belting from Beadon Street. As stated by the President of the Tribunal in his judgment, that was the real issue in the case.

The President expressed the definite opinion in his judgment, that the method of valuation adopted by two experts examined in the case,—one on the side of the claimant, and the other on the side of the Government, could not be accepted; and they had to be discarded for the reason that the experts represented extreme views of valuing the property in question. The course followed by the President of the Tribunal mentioned as the sound course to follow in the matter of the valuation of the land, was "to apply a principle that has sometimes been followed by the Collector," and to give the land in question 75 per cent of the value given to a third belt of a property having frontage on Beadon Street. In the judgment of the President, there is no reference to the materials from which he came to the conclusion that the Collector followed the principle mentioned above, but there is reference to "the acquisition of 69-6 Beadon Street comprising an area of 10 chittaks of land" in his order granting leave to appeal to this Court, from which it appears the Collector held Rs. 2,400 per cotta, to be the reasonable value considering the size and situation of the land, and in consideration of the accepted award of premises No. 69-8 Beadon Street. It is impossible for us to deduce any principle from the Collector's award mentioned above, and we do not appreciate the reason for accepting the state of things shown in the same, as indicating any principle.

It may not be open to this Court in an appeal from the decision of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, to go into evidence in a case, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the valuation of the land in question, as made by the Tribunal, is proper or not; but on the judgment of the President of the Tribunal as it stands, there can be no doubt that the method of valuation followed in the case before us, was wholly unjustified. The President rejected the evidence of the valuers examined as experts by the parties concerned, and then adopted as basis of valuation, which we are unable to hold was based on any principle whatsoever; and there is absolutely no doubt that the method of valuation which the President has acted upon, is not supported by evidence on record. In the above view of the case, the decision of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal has to be set aside.

It is necessary to mention that in view of the real issue in the case, as stated by the President in his judgment, whether the land in question should be valued as the third belt of an 80 feet belting from Beadon Street the principle must be recognised and kept in view, that the immediate contiguity to a highway commonly called a frontage, is a powerful element in the value of all lands in populous localities. When frontage to a high road does not exist, propinquity and easy access to a high road are equally undoubted, elements of value: see 7 H L 243 (1) at p. 263. On this principle, the question of valuation of land in the case before us, must in our judgment, be approached from this standpoint, as to whether or not the land acquired is one to which the basis of valuation by belts on lands having frontage on Beadon Street, could be applied, or whether the only basis that could reasonably be adopted in case of land of this nature, which was practically landlocked (as mentioned by the Collector in his award), was the one applicable to land where frontage to a highway does not exist, and propinquity and access to a high road are the matters to be taken into consideration, in determining the amount of compensation payable for acquisition of such land.

In view of the decision we have arrived at the judgment of the learned President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal cannot be supported on the ground stated by him. The decision and decree against which this appeal is directed, are set aside; and the case is remitted to the Tribunal for a fresh decision, in the light of the observations contained in the judgment, on the materials already on record, and on such further materials as the parties concerned may be advised to place before the Tribunal in support of their respective cases. The costs in this appeal will abide the decision after remand; the hearing fee in this Court is assessed at 5 gold mohurs.

Government Pleader—Opposite Party.
Civil Rule No. 446-(F) of 1935, Decided on 12th June 1935, from original decree of Offg. Sub-Judge, Bogra.

* (a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 151 — High Court can direct refund of excess court-fee where obvious injustice has been done and case does not fall within Ss. 13, 14 or 15, Court-fees Act.

In cases which are not governed by Ss. 13, 14 and 15, Court-fees Act, the High Court has inherent powers to direct a refund under S. 151, Civil P. C., in a case of excess court-fee where court-fee has been paid in excess of the amount payable, and obvious injustice has been done: 40 Cal 365; 14 W R 47; 1918 Pat 496; 1932 Mad 438 and 1933 Oudh 170, Foll.; 1928 Pat 35, Disting. [P 348 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 151— Suit for enhancement of rent under S. 7, Ben. Ten. Act — Payment of excess of court-fees was directed to be refunded to the plaintiff.

Where in a suit for enhancement of rent under S. 7, Ben. Ten. Act, the plaintiff paid court-fees on the basis of the enhanced rent both on the plaint and the memorandum of appeal, and the proper court-fee payable was the amount payable on the difference between the rate claimed and rate paid under Sch. 1, Art. 1, the High Court interfering under its inherent powers directed refund of the excess amount paid. [P 348 C 1, 2]

Bireswar Bagchi and Jyotindra Nath Das—for Petitioner.

Bijan K. Mukerji — for Opposite Party.

D. N. Mitter, J.—This Rule was issued on the learned Senior Government Pleader of this Court to show cause why the prayer of the petitioner asking for refund of the excess court-fees should not be granted to the petitioner or such other order or further orders made as to this Court may seem fit and proper. It appears that the petitioners who were the plaintiffs instituted a suit for enhancement of rent under the provisions of S. 7, Ben. Ten. Act, and they paid court-fees both in the Court below as in this Court on the amount which was claimed on the basis of enhancement of rent. They did not pay court-fees on the difference between the original rate of rent and the enhanced rent claimed. It now appears from a decision in 38 C W N 527 (1) that a suit for enhancement of the rent of a tenure, there being no prayer for recovery of rent for any period would be governed by Art. 1, Sch. 1, Court-fees Act, and the court-fee payable on the plaint would be on the difference between the rate claimed and the rate paid before and the fee payable on the memorandum of appeal would be on the difference between the rate claimed and the rate allowed by the Court below.

Having regard to this decision it appears that the plaintiffs paid in the Court below as well as in the memorandum of appeal an aggregate sum of Rs. 585 in excess of the sum payable in view of the decision of Mukerji, J., just referred to. The appeal in connexion with which this Rule arises was disposed of by us on 11th April 1935 and on the same date Mr. Bagchi appearing for the petitioners made an application asking that his client should be allowed a refund of the excess sum paid. We accordingly asked the Senior Government Pleader to show cause why the prayer of the petitioners should not be granted. Dr. Mukerji, the Junior Government Pleader, has appeared to show cause. He does not dispute the position that according to this decision the plaintiffs petitioners have paid an excess sum of Rs. 585 in court-fees, but what he contends is that this is not a case in which we should exercise our powers of inherent jurisdiction under the provisions of S. 151, Civil P. C. A number of authorities have been referred to at the bar which would go to show that in cases which are not governed by any express provisions of the Act the Court can direct a refund under S. 151 if obvious injustice has been done.

We shall presently refer to those cases. The provisions which entitle a party to a refund of court-fees which are expressly mentioned in the Court-fees Act are those contained in Ss. 13, 14 and 15 of the Act. It is admitted that the present case falls outside the provisions of those sections. From the authorities of different High Courts it appears clear that High Courts should interfere under S. 151 in such a case as this where obvious injustice has been done. We may refer to the case of 40 Cal 365 (2) which again makes a reference to the very early case (1870) 14 W R 47 (3). We have next the decision of the Patna High Court in the case of 3 Pat L J 452 (4), which takes the same view. There is also a decision of the Madras High Court in the case of 55 Mad 641 (5), to the same effect. Another decision which favours the exercise of inherent jurisdiction is to be found in the case of 7 Luck 588 (6). It is true that there is a subsequent decision of the Patna High Court in the case of 6 Pat 599 (7), where it was held that the inherent power of the High Court in such cases should be exercised with caution and not in every case.

We have however examined the facts of that case and the circumstances were very different there. In those circumstances Dawson-Miller, C. J., who laid down the principle in the earlier Patna case refused to exercise the inherent power. In the present case it appears clear that the applicants paid a large sum in excess of what is leviable from them. Having regard to the decision of Mukerji, J., which decision goes in their favour we direct that the taxing officer who is the Registrar on the Appellate Side of this Court may issue the necessary certificate to the petitioners so that they may get a refund of Rs. 585 which have been paid in excess by them in court-fees.

PANCKRIDGE, J.

Kalooram Agarwalla—Plaintiff.

v.

Jonistha Lal Chakrabarty and another—Defendants.

Suit No. 1016 of 1934, Decided on 15th July 1935.

(a) Letters Patent (Cal), Cl. 12—Assignment of promissory note in favour of plaintiff—Plaintiff has cause of action even if defendants have no notice of transaction—Court can grant leave under Cl. 12 if case is in other respects fit one—Case held not fit for grant of leave.

An assignment of a promissory note in favour of a plaintiff must be regarded as part of the plaintiff's cause of action, even though it is a transaction of which the defendants had no notice and with which they had nothing to do. A Court has jurisdiction to grant leave under Cl. 12 to plaintiff if the case is in other respects a fit one. [P 350 C 1]

Where however the debtors reside outside the jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court, Original Side, and the assignment was executed on the last day before the expiry of the period of limitation, thus giving rise to a suspicion that the transaction was a collusive one in the sense that it was executed mainly for giving the Calcutta High Court jurisdiction, and there would be no hardship on the assignee, who sees fit to take the assignment, in being compelled to institute proceedings in the Courts which have jurisdiction apart from the assignment, the case is one in which leave under Cl. 12 should not be granted. The fact that in a moffusil Court there is no way of preventing unnecessary hardship in a case like this is no reason for allowing the discretionary jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court to be used to inflict a similar hardship. [P 350 C 1, 2]

(b) Letters Patent (Cal), Cl. 12—It cannot be assumed that Judge granting leave has exercised his discretion—Court can in proper case re-call leave granted.

Having regard to the procedure which is followed in the matter of granting leave under Cl. 12, it cannot be assumed that the Judge granting leave has exercised his discretion in the matter and the Court can in proper case re-call the leave. [P 351 C 2]

(c) Letters Patent (Cal), Cl. 12—Defendants contending that discretion of Court in granting leave under Cl. 12 is wrongly exercised—He must bring fact to notice of Court as early as possible and not wait till hearing of suit—Failure to do so, if it prejudices plaintiff, might prevent success of his application.

Where the defendant maintains that the discretion of the Court in granting leave under Cl. 12 has been wrongly exercised, it is not proper for him to abstain from making any application to remove the suit from the file and to wait until the hearing to make his submissions. It is the duty of the defendant to bring this aspect of the matter to the notice of the Court at the first possible moment and his failure to do so, if it in any way prejudices the position of the plaintiff, is a matter which may prevent success of his application. This only applies to cases where the Court has admittedly jurisdiction to grant the leave. [P 351 C 2]

Where, however, the omission of the defendants to make the interlocutory application, has not in any way prejudiced the position of the plaintiff, and it is a case in which the Judge, if he had applied his mind to the point, would have refused leave, the Court can allow the application although made at the hearing of the suit: 1932 Cal 146 and 1934 Cal 175, Disting. [P 351 C 2]

Judgment.—This is a suit by the assignee and endorsee of a certain promissory note. In the plaint it is stated that on 2nd June 1931 a sum of Rs. 1,729-13-3 was due and owing from the defendants to one Gazadhar Marwari and that the defendants agreed to pay interest on the sum at the rate of Rs. 1-8-0 per cent per mensem. As security for payment of the sum they executed on that date a promissory note in Gazadar Marwari's favour. On 1st June 1934, Gazadar Marwari in Calcutta assigned the debt and endorsed the promissory note in favour of the plaintiff for valuable consideration. There is said to be due and owing at the time of suit a sum of Rs. 2,673-1-6. The note in question is signed by defendant 1 purporting to sign on his own behalf and on behalf of defendant 2 who is his brother. The suit was instituted on 1st June 1934. In the plaint the defendants are described as both residing at Anara in the district of Manbhum, and it is common ground that the promissory note was executed at that place. The defendants have both filed written statements in which they have put forward various defences on the merits. They say that the execution of the promissory note was obtained by fraud, by misrepresentation and by coercion, and defendant 2 also denies the authority of defendant 1 to execute the promissory note on his behalf. Paras. 4 and 5 of defendant 1's written statement are as follows:

Para. 4: This defendant states that this Court has no jurisdiction to try this suit, as no part of the cause of action as against him arose within the said jurisdiction.

Para. 5: In the alternative, this defendant states that in any event the assignment is mala fide and leave under Cl. 12, even if it has been granted, should be rescinded.

In defendant 2's written statement the assignment in favour of the plaintiff is described as being fraudulent and collusive, and defendant 2 also states that no part of the cause of action as against him arose within the jurisdiction. At the trial both defendants have raised the point that leave under Cl. 12 of the Charter should not have been granted and ought to be revoked. Now, it is well established that the assignment in favour of the plaintiff must be regarded as part of the plaintiff's cause of action, even although it is a transaction of which the defendants had no notice and with which they had nothing to do. It is therefore clear that the Court had jurisdiction to grant leave under Cl. 12 if the case was in other respects a fit one. In my opinion, on the facts as set out in the plaint, leave ought not to have been granted. The sum at stake is not a large one nor prima facie is there likely to be raised any issue which the tribunal within whose local jurisdiction the defendants reside is not competent to try satisfactorily. The assignment was admittedly executed on the last day before the expiry of the period of limitation and one cannot help feeling a suspicion that it was collusive in the sense that it was executed mainly for the purpose of giving this Court jurisdiction which it would not otherwise possess. The defendants are described in the plaint as landholders residing in the district of Manbhum and in my opinion it is no hardship on a person who sees fit voluntarily to take such an assignment as the present to be compelled to institute any proceedings which may be necessary to realise his debt in the Courts which would have jurisdiction apart from the assignment. On the merits I think that the case is not one on which leave should have been granted. Various arguments have been advanced by the learned standing counsel on behalf of the plaintiff. He points out that under the Civil Procedure Code a suit can be instituted in any Court within whose jurisdiction any part of the cause of action arose, and that there is no question of the granting or refusal of leave. This is true, but I do not think that the fact that in a moffusil Court there is no way of preventing unnecessary hardship in a case like this is a reason for allowing the discretionary jurisdiction of this Court to be used to inflict a similar hardship.

Next it is said that the leave having in fact been granted it must be assumed that the learned Judge granting it has exercised his discretion, and that I cannot or ought not to interfere with such exercise. With regard to this the difficulty is that my mind refuses to make an assumption which I know is contrary to facts. I believe that the practice of all Judges dealing with interlocutory matters on the original side is the same. The Master examines the plaint, and if there is an allegation in it showing that part of the cause of action arises within the jurisdiction, the Master endorses the plaint "Leave granted under Cl. 12," and submits it to a Judge for his signature. The Judge then signs the plaint as a matter of course and leaves it to the defendant to take such steps as he may be advised. This system may not be wholly satisfactory, but it is not easy to think of a better one because at that stage whatever is done must in the nature of things be done ex parte. I therefore feel no difficulty in reviewing (I use the term in its popular sense) the decision, if it can be called a decision, of Remfry, J., in signing the endorsement of the Master and granting leave.

What seems to me to be a matter of greater importance is the fact that the defendants have taken no steps to have the leave set aside until the hearing of the suit. This is a circumstance which might, I apprehend, in other cases operate in a manner unfair to the plaintiff, but the circumstances of the present case are such that this question does not arise. As I pointed out, the suit was filed on 1st June 1934, that is to say, on the very day of the assignment and one day before the expiry of the period of limitation. Presumably the writ would not in the ordinary course be served for at least a week. So no possible question of limitation can arise, because, even if the defendants had applied to revoke the leave at the earliest possible moment their application would have been made more than three years from the date of the note. I of course express no view as to the effect that the lapse of time between the filing of the suit and the hearing may have.

The defendants justify their delay by citing two decisions. The first is 59 Cal 150 (1) where Rankin, C. J., made certain observations in which he deprecated preliminary applications to take the suit off the file on the ground that leave under Cl. 12 had been improperly granted. That case, however, can readily be distinguished because there it was suggested not that the Court had wrongly exercised its discretion in granting leave, but that the Court had no discretion in the case because no part of the cause of action had in fact arisen within the jurisdiction. This contention gave rise to questions of law and fact of some complexity which in the opinion of the Court could not properly have been decided in an interlocutory application. A case which bears a closer resemblance to the one with which I am dealing is 37 C W N 1139 (2). There an application was made to revoke the leave granted on the ground that the assignment of the debt to the plaintiff was not bona fide but made with the intention of creating jurisdiction. The application was dismissed, and in the course of his judgment Ameer Ali, J., observed that the question of bona fides was a matter which must be gone into in the suit, and that on an interlocutory application he was not in a position to investigate the allegations.

I do not think that either of these cases can be taken as an authority for the proposition that the proper course for the defendant to take in a case where he maintains that the discretion of the Court has been wrongly exercised is to abstain from making any application to remove the suit from the file and wait until the hearing to make his submissions. On the contrary, I think in many cases the defendant should bring this aspect of the matter to the notice of the Court at the first possible moment, and that his failure to do so, if it in any way prejudices the position of the plaintiff, is a matter which may prevent success of his application. I am speaking of those cases where the Court has admittedly the discretion to grant leave, and I say nothing about the other class of cases where the position is that no part of the cause of action in fact arises within the jurisdiction of the Court and the Court has therefore no power to grant leave. For reasons which I have already given, I do not think that the omission of the defendants in this case to make an interlocutory application has in any way prejudiced the position of the plaintiff, and on the facts I think the case is one in which, if the Judge had applied his mind to the point, he would have refused the leave. I therefore recall the leave and reject the plaint. I make no order as to costs of suit.

Landlord and Tenant—Ejectment—Landlord can eject tenant after notice to quit except where tenant holds in permanent right—Onus of proving permanency is on tenant.

A landlord is entitled to eject a tenant after notice to quit unless the tenant can prove that he has a right to remain on the land permanently and the onus is on the tenant to prove the permanency of his tenancy. [P 352 C 2]

Diptendra Mohan Ghose—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiff, and it arises out of a suit instituted by him to eject the defendant by serving a notice to quit. In the plaint there are two other prayers, viz. for recovery of arrears of rent before the termination of the tenancy, and for mesne profits after the termination of the tenancy by the notice to quit. The plaintiff says that he served the notice on 16th September 1930 requiring the defendant to vacate the land with the expiry of the month of Chaitra 1337.

The plea of the defendant was that no notice had been served and that he could not be ejected as he was holding the land in permanent right. These defences were overruled by the Court of first instance. The defendant preferred an appeal to the lower appellate Court. Three points were raised in that appeal, viz. (1) whether the notice to quit had been served on the defendant; (2) whether the defendant if he could be ejected was entitled to any compensation for the improvements which he made on the land; and (3) whether he could at all be ejected on the ground that he was a permanent tenant. The learned Additional District Judge who heard the appeal did not record his finding on the first two points aforesaid; but he dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff was precluded from saying that the defendant's tenancy was of a precarious nature by reason of a decision in a previous rent suit between the parties. The defendant came upon the land for the first time on the basis of a registered lease executed in the year 1909. By this lease he was given the right to remain on the land for three years at a rent of Rs. 15 a year, i. e. Re. 1-4-0 a month. This lease was granted by the plaintiff's predecessor in title, one Jitendra Nath Banerjee. Thereafter the landlord's interest in the land, vested in the plaintiff by reason of a conveyance executed by Jitendra and a compromise by Jitendra's mother. After that the plaintiff instituted a suit for rent against the defendant, and he claimed rent at the rate of Rs. 1-4-0 per month, i. e. Rupees 15 a year. The defendant stated that the rent was altered to Rs. 6 a year by reason of an agreement arrived at between him and the mother of Jitendra, Kiron Sashi, after the term of the lease of 1909 had expired. The Court of first instance framed two issues: (1) whether there was a relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendant; and (2) what was the rate of rent. The learned Munsif found that there was a relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendant; and that the rate of rent was Rs. 12 a year. The said findings were affirmed by the learned Subordinate Judge in an appeal preferred by the defendant against the Munsif's decree. In this rent suit no question of status was raised or decided. The questions that were raised and decided were the relationship of landlord and tenant and the question as to what was rate of rent.

The learned Additional District Judge says that the decision, in this rent suit operates as res judicata on the question of status. I do not follow his judgment on that point. The question whether the tenancy was permanent or precarious was not the subject-matter of an issue in the rent suit, and there was no decision on the said point. I am therefore clearly of opinion that the point of res judicata has been decided quite wrongly by the learned Judge. He records a finding that the evidence led by the defendant to prove the grant of a permanent lease to him has not been substantiated. It is a well-established principle of law that a landlord is entitled to eject a tenant unless the tenant can prove that he has a right to remain on the land permanently. The onus is clearly on the defendant to prove the permanency of his tenancy. In this case he led evidence to prove that; but according to the finding of the learned Additional District Judge, he failed. I accordingly hold that the defendant is not a permanent tenant on the land and he is liable to ejectment, provided the plaintiff proved service of notice to quit, on him. On that point there has not been any finding by the learned Additional District Judge, nor has the learned Additional District Judge considered the claim of the defendant to compensation. I accordingly set aside the decree passed by the learned Additional District Judge, hold that the question of permanency is not res judicata in the yearly suit, maintain his finding that the defendant has failed to prove that he is a permanent tenant, and remand the case to the lower appellate Court in order that two and two issues only may be decided by that Court namely, (1) whether the notice to quit has been served upon the defendant; and (2) whether the defendant can claim any compensation for the alleged improvement, in case the plaintiff gets a decree in ejectment. The question as to whether the plaintiff will be entitled to mesne profits as claimed in the suit, will be dependent on the first issue which I framed, viz. whether the notice to quit had been served on the defendant or not. So far as the plaintiff's claim for arrears of rent is concerned, that has not been considered also by the lower appellate Court. If the defendant challenges that part of the decree of the learned Munsif, it will be open to the lower appellate Court to go into that question. Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Appeal No. 2395 of 1933, Decided on 18th March 1936, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Hooghly, D/- 26th June 1933.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 30, R. 1—One partner can institute suit in name of firm, although other partners do not join—Name of firm only should be mentioned as plaintiff in cause title without addition of name of partner—Question of indemnity is matter between partners.

It is open to a partner of a firm consisting of several partners to institute a suit in the name of the firm although the other partners refuse to join in the suit. The partners refusing to join are not necessary parties in the sense that they should be named in the cause title and served with summons of the suit. In describing the cause title of such suit the name of the plaintiff should be the name of the firm only without addition of the name of the partner suing although addition of such name does not matter in the least. The question as to whether the partner bringing the suit should have given an indemnity to the other partner, for bringing a suit in their name, is a matter between them: Seal and Edgelow v. Kingston, (1908) 2 K B 579, Rel. on. [P 355 C 1]

Manmatha Nath Roy (Sr.) and Suryya Kumar Aich—for Appellant.

Hira Lal Chakravarti and Nanda Gopal Banerjee—for Respondents.

R. C. Mitter, J.—In this case a suit was brought for the recovery of the price of coal supplied to the defendants who were partners of a firm carrying on business under the name and style of Satis Chandra Nandy and Company. The cause title of the plaint was as follows:

Bhadreswar Coal Supply Company through Manik Lal Roy, plaintiff v. Satis Chandra Nandy and Company represented by Jnanendra Nath Nandy and others, defendants.

At the date of the suit three persons namely Manik Lal Roy, Sripati Charan Mukherjee and Bhujendra Nath Bhadra were partners of a firm carrying on business under the name of Bhadreswar Coal Supply Company. They were also partners of the same firm carrying on business under the same firm name when the defendant Company bought the coal. The finding of the learned District Judge is that the said partnership of Manik Lal Roy, Sripati Charan Mukherjee and Bhujendra Nath Bhadra commenced under a deed of partnership and the partnership was still continuing at the date of the suit. To the suit as originally framed Sripati Charan Mukherjee and Bhujendra Nath Bhadra were added as pro forma defendants, but the notice of the suit was not served on them and ultimately they were dismissed from the suit on the ground of non-service of the summons. The suit thereafter continued as a suit by the 'Bhadreswar Coal Supply Company' represented by Manik Lal Roy against Satis Nandy and Company. To the suit two substantial defences were taken. The first was that the suit was not maintainable and, secondly, that the claim of the Bhadreswar Coal Supply Company had been satisfied by payments. The learned Subordinate Judge overruled both these pleas and granted a decree in favour of the plaintiff firm for Rs. 1,577.8.6 less Rs. 275 admitted to have been paid, with interest at 12 per cent. The defendant firm filed an appeal before the learned District Judge. The learned District Judge did not enter into the plea of payment set up by the defendants but dismissed the suit on a preliminary point.

He held that a suit under the provisions of O. 30, Civil P. C., can be instituted in the name of the firm only if the suit is instituted by two or more partners of the firm. He came to the conclusion that inasmuch as the suit has been instituted by one partner, viz. Manik Lal Roy, in the name of the firm, the suit was not maintainable. The learned Advocate for the plaintiff firm urges before us that the view taken by the learned District Judge is erroneous. He says that a firm or a partnership must consist of two or more persons and O. 30, R. 1, enables a suit to be carried on in the name of the firm, and it does not matter whether the suit is filed at the instance of one or more of the partners. Mr. Chakravarti, who appears on behalf of the respondents, contends that O. 30, R. 1, can only apply when all the partners of a firm desire to institute a suit. He says that the said rule only provides for a convenient form of suing, and for the purpose of supporting his contentions he takes us through the history of the law. He says before 1908 all the partners of a firm had to be named in the plaint in order that the suit may be a good one. They had all to appear by name as plaintiffs, and such of them as were unwilling to join as plaintiffs had to be put down in the plaint as pro forma defendants. He accordingly argues that where all the partners of a firm do not agree to institute a suit, a suit cannot be instituted in the name of a firm; for a suit instituted in the name of a firm must be taken to be a suit instituted by all the partners of a firm, and in a case where some of them refuse to institute a suit, the dues of the firm can only be realised by following the same procedure which had to be followed before the introduction of O. 30 in the Code of 1908, that is to say in such a case the partner intending to sue must sue in his own individual name making the others who are unwilling to join him as defendants in the suit.

In our judgment the contention of Mr. Chakravarti is not sound. No doubt O. 30 has laid down a convenient procedure in this respect. A firm is not a legal entity but the legislature has provided for the partners of a firm to sue in respect of moneys due to a firm in the firm name. The provisions of O. 30, R. 1 have been taken from the provisions of O. 48-A of the Rules of the Supreme Court. The question which we have to decide was considered by the Court of appeal in England in (1908) 2 K B 579 (1). In that case two persons, Seal and Edgelow, constituted a firm of attorneys carrying on business under the name and style of Seal and Edgelow. Kingston was a client of theirs and the said firm had a claim against him. Edgelow did not desire that an action should be brought or proceeded with against Kingston, but Seal contended that the firm had a good case and thought that they ought to sue. Edgelow refused to join in the suit. On that Seal instituted the suit in the name of the firm, viz. Seal and Edgelow. The defendant made an application, which was granted by the Court by which he required the plaintiffs to make a further affidavit of documents in their possession within one month. Seal made the affidavit of documents and he served a copy of the order on Edgelow. Edgelow neglected to swear to an affidavit of documents whereupon Seal took out summons to commit Edgelow for contempt of Court in not obeying the order of the Court requiring a further affidavit of documents by the plaintiffs. Ridley, J. refused to make an order on this summons on the ground of want of jurisdiction whereupon Seal preferred an appeal to the Court of appeal. One of the questions raised in the Court of appeal was whether a suit could be instituted in the firm's name under the provisions of O. 48-A of the Rules of the Supreme Court by one of the two partners, the other partner refusing to sue. Sir Gorell Barnes decided that a suit could be so instituted. At p. 582 of the report he makes the following observations:

In my opinion the learned Judge had jurisdiction to make the order. It is clear upon the authority of 2 C & M 318 (2) that Seal had the right as one of the partners in the firm to use the name of the other partner for the purpose of bringing an action to recover a debt due to the firm, on giving his partner an indemnity against costs. As was said by Bayley B in the case referred to 'one of the several partners has a clear right to use the names of the other partners. If they object to their names being used, they may apply for an indemnity against costs to which they might be subjected by the use of their names.' In the present case an indemnity was given, and Seal was taking the proper steps to carry on the action, but Edgelow refused to assist him in the matter by making the further affidavit of documents which the plaintiff had been ordered to make.

2. Whitehead v. Hughes, (1840) 2 C & M 318=4 Tyr 92.

In our judgment the suit which has been instituted in the present case by Manik Lal Roy in the name of the firm Bhadreswar Coal Supply Company is a good suit. To such a suit the other partners of Manik Lal Roy who have refused to join are not necessary parties in the sense that they ought to have been named in the cause title and served with summons of the suit. It would have been better if the cause title of the suit described the plaintiff as Bhadreswar Coal Supply Company simply without the addition of the words "through Manik Lal Roy," but in our judgment the addition of those words does not matter in the least. The question as to whether Manik Lal Roy ought to have given an indemnity to Sripati Charan Mukherjee and Bhujendra Nath Bhadra as partners for instituting the suit in their names is a matter as between Sripati Charan Mukherjee and Bhujendra Nath Bhadra on the one side and Manik Lal Roy on the other. If these two persons wanted an indemnity against costs from Manik Lal Roy it would have been for the Court to stay the suit till the indemnity is furnished, but they had not come forward and asked for such indemnity. The suit could proceed accordingly in the name of the firm with its carriage in the hands of Manik Lal Roy. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the Court of appeal below and remand the case to that Court so that the plea of the payment raised by the defendants may be considered. Costs to abide the result.

Calcutta Police Act (4 of 1866), Ss. 3 and 45—No evidence establishing place as gaming house—Accused having accepted marked five rupee note to put on certain horses—This by itself held insufficient for conviction under S. 45.

Accused was found to have accepted a marked five rupee note with instructions to put on certain horses. He was found with two others. There were no incriminating articles except a racing book :

Held : that the evidence was insufficient to show that the place was a common gaming house within the meaning of S. 3 and that the mere acceptance of the marked five rupee note was not sufficient to find the accused guilty under S. 45. [P 355 C 2 ; P 356 C 1]

*Monindra Nath Mukherjee and Mihir Mohan Mukerjee—*for Petitioners.

Order.—This Rule was issued on the Chief Presidency Magistrate to show cause why an order convicting the petitioners under S. 45, Act 4 of 1866 (Calcutta Police Act), and sentencing them to pay a fine of Rs. 100 each, should not be set aside on the ground that there was no evidence to show that gaming was taking place at the time the accused were prosecuted, and also on the ground that there was no evidence to show that the premises where the gaming is alleged to have been taking place was a common gaming house within the meaning of S. 3 of the Act. The evidence is that a Sub-Inspector of Police sent one Banku Behary Pal to 28, Chutarpara Lane, with a slip of paper containing the names of 16 horses and with an amount of betting to be placed on horses and also a marked Rs. 5 note asking him to go inside the house and to bet there.

Banku says that he handed over the money to accused 2 Brojo Mohan Saha and that when he went there a barber was giving five annas to the accused Brojo Mohan and that the other accused was also there, and that when Brojo Mohan went to bring change he called in the Sub-Inspector, prosecution witness 2, R. C. Chowdhury. The Sub-Inspector says that having sent in this man Banku with a marked note and a slip of paper they followed and found the accused Hari Charan Banerjee and Gonesh seated there and the accused Brojo Mohan standing in front of them. The latter dropped the five rupee note, the betting slip and also Re. 1 and one pice. No other incriminating articles were found in the premises except a racing-book Ex. 3. This is all the evidence on which the accused have been found guilty under S. 45 of Act 5 of 1866 (Calcutta Police Act). This evidence appears to me to be totally insufficient to show that the accused were found gaming in a common gaming house or present during any gaming or playing therein or were found present in the gaming house for the purpose of gaming. A common gaming house as defined in S. 3 is a house in which any instruments of gaming are kept or used for the profit or gain of the person owning, occupying or using such house. There is no evidence that any instrument of gaming was kept or used in this house for the purpose of gaming. At the most what was found was that one of the accused accepted a five rupee note with instructions to put the money on certain horses. For all that we know it may have been intended to put this money on certain horses at the race course and in that case no offence has been committed. In any case, there was quite insufficient evidence to show that the place was a common gaming house.

The conviction and sentence are, therefore, set aside and the fine, if paid, will be refunded. The money found with the accused will be returned.

Where the witness who gave evidence against the appellants was withdrawn from the witness box and again made an accused, so that the appellants were thereby prevented from cross-examining him :

Held : that the appellants here were deprived of a fundamental right given them by law and that the conviction could not on that ground alone be upheld. [P 358 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 494 (a)—Case withdrawn against accused—He cannot be tried again in same proceedings.

Where the case against an accused is withdrawn under S. 494 (a), he is discharged from those proceedings and cannot be put back into them. He may be tried again in other proceedings on the same charge, but not in those proceedings. [P 358 C 2]

* * (c) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 494 (a) and 337 — Withdrawal of case by Public Prosecutor against accused with object of calling him as witness—Court can give consent — But if S. 337 is available, it is better for Court to use this section rather than S. 494 (a).

There is nothing in S. 494 which prevents a Public Prosecutor if he thinks it is in the interests of the administration of justice, from withdrawing the case as against one of the accused for the purpose of calling him as a witness against the others. It may well be in the interests of justice that the Public Prosecutor should so withdraw so that such evidence should be given to help to secure a conviction against the others. In the same way for the same reasons, it may well be that the Court ought to give its consent to such withdrawal. But in cases where S. 337 is available it is better that the accused should be dealt with under that section. Even where S. 337 can be applied, it is not contrary to law to discharge the approver under S. 494 (a). The approver dealt with under S. 337 gives his testimony with a contingent charge hanging over his head. The evidence of an accomplice whether dealt with under S. 337 or discharged under S. 494 (a) or acquitted under S. 494 (b) is the evidence of an approver and as such open to suspicion : 1929 Cal 319, Appr.

Per Mukerji, J.—The Court can give its consent on the ground of public policy but in so doing it has to enquire into the reasons which prompt the withdrawal. If the Court finds that S. 337 with its statutory safeguards is open to be availed of, it will be a sound exercise of its discretion to withhold consent : 1929 Cal 319, Appr. [P 367 C 1,2]

Per Panckridge, J.—The discretion under S. 494 is a judicial discretion. Where it is open to the prosecution to obtain the approver's evidence by applying for the tender of a conditional pardon under S. 337 (1), the Magistrate must keep the provisions of that section before him when he exercises his discretion. As a general rule the discretion will be wrongly exercised in such cases if the consent is given before the charge is framed : 1929 Cal 319, Appr. [P 369 C 2]

* (d) Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act (12 of 1932), Ss. 24 and 25—Special Magistrate has power to tender pardon under S. 337, Criminal P. C.—Per Full Bench—Mukerji, J., holding contra.

(Per Full Bench)—A Special Magistrate appointed under S. 24 of Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, 12 of 1932, has power to tender a pardon under S. 337, Criminal P. C., even though he has no power to commit the accused to the Court of Session or High Court. The Magistrate may, acting under S. 337 (1) tender a conditional pardon, and under S. 337 (2) examine the pardoned man as a witness in his Court, but must act under the Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, 1932, try the accused himself instead of committing him for trial to the Court of Session or the High Court, as S. 337 (2-A) of the Code provides: 1933 Cal 537 and 1935 Cal 281, Approved.

(Mukerji, J., contra) — The special Magistrate has no power to tender pardon under S. 337, Criminal P. C., for the following reasons (1). The words used in the S. 25 are that "such person shall be tried." If a Magistrate proceeds to tender pardon to an accused person he stops his trial and does something which he has no jurisdiction to do. He thereby ceases to proceed with the trial of that particular accused person, the object of which is to determine his guilt or innocence and does something which is not covered by the direction under which he has jurisdiction to act. No doubt, in a case in which a prosecutor withdraws from the prosecution of an accused, the trial of that accused is also stopped; but such act is the act of the prosecutor. Hence tendering pardon is not trial of such person. (2) Section 337, Criminal P. C., cannot be taken in compartments, and it cannot be held that all the compartments, with the exception of that which ensures the right to have the case committed to the Court of Session, may be availed of by the Special Magistrate: 1933 Cal 537, Disting. [P 363 C 2; P 364 C 1; P 365 C 1,2]

(Per Panckridge, J.)—The various powers and directions given to Magistrates by S. 337 are so distinct and independent that each is a provision within the meaning of the Local Act. The argument that the Special Magistrate is only clothed with power to "try" the accused under S. 25 of the Local Act and not with the power to "pardon," construes "try" and "trial" in an artificial and unnecessarily narrow fashion. S. 337, Criminal P. C., is part of Ch. 24 which contains "General Provisions as to Inquiries and Trials," and the power to tender a pardon can be exercised "at any stage of the investigation or inquiry into, or the trial of the offence." The Special Magistrate authorized under S. 25 (1) has all the powers which the Code confers on Magistrates trying such cases, save such powers as are clearly inconsistent with the Local Act.

(e) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 337—S. 337 applies only to trials concerning graver offences.

Section 337 is available for obtaining the evidence of approvers not in all trials but only as regards trials concerning some graver offences.

(f) Criminal P. C. (1898)—Interpretation—No presumption that principles of English Criminal Law were intended to be adhered to.

In construing the provisions of the Code in which the procedure to be followed has been detailed, it need not be assumed that the principles of English criminal law either substantive or procedural, were intended to be adhered to: Riel v. Queen, (1885) 10 A C 675, Rel. on.

(g) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 494—Withdrawal under S. 494 is unconditioned and unconditional—What the public prosecutor will or will not do subsequently is no concern of Court.

(Per Mukerji, J.)—A withdrawal under S. 494 either under Cl. (a) or under Cl. (b) is a simple withdrawal—unconditioned and unconditional. The Court is concerned only with the question whether the ground for the proposed course is such as would justify it in giving its consent: If the Court finds that the object of withdrawing from the prosecution is to avail of the evidence of the particular accused and the circumstances of the case are such that it would further the ends of justice to have his evidence and that S. 337 is inapplicable, the Court will not be wrong in giving its consent. What the public prosecutor will or will not do thereafter, in a case in which the withdrawal has been under Cl. (a) with the effect of a discharge, is a matter which is no concern of the Court.

N. K. Basu, Hira Lal Ganguli, J. C. Gupta, Tapodhir Dastidar for Purnendu Choudhuri and Manmatha Nath Das—for Appellants.

Avocate General and Anil Chanra Roy Choudhuri—for the Crown.

Derbyshire, C. J.—The history of the proceedings in this matter is briefly this: that three appellants together with two others, Nalini and Gouranga were put on their trial before a Special Magistrate acting under the powers conferred on him by S. 25, Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, 1932. The procedure to be followed in such cases is that prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure for the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates.

The accused were eventually charged with conspiring to commit robbery and dacoity under Ss. 120-B/392, and 395, Penal Code. At the outset of the proceedings the Public Prosecutor applied to the Special Magistrate for the discharge of Nalini under S. 494, Criminal P. C., so that Nalini might give evidence in the case. As no charge had then been framed against the accused, Nalini was discharged under sub-s. (a), S. 494. Thereupon Nalini went into the box and gave evidence. The accused, who included the three appellants, as they were entitled, reserved their cross-examination until a charge had been framed. Nalini's evidence, although against the accused, amounted to very little.

Then the Public Prosecutor, evidently of the opinion that Nalini had not told all he knew and was hostile to the prosecution, applied to the District Magistrate to have Nalini re-committed to take his trial along with the accused.

Nalini was thereupon re-committed by the District Magistrate to take his trial with the other accused against whom he had given evidence. Next the Special Magistrate tendered a conditional pardon to the accused Gouranga under S. 337, Criminal P. C., and Gouranga was taken out of the dock, put into the witness box, and he gave evidence in the trial.

Nalini thereupon moved a Bench of this Court to have the proceedings against him stayed, and a stay was ordered as against Nalini. The trial against the remaining accused, the three present appellants went on, the evidence against the appellants given by Nalini remained on the record for what it was worth, but the appellants never had the opportunity of cross-examining Nalini.

The Special Magistrate found the three appellants guilty and sentenced them each to five years' rigorous imprisonment. From those convictions and sentences the appellant appealed. The Bench of this Court which heard the appeals referred to a Full Bench of this Court a certain question of law for our consideration. This Full Bench acting upon R. 5, Ch. 7 of the Rules of this Court on the appellate side was unable to accept the partial reference, and thereupon the Bench concerned referred the whole case to us under the Rule above cited.

The questions of law referred by the Bench in question were: (1) Whether the Court may consent to the Public Prosecutor withdrawing from the prosecution of any person under the provisions of S. 494 (a), Criminal P. C., for the purpose of obtaining that person's evidence as a witness. (2) Whether the case of 56 Cal 1023 (1) was upon this point rightly decided. (3) Whether a Special Magistrate appointed under S. 24, Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, XII of 1932, has power to tender a pardon under the provisions of S. 337, Criminal P. C., or otherwise (4) Whether the cases of 60 Cal 652 (2), and 39 C W N 698 (3) and Appeals Nos. 844 and 845 of 1933 were upon this point rightly decided? The first feature which stands out in this case is that Nalini gave evidence against the appellants and then was withdrawn from the witness box and again made an accused, so that the appellants were thereby prevented from cross-examining him. S. 256, Criminal P. C., and S. 136, Evidence Act, give the accused a right to cross-examine the witnesses who have given evidence against them. It is obvious that the appellants here were deprived of a fundamental right given them by law. The Advocate-General has admitted that the convictions cannot on that ground alone be upheld.

The second feature is that Nalini was re-committed to take his trial along with the three appellants in the same proceedings after having given evidence against them. S. 494 (a), Criminal P. C., enacts that after the Public Prosecutor, with the consent of the Court, has withdrawn from the prosecution of an accused, the accused "shall be discharged in respect of such offence or offences." It is obvious that if the accused is again charged in the same proceedings with the same offence, the provision that "he shall be discharged in respect of such offence or offences" has no real effect.

In my view the words in question mean shall be discharged from those proceedings and not put back into them. He may be tried again in other proceedings on the same charge, but not in those proceedings. The Advocate-General has stated that he cannot support the convictions on the evidence given, apart from the irregularities mentioned. These convictions clearly cannot stand. That would be sufficient to dispose of this appeal without going into the questions of law which have been formulated for our answer. However in view of the doubt that has been cast by the referring Judges on the cases of 56 Cal 1023 (1), 60 Cal 652 (2) and 39 C W N 698 (3), and the likelihood of that doubt giving rise to difficulty in other cases, we have thought fit to go into the questions raised. As regards questions (1) and (2), I see nothing in S. 494 which prevents a Public Prosecutor if he thinks it is in the interests of the administration of justice, from withdrawing the case as against one of the accused for the purpose of calling him as a witness against the others. It may well be in the interests of justice that the Public Prosecutor should so withdraw so that such evidence should be given to help to secure a conviction against the others. In the same way for the same reasons it may well be that the Court ought to give its consent to such withdrawal.

The English case of (1866) 1 Q B 289 (4), which was discussed by the referring Bench, deals with this point. In that case two women—Harris and Winsor—were in the first instance charged together with murder. The jury disagreed and were discharged. When the retrial came on the accused Winsor was tried alone and Harris was called to give evidence against her without having been first acquitted, or convicted and sentenced, or without a nolle prosequi having been entered against her. Winsor was convicted, and on a writ of error the matter came before a Court of Judges of the Queen's Bench, where the Judges considered the matter. Cockburn, C. J., at p. 312, said:

I equally feel the force of the objection that the fellow prisoner was allowed to give evidence without having been first acquitted, or convicted and sentenced. I think it much to be lamented. In all cases where two persons are joined in the same indictment, and it is desirable to try them separately, in order that the evidence of the one may be received against the other, I think it necessary, for the purpose of insuring the greatest possible amount of truthfulness in the person coming to give evidence, to take a verdict of not guilty as to him, or if the plea of not guilty be withdrawn by him, and a plea of guilty taken, to pass sentence so that the witness may give his evidence with a mind free of all corrupt influence, which the fear of impending punishment and the desire to obtain immunity to himself at the expense of the prisoner might otherwise produce. This objection is not set forth on the record; in a civil case a question as to the reception of evidence may be raised upon a bill of exceptions, but in a criminal case it cannot be raised upon the record so as to constitute a ground of error; we cannot therefore take it into consideration. Whether this circumstance should have any influence elsewhere is a matter upon which it is not for us to pronounce an opinion. Under all the circumstances I am of the opinion that in this case the facts warranted the exercise of judicial discretion. Judgment must be for the Crown.

Blackburn, J., at p. 320, said:

I may however observe, although the matter does not come before us, I do not think Harris was an inadmissible witness, but being inadmissible she was completely within the category of accomplices. It would be right to tell the jury to look at her evidence with great caution. I do not doubt that the judge did carefully caution the jury, nor do I doubt there was ample confirmatory evidence. I agree that it would be judicious as a general rule, where the accomplice is indicted that the indictment as to her should be disposed of before she is called as witness, so that the temptation to strain the truth should be as slight as possible. I do not think that this is an obstruction as to the legality of the evidence but is a matter which affects the degree of credit which ought to be given to her testimony.

Meller, J. at p. 324, said:

On an application made on the part of the Crown, the prisoner was tried by herself, and Harris, although she had not pleaded guilty, and although no verdict of acquittal was taken was called as a witness. She was, therefore liable herself to be tried. I think the temptation held out by this course, especially by an ignorant witness, to give false evidence, very great, a witness ought always to give evidence without fear of any consequences pending over him. I am however of opinion that the Judge on the second trial had no alternative but to receive the evidence, which I think was clearly admissible, although subject to strong observation as to its weight.

Lush, J. at p. 327, said:

The other objection relates to the admissibility of the evidence of Harris on the second trial. As to that, it is enough to say that in my judgment her testimony was admissible.

In Archbold's Criminal Pleading and Practice, Edn. 29 (1934), p. 463, under the heading "Competency of Witnesses" it is stated:

Where it is proposed to call an accomplice for the Crown, it is the practice, (a) not to include him in the indictment; or (b) to take his plea of guilty on arraignment; 1 Q B 289 (4), 1 Q B 390 (5), or during the trial he withdraws his plea of not guilty; 2 Cr App R 329 (6); or before calling him either (C) to offer no evidence and permit his acquittal, 9 C & P 83 (7); or (D) to enter a nolle prosequi, 4 St Tr N S 935 (8).

In the same edition of Archbold, at p. 112, it is stated:

A nolle prosequi puts an end to the prosecution, see 12 N S W Rep (Law) 184 (9) and English authorities there cited, but does not operate as a bar or discharge or an acquittal on the merits, 6 Mod 261 (10) and 10 Mod 152 (11), and the party remains liable to be re-indicted. It has been said that fresh process may be awarded on the same indictment, 6 Mod 261 (10), Com. Dig. Indict (K), but this dictum appears not to be law.

During the argument before us it was contended that the provisions of S. 343,

Criminal P. C., prevented the P. P. from applying for and the Court from consenting to, a withdrawal against one of the accused for the purposes of his giving evidence against his fellow accused. In 25 Bom 422 (12) the same argument was raised, and Candy, J., at p. 425, said:

Reference was also made by the learned counsel to S. 343; but that evidently refers to the examination of the accused under S. 342.

In that case Whitworth, J., differed from Candy, J., but Ranade, J., to whom the case was referred for final decision, agreed on the whole with Candy, J. That question does not arise because there is no evidence here that "influence by means of any promise or threat or otherwise" was used to the accused person "to induce him to disclose or withhold any matter within his knowledge." In 33 Cal 1353 (13), Mitra, and Holmwood, JJ., delivered a joint judgment in which at p. 1357 they said that:

Section 494 of the Code authorizes the Public Prosecutor as representing a Local Government in this country to withdraw a prosecution against anyone of a number of accused, and thus obtain a verdict of discharge or acquittal so far as such person is concerned. On such a discharge or acquittal he becomes a competent witness against other persons accused of the same offence. The disability to be examined as a witness on oath against the persons who are brought before the Court on the same indictment may thus cease on the withdrawal of the indictment against him.

In 45 All 226 (14) at p. 230 Mears, C. J., said:

There is no provision of Indian statute law nor is there any provision of natural justice, which makes an accomplice as such, an incompetent witness at the trial of another person in respect of the offence in the commission of which he was an accomplice. The prosecution is not evading the provisions of S. 337, Criminal P. C., when it puts into the witness box an accomplice in the commission of the offence to which that section does not apply.

The matter was also considered in 56 Cal 1023 (1). In that case the authorities, English as well as Indian, were considered by Dwarka Nath Mitter, J., who said at p. 1030:

My conclusions, therefore, are (1) that S. 337 of the Code does not suggest the idea that the only method of obtaining the evidence of a co-accused against another is by tendering him a pardon with all the safeguards mentioned in the said section; (2) that the language of S. 494 is very wide and gives a discretion to the Magistrate as to whether he would consent to withdrawal of a prosecution by the Public Prosecutor, such discretion to be exercised not arbitrarily, but must be based on correct legal principles, (3) that the Chief Presidency Magistrate has not, in the present case exercised the discretion wrongly in relying on the discretion of the Public Prosecutor in withdrawing the prosecution against Bijay in order that his evidence may be available after his discharge against the petitioner Raman who has been jointly tried with him on charges of conspiracy and cheating.

On principle and authority therefore, I am of the opinion that the answers to questions (1) and (2) must be "Yes". I wish however to add this: S. 337, Criminal P. C., which only applies to the offences of a more serious character therein specified, provides safeguards in the interests both of the Crown and the accused. I think in cases where S. 337 is available it is better that the accused should be dealt with under that section. I am however far from saying that even where S. 337 can be applied it is contrary to law to discharge the approver under S. 494 (a). It must be remembered that the approver dealt with under S. 337 gives his testimony with a contingent charge hanging over his head; also that the evidence of an accomplice whether dealt with under S. 337 or discharged under S. 494 (a), or acquitted under S. 494 (b), is the evidence of an approver and as such open to suspicion. I will now deal with questions Nos. 3 and 4. Under the Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, 1932, it is provided in S. 26 (1).

In the trial of any case under this Act, a Special Magistrate shall follow the procedure prescribed by the Code for the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates: Provided that the Special Magistrate shall not be bound to adjourn any trial for any purpose unless such adjournment is, in his opinion, necessary in the interests of justice. (2) In matters not coming within the scope of sub-s. (1), the provisions of the Code, so far as they are not inconsistent with this Chapter, shall apply to the proceedings of a special Magistrate; and for the purposes of the said provisions the special Magistrate shall be deemed to be a Magistrate of the first class.

The provisions of the Code and of any other law for the time being in force, in so far as they may be applicable and in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Chapter, shall apply to all matters connected with, arising from or consequent upon a trial by special Magistrates.

Section 337, Criminal P. C., gives power, in the case of certain offences of which the present is admittedly one, to certain tribunals including Magistrates of the first class of which the Special Magistrate is one, as stated above, at any stage of the investigation or inquiry into, or the trial of the offence, with a view to obtaining the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to the offence, to tender a pardon to such person on condition of his making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence and to every other person concerned, whether as principal or abettor, in the commission thereof: By S. 1-A the Magistrate shall record his reasons for tendering the pardon. By sub-s. (2) the person accepting the tender of pardon shall be examined "in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognisance of the offence and in the subsequent trial, if any." By sub-s. (2-A), in every case where a person has accepted a tender of pardon and has been examined under sub-s. (2), the Magistrate before whom the proceedings are pending shall, if he is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is guilty of an offence, commit him for trial to the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be; (3) such person, unless he is already on bail, shall be detained in custody until the termination of the trial. S. 339 provides for the subsequent prosecution of the person who has been conditionally pardoned if the Public Prosecutor certifies that, in his opinion, such person has not complied with the condition on which the tender was made. It also provides that such person shall not be tried jointly with any of the other accused, and that he shall be entitled to plead at his trial that he has complied with the conditions upon which the tender was made, in which case the prosecution must prove that such conditions have not been complied with; sub-s. (2) provides:

The statement made by a person who has accepted a tender of pardon may be given in evidence against him at such trial.

Sub-section (3) provides:

No prosecution for the offence of giving false evidence in respect of such statement shall be entertained without the sanction of the High Court.

Sections 339-A and 340, 341 and 342 contain further provisions for the protection of the pardoned person on or in respect of his trial for giving false evidence. In the present case after Nalini was put back into the dock, Gouranga was tendered a pardon by the Special Magistrate under the provisions of S. 337 and his evidence was received against the three appellants. It is said that the Special Magistrate had no power to tender a conditional pardon under S. 337 to Gouranga because the duty of the Special Magistrate was to try Gouranga and not to pardon him. I cannot accept that view. The Special Magistrate was charged with the duty of trying the appellants together with Nalini and Gouranga. It not infrequently happens in a trial that the only way in which justice can be done is through one of the accused giving evidence on behalf of the Crown, and if this evidence is given according to law, there is nothing wrong in it though as the evidence of an accomplice it is open to suspicion. S. 337 provides the terms on and the machinery by which the pardon, for the purpose of giving evidence, can be granted by the Magistrate, and in my view the Magistrate was acting within his powers in granting the conditional pardon.

It was next contended that the Special Magistrate having tendered a conditional pardon to Gouranga was bound, under S. 337 (2-A), to commit the other accused for trial to the Court of Session or the High Court, but that as he was directed to try the accused himself and therefore could not commit them to the Sessions or the High Court, the whole of the provisions of S. 337 are nugatory in this case, from which it follows that if he is to try the accused, he cannot pardon any one of them under S. 337. In my view this contention is not sound. Under S. 26 (2), Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, 1932, the provisions of the Code so far as they are not inconsistent with this Chapter (that is, Ch. 2), shall apply to the proceedings of a Special Magistrate;" and by S. 34 of the same Act

The provisions of the (Criminal Procedure) Code in so far as they may be applicable and in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter (that is Ch. 2), shall apply to all matters connected with, arising from or consequent upon a trial by Special Magistrates.

From that it follows in my view, that the Magistrate may, acting under S. 337 (1) tender a conditional pardon, and under S. 337 (2) examine the pardoned man as a witness in his Court, but must, acting under the Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, 1932, try the accused himself instead of committing him for trial to the Court of Session or the High Court as S. 337 (2-A) of the Code provides. In the case of 60 Cal 652 (2) a Special Magistrate tried certain prisoners under the provisions of Ordinance 2 of 1932. The Ordinance provides in S. 37 (1):

In the trial of any case under this Ordinance a Special Magistrate shall follow the procedure laid down in sub-s. (1) of S. 32 for the trial of cases by a Special Judge.

Sub-section (2):

In matters not coming within the scope of sub-s. (1), the provisions of the Code in so far as they are not inconsistent with this Ordinance shall apply to the proceedings of a Special Magistrate; and for the purposes of the said provisions, the Special Magistrate shall be deemed to be a Magistrate of the first class.

Section 52:

The provisions of the Code and of any other law for the time being in force, in so far as they may be applicable and in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Ordinance, shall apply to all matters connected with, arising from or consequent upon a trial by special criminal Courts constituted under this Ordinance.

It will be noticed that Ss. 37 and 52 of the Ordinance are respectively essentially the same as Ss. 26 and 34, Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, 1932. In 60 Cal 652 (2), one of the accused was granted a conditional pardon under S. 337 by the Special Magistrate and he then proceeded to give evidence against his co-accused before the Special Magistrate who dealt with the case and sentenced the prisoners. It was objected on appeal that the Special Magistrate had no power to tender a conditional pardon and afterwards dispose of the case himself, instead of sending it to the Sessions or the High Court. The appeal from the conviction was dismissed. Rankin, C. J., at p. 654 said:

It is right to notice the contention that was put forward to the effect that the proceedings before the Special Magistrate were bad. It is said that his having tendered pardon to the approver, sub-s. 2-A, S. 337, Criminal P. C., made it obligatory upon him to commit the accused for trial to the Court of Session. It is not disputed that, under the Ordinance (2 of 1932), he certainly could not commit the accused for trial to any Court of Session. When we look at the Ordinance, we find that there is an express provision that the provisions of the Code are to apply in the case of Special Magistrates so far as they are not inconsistent with the Ordinance, and similar phrasing is used more elaborately in S. 52 and also in connexion with Sessions Judges in S. 32. It makes no difference whatever, so far as I can see, whether the Magistrate tendering the pardon had been the District Magistrate and not the Magistrate trying the case. The provisions of sub-s. (2-A) would apply equally, whoever had been the Magistrate tendering the pardon, and it is quite clear that the Special Magistrate is the Magistrate who, under the Ordinance, is to try the case. Unless therefore we were to hold that no approver could ever give evidence before a Special Magistrate, the appellants would not succeed in making the argument logical. But it is quite clear that, in so far as the Ordinance is inconsistent with sub-s. (2-A), the Ordinance prevails and there is no ground for supposing that it is impossible for the Special Magistrate to hear the evidence.

In my respectful view the judgment of Rankin, C. J., is correct and applies to the present case. 60 Cal 652 (2) was followed by S. K. Ghose and Henderson, JJ., in the case of 39 C W N 698 (3), and also by Guha and Nasim Ali, JJ., in two unreported cases—Appeals Nos. 844 and 845 of 1933. For the reasons I have given above, I am of opinion that the answer to Questions Nos. 3 and 4, in each case, is "Yes."

Mukerji, J.—I agree in the order that my lord the Chief Justice proposes to make in these appeals, setting aside the convictions and sentences of the three appellants concerned in them. Quite apart from any question of regularity or otherwise of the procedure adopted at the trial of the prisoners, the evidence of the approver Gouranga, which forms the backbone of the case against them, is, to my mind, utterly unconvincing. And if that evidence requires corroboration, as in my opinion it does, if the well-established rules as to the necessity for corroboration of the evidence of an approver are to be applied, the corroboration, such as there is in the other evidence and circumstances of the case, fails to reach the requisite standard, either in quality or in quantity. On the question of procedure, there was in the trial one irregularity far more serious than others, if any, to which my Lord has referred in his judgment, and which in its character is so fundamental that it is impossible to uphold the result in which the trial ended: I mean the illegality of putting Nalini back into the dock as a co-accused with the prisoners and so depriving them of the opportunity of cross-examining him after he had been examined as a witness for the prosecution. It did not matter in the least, so far as this part of the procedure is concerned, that Nalini's evidence, as against the prisoners, amounted to very little; he had been examined as a witness against them and they had an undoubted right to get from him such evidence as they could, by questioning him by way of cross-examination. The adoption of a procedure which put it beyond the power of the prosecution to tender Nalini for such purpose and thus depriving the prisoners of a right which they never lose under the law except under certain specified conditions of which this certainly is not one, has vitiated the trial altogether. These are my views on the matters that have arisen on this reference, apart from the questions which have been specifically referred for our decision.

Turning now to the four questions which the referring Bench has formulated for our decision, they may be conveniently dealt with in two groups: Questions (1) and (2) in group 1, and questions (3) and (4) in group 2. The former raises the question whether the Court may consent to the Public Prosecutor withdrawing from the prosecution of any person, under the provisions of S. 494(a), Criminal P. C., for the purpose of obtaining that person's evidence as a witness. And the latter raises the question whether a special Magistrate appointed under S. 24, Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, 12 of 1932, has power to tender a pardon, under the provisions of Section 337, Criminal P. C., or otherwise. Upon the view that I take of the matters involved in these questions it would be more logical for me to deal with the second matter first. I may say at the outset that I have not been able to understand why the words "or otherwise" have been appended in Question (3), for I am not aware nor have I heard anything in the course of the arguments before us that there is any power in a Magistrate to tender a pardon under any law other than the provision contained in S. 337 of the Code. For reasons I shall presently give, I am unable to agree with my Lord in answering the question in the affirmative.

The jurisdiction of Special Magistrates to try offenders is conferred by S. 25 of the Act the words of which in my opinion are very important. The relevant words are:

(1) Where in the opinion of the Local Government etc. . . . there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person has committed a scheduled offence etc. . . . the Local Government or the District Magistrate, as the case may be, may, by order in writing, direct that such person shall be tried by a Special Magistrate.

(2) Where in the opinion of the Local Government there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person has committed etc. . . . the Local Government, by order in writing, direct that such person shall be tried by a Special Magistrate.

There can be no question upon the plain words of the section that what the Special Magistrate may be directed to do by the Local Government or the District Magistrate, as the case may be, is that a person who comes within the purview of the section shall be tried by him. What is the meaning of the word 'trial' used in connexion with a proceeding in Court? The word is not defined in the Act or in the Code of Criminal Procedure, parts of which have been incorporated into the Act by the Act itself. The word therefore has to be understood in the ordinary lexicographical meaning. 'Trial' is; the hearing of a cause, civil or criminal, before a Judge according to the laws of the land. "Trial" is to find out by due examination the truth of the point in issue or question between the parties, whereupon judgment may be given: Wharton's Law Lexicon quoting Co. Litt. 1246.

In the Oxford Dictionary the meanings of the word given under the heading 'Law' are:

1. The examination and determination of a cause by a judicial tribunal; determination of the guilt or innocence of an accused person by a Court. 2. The determination of a person's guilt or innocence, or the righteousness of his cause by a combat between the accuser and the accused, etc.,

It is this idea of the determination of the guilt or innocence of the person who is tried that forms the fundamental conception of the trial that is held in respect of him. When therefore some competent authority directs that an accused person shall be tried, the trial that is to take place can end only in one or other of the recognised forms in which the trial can terminate: under the Code of Criminal Procedure such forms are,—conviction, acquittal, discharge, i. e. finding him guilty or not guilty or finding that there is no case against him or that the charge is groundless. In my opinion, it is a point of importance to note that the words used in the section are that "such person shall be tried." And I am further of opinion that if a Magistrate proceeds to tender pardon to an accused person he stops his trial and does something which he has no jurisdiction to do. He thereby ceases to proceed with the trial of that particular accused person, the object of which is to determine his guilt or innocence and does something which is not covered by the direction under which he has jurisdiction to act. No doubt, in a case in which a prosecutor withdraws from the prosecution of an accused, the trial of that accused is also stopped; but such act is the act of the prosecutor.

But it may be said, as indeed it has been said, that there are two other sections of the Act which should not be overlooked—Ss. 26 and 34.

Section 26 says:

(1) In the trial of a case under this Act a Special Magistrate shall follow the procedure prescribed by the Code for the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates: Provided that the Special Magistrate shall not be bound to adjourn any trial for any purpose unless such adjournment is, in his opinion, necessary in the interests of justice; (2) in matters not coming within the scope of sub-section (1) the provisions of the Code, so far as they are not inconsistent with this Chapter, shall apply to the proceedings of a Special Magistrate, and for the purposes of the said provisions the Special Magistrate shall be deemed to be a Magistrate of the First Class. 34. The provisions of the Code and of any other law for the time being in force, in so far as they may be applicable and in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Chapter, shall apply to all matters connected with, arising from or consequent upon a trial by a Special Magistrate.

On a reference to these two sections of the Act and especially to the latter, it has been contended on behalf of the Crown that there is no reason why the provisions contained in S. 337, Criminal P. C., should not apply to a trial by a Special Magistrate to the extent that it is not inconsistent with the provisions of Chap. 2 of the Act, in which Ss. 24, 25, 26 and 34 occur. Now it is agreed on all hands that a Special Magistrate has no power to make an order of commitment to the Court of Session. But it will be seen that that is so, not because of any express provision contained in the Act but only because such Magistrate is only authorised by the provision which lays down his jurisdiction, namely S. 25 of the Act, to try the accused, and for no other reason. To deprive him of his jurisdiction to commit, which as a Magistrate of the First Class trying a warrant case he undoubtedly has under proper circumstances, it is the meaning of the word 'trial' I have referred to above that is assumed. There it is his duty to try as distinguished from his power to commit for trial, that is relied upon. Why should not then the same meaning of the word "trial" be appealed to in order to hold that he is not competent to tender a pardon?

To explain the matter further I give an illustration. The procedure of the trial of warrant cases is detailed in Ch. 21 of the Code. Under S. 254 of the Code, when the Magistrate holding a trial under that procedure finds that a prima facie case has been made out against an accused person, he frames a charge; but he does so only if he finds that the offence prima facie disclosed is one which he is competent to try and which could be adequately punished by him. But if he finds that the offence disclosed is one which, though he is competent to try cannot be adequately punished by him, he adopts the procedure laid down in S. 208 of the Code, that is to say, being satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial frames a charge, and resorts to the procedure in the sections following which lead up to the commitment. Now a Special Magistrate is empowered by S. 27 of the Act to pass any sentence authorized by law, except a sentence of death or of transportation or imprisonment for a term exceeding seven years. If he finds a prima facie case made out and he is competent to try for the offence but cannot adequately punish the offender, he cannot commit the accused to the Court of Session but has got to try the accused all the same, and give him such sentence as he may. Why? Only because he has been asked to try the accused; that is to say determine the question of his guilt and bring the trial to a recognized form of termination. If this meaning of the word trial debars him from making an order of commitment, it is the same meaning which, in my opinion, debars him from tendering a pardon.

My second reason for holding that a Special Magistrate cannot avail of the provision as to tendering pardon is that I am not prepared to read S. 337 of the Code except as laying down one complete and indivisible procedure relating to an incident in the trial of the case, namely, as to tender a pardon to an accomplice. I use the expression 'trial of a case' ad-visedly, because the scheme of the Code, as I understand it, is to deal with offences and cases relating to offences and not with offenders. Under the Code it is the offence of which cognizance is taken and trial is held, it is the cases relating to the offences which are committed to the Sessions and so on. The position is very different under the Act, for under the Act the direction is that it is the person who shall be tried. But be that as it may, an investigation into the history of S. 337 of the Code, tracing its origin to the Code of 1861, and noting the successive changes that it underwent in the Codes of 1872 and 1882 and then in the present Code, has convinced me that the provision first got into the Code as one particular incident in the trial, and that the mere fact that in the Code of 1872 that provision was divided into several paragraphs and later on in the Codes of 1882 and in the present Code the same provision was divided into several sub-sections would not justify us in reading that one provision as consisting of a group of provisions, separate and separable from one another. For over sixty years, since 1872, every Magistrate tendering a pardon has known that by doing so he is taking a step which, if it succeeds, will deprive him of jurisdiction to try the accused persons other than the accused person who is pardoned and it is only if the step fails that he would be able to proceed with the trial against all the accused persons including him. When he takes the step he expects to get rid of the trial, and it is, therefore, to my mind, a step which cannot be regarded as a legitimate step open to a Special Magistrate to take. Besides the right of the other accused persons to have the case committed, in case the tender of pardon is accepted and the pardoned accused is examined as a witness is a right which is so concomitant to a right to fair trial that in the absence of an express declaration by the legislature to that effect I should not be prepared to hold that the legislature has taken away that right, not openly but by a side wind as it were.

I am not prepared, therefore, to take S. 337 of the Code in compartments, and to hold that all the compartments, with the exception of that which ensures the right to have the case committed to the Court of Session, may be availed of by the Special Magistrate. As regards the cases mentioned in Question (4), namely 60 Cal 652 (2), 39 C W N 698 (3) and Appeals Nos. 844 and 845 of 1933, I find that it is the first one on which the others depended. So far as the first one is concerned it is no doubt a case, not under the Act with which we are concerned but under Ordinance 2 of 1932, but its authority in my opinion is not to be discounted on that ground, for the two pieces of legislation are almost pari materia. On reading the decision with care, however, I have come to be of opinion that the contention that a Special Magistrate has no power to tender a pardon under S. 337 of the Code, which is the question before us, was not the contention urged in that case. What was contended in that case was that a Special Magistrate having tendered pardon to the approver was bound to commit the accused for trial to the Court of Session. This contention was overruled on the ground that unless the Court were to hold that no approver could ever give evidence before a Special Magistrate the appellants would not succeed in making the argument logical because it was quite clear that under the ordinance the Special Magistrate was to try the case. At the end of the decision there is an observation that "there is no ground for supposing that it is impossible for the Special Magistrate to hear the evidence."

But no reasons are given in support of this proposition, and it does not appear that any ground for that supposition was at all put forward for the consideration of the Court. So far therefore as the second group of questions is concerned, my answers are the following:

Question 3.—No.

Question 4.—The case of 60 Cal 652 (2), if it meant to decide to the contrary, and the other cases referred to in the question, in so far as they did so decide, were wrongly decided. I now take up the first group of questions. So far as this part of the reference is concerned, I cannot help thinking—and I say this with the utmost deference to the referring Judges—that it discloses some misconception as regards the law such as it undoubtedly is. The proposition contended for is that S. 494 of the Code is not intended to and may not be used for the purpose of obtaining the evidence of an accused. This proposition has been sought to be supported by the following process of reasoning:

Firstly, there is S. 337 which makes special provisions for this purpose and contains proper precautions and safeguards under which tainted evidence of accomplices and approvers may be made available; and therefore, it is said—and here I quote the words used in the reference:

If, therefore, in such circumstances it was open to the prosecution with the consent of the Court to proceed by way of S. 494, instead of S. 337, the whole of the salutary safeguards provided in the latter section could be avoided and the section nullified.

Secondly, it has been pointed out in the reference that while S. 337 specifically lays down the procedure for taking such tainted evidence and finds place in Chap. XXIV headed 'General provisions as to inquiries and trials' in Part VI:

Proceedings in prosecutions, S. 494 comes under Chap. 38 headed "of the Public Prosecutor" in part 9, "Supplementary Provisions."

And thirdly, as observed by the referring Judges:

one of our main reasons for holding that S. 494 may not be used for the purpose of obtaining the evidence of an accused persons is that, under (9) thereof, he is merely discharged and not acquitted and thus must give his evidence under fear of further prosecution.

So far as the first of these reasons is concerned it seems to have been overlooked that S. 337 is available for obtaining the evidence of approvers not in all trials but only as regards trials concerning some graver offences. Curiously enough, the same misconception appears to pervade the arguments that were addressed to the Court in 56 Cal 1023 (1) in which the position taken up was that "if S. 494 could serve such a purpose, S. 337 would be redundant." To make these arguments logical, therefore, it will have to be maintained that the legislature never intended that in case of lesser offences, evidence of approvers and accomplices should be ever availed of. That argument would be too bold to deserve consideration; and indeed the referring Judges have nowhere suggested that that should be the position in law. Such a position would be utterly untenable and would find no support whatever in any decision of any Court in this country, so far; while on the other hand any amount of authority may be cited in support of the position that so long as an accomplice is not jointly tried he is a competent witness at the trial of his confederates, whether such accomplice is not to be tried, or is awaiting trial or has been tried and convicted or acquitted or discharged. If S. 494 may not be used for withdrawing a prosecution as against an accused person who is being jointly tried with others, there would be no means left to examine him as a witness against the others in a case in which S. 337 is not applicable. And if it be permissible to examine an accomplice as such witness when he is not to be tried or has been already tried, whatever the result of such trial may have been, there is hardly any reason apparent why by simply putting him forward as a co-accused for a time the prosecution is precluded from using him as such witness. The existence of S. 337 therefore to my mind does not necessarily exclude the idea of S. 494 being used for a similar purpose.

As regards the second reason, it should not be overlooked that the Code only deals with such matters as have a direct bearing upon the procedure which obtains in it. S. 337, with its provision for tendering pardon, examining the pardoned accused as a witness if he accepts the pardon, and so on, lays down the procedure for these purposes; and such procedure appropriately finds mention in Ch. 24, headed "General Provisions as to enquiries and trials" in Part 6, "Proceedings in Prosecution." S. 494 concerns withdrawal of prosecutions which, except for the consent which the Court may or may not give for the purpose, is a matter falling within the authority and function of the Public Prosecutor and so not inaptly it has been placed in Ch. 38 headed, "Of the Public Prosecutor" in Part 9 "Supplementary Provisions." I am not of opinion that any assistance is derivable for our present purposes from the fact that the sections are placed as stated above. As regards the third reason all I desire to state is that the Indian Legislature has nowhere, except in S. 337 of the Code, shown any such anxiety as it has been credited with by the referring Judges, namely that it intended to exclude evidence given by an accused person under fear of further prosecution. However salutary the principle may be that a person who is under fear of further prosecution should not be trusted to give true evidence, that principle finds no expression in any enactment. And even according to the procedure contained in S. 337 the pardoned approver is not totally free from the apprehension of a further prosecution. The referring Judges have expressed the view that Mitter, J., was under a misapprehension in his appreciation of the English law on the subject. My Lord has already dealt with this matter in his judgment. In construing the provisions of this Code in which the procedure to be followed has been detailed, we need not assume that the principles of English criminal law either substantive or procedural, were intended to be adhered to. On the contrary as pointed out by Lord Halsbury, L. C., in (1885) 10 App Cas 675 (15), that the words of the statute by virtue of which the Indian Legislature has enacted the Indian Acts, "are words under which the widest departure from criminal procedure as is known and practised in this country (meaning England) have been authorized in Her Majesty's Dominions." I have had occasion to consider the terms of S. 494 in 60 Cal 233 (16), and I then said:

The legislature not having defined the circumstances under which a withdrawal is permissible it would not be right to attempt to lay down any hard and fast rule circumscribing the limits within which the withdrawal may be made. . . . S. 494, in my opinion, contemplates action to be taken, more often than not upon circumstances extraneous to the record of the case: inexpediency of a prosecution for reasons of State, necessity to drop the case on the ground of public policy, credible information having reached the Government as to the falsity of the evidence by which the prosecution is supported and other matters of that description.

I adhere to the view that I thus expressed of the general scope of S. 494. If the prosecution, in order to avail of the evidence of an accused as against his co-accused, consider it necessary to withdraw from the prosecution as against him the section, in my opinion, would warrant such a course on the ground of public policy. But the withdrawal is dependent on the consent of the Court; and therefore the Court in order to see whether it should consent or not will have to enquire into the reasons which prompt the withdrawal. And if the Court finds that S. 337 with its statutory safeguards is open to be availed of it will be a sound exercise of its discretion to withhold consent. So also I should think the Court would be justified in withholding consent if it finds that the expected evidence will not be relevant or material or necessary. Similarly perhaps would the Court be right in refusing to consent if it finds that the accused in whose favour the withdrawal is proposed was the principal offender and the purpose will be equally achieved if the case as against some other accused who took a lesser part in the offence is allowed to be withdrawn. But no hard and fast rule can possibly be laid down for the guidance of the Courts as regards a matter which is essentially a matter of discretion.

It will be noticed that question (1) of the Reference is confined to Cl. (a), S. 494. Apparently the referring Judges were of the view, and that obviously is the correct view, that none of the reasons upon which their view of Cl. (a) is based will support such view in respect of Cl. (b). It is clear, therefore, that if that view is to be accepted it will have to be held that one part of the section may be legitimately used for getting the evidence and the other cannot. The correct view to take of S. 494, in my opinion, is to hold that a withdrawal under that section either under Cl. (a) or under Cl. (b) is a simple withdrawal unconditioned and unconditional. The Court is concerned only with the question whether the ground for the proposed course is such as would justify it in giving its consent. If the Court finds that the object of withdrawing from the prosecution is to avail of the evidence of the particular accused and the circumstances of the case are such that it would further the ends of justice to have his evidence and that S. 337 is inapplicable, the Court will not be wrong in giving its consent. What the public prosecutor will or will not do thereafter, in a case in which the withdrawal has been under Cl. (a) with the effect of a discharge, is a matter which is no concern of the Court. But I think it is only fair that I should say that I have never in my experience come across any case, except this one, in which when the evidence of the discharged accused has failed to reach the required standard he has been again put on his trial for the same offence. If a public prosecutor who makes an application for withdrawing from prosecution against some accused person has some idea concealed in his mind that in case that accused does not give true and proper evidence he will again put him up for trial for the same offence, then he entertains in his mind a desire or a hope that is unknown to the law, which it is his duty to respect. And a course of that kind, though there is nothing expressly said against it anywhere in the law, would produce what in my view would be a most unseemly spectacle. Unfortunately such treatment was meted out to Nalini in the present case.

My answers to the first group of questions are the following :

Q. 1. Yes, but not in a case in which S. 337 of the Code may be availed of.

Q. 2. Yes, because 56 Cal 1023 (1), was a case in which S. 337 of the Code was not applicable.

It follows from the answer that I have given to the four questions referred that, if I were to decide these appeals upon the points raised in these questions, I would have held that it was illegal on the part of the Special Magistrate to examine Gouranga as a pardoned accomplice, and therefore his evidence could not be used against the appellants; and that Nalini was rightly allowed to be examined as a witness on his discharge under S. 494 of the Code. But in any case, as I have already said, Nalini not having been tendered for cross-examination, the whole trial was vitiated.

Panckridge, J.—Since the facts have been set out in full in the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice I need not recapitulate them. The learned Advocate-General concedes that the evidence on the record does not justify him in asking the Court to affirm the conviction of the appellants. He also conceded that the course taken by the prosecution in reviving the proceedings against Nalini in such circumstances that the appellants were deprived of their right of cross-examination is an irregularity, which, apart from the merits of the case, makes it impossible for the Crown to succeed. The only course therefore open to us is to allow the appeals and acquit the appellants. I have no doubt that in these circumstances we should, strictly speaking, be justified in declining to answer the questions propounded by the Division Bench. On the ground the appeals can be disposed of without answering them. I think however that it is not desirable to take this course, first because it was not until we had heard an elaborate argument on behalf of the appellants on the points raised by the Division Bench that the Advocate-General informed us of the position taken up by the Crown, and secondly, because I understand that the same points arise in appeals now pending, and it appears reasonably certain that sooner or later the decision of a Full Bench will be necessary.

In considering the first two questions we must of course leave out of account the irregularities which occurred subsequent to the consent given by the Special Magistrate to the application of the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from the prosecution of Nalini under S. 494, Civil P. C. In other words we must assume that Nalini never again became a co-accused with the present appellants, and that the present appellants had all the opportunities of cross-examining him that the Code provides in the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates. I turn now to the first question :

(1) Whether the Court may consent to the Public Prosecutor withdrawing from the prosecution of any person, under the provisions of S. 494 (a), Criminal P. C., for the purpose of obtaining that person's evidence as a witness. The question is framed in precise language and rightly so, we are only called upon to consider those cases, where the circumstances are such that, if the Court in its discretion permits the Public Prosecutor to withdraw, the result of such permission will be that the accused is discharged under S. 494 (a). I wish to emphasize this because the appellants have sought to establish a proposition much wider than is necessary for a negative answer to the question. It is plain that what impressed the Division Bench was that, in their opinion, no reliance can be placed upon the evidence of a witness who, being discharged and not acquitted, is still in jeopardy of again being accused and ultimately convicted of the offence in respect of which he was originally an accused. They say (pp. 117, 126):

The witness would give his evidence well-knowing that under S. 494 (a) he had only been discharged, and that he remained liable to be harassed with another trial unless his evidence were considered by the prosecution to be satisfactory and favourable to their case. This was what happened to Nalini in the present case. Evidence given under such an apprehension would not be likely often to be reliable.

The appellants however argue that at no stage of a trial before a Magistrate should the Public Prosecutor be permitted to withdraw from the prosecution of one of a group of accused for the purpose of obtaining his evidence against the others. They base their contention not so much on the quality of the evidence so obtained, as on the apprehensions, which, it is suggested, the consent of the Magistrate will cause in the minds of the remaining accused. It is pointed out that where a Magistrate tenders a pardon under S. 337 (1), Criminal P. C., the Magistrate, if he thinks that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is guilty of an offence, must under sub-s. 2-A commit him for trial to the Court of Session or High Court even although the case is one triable by himself. It is suggested that the reason for this is that in giving his consent to the withdrawal the Magistrate is "helping the prosecution", and that thereafter the remaining accused persons will suspect, possibly quite unjustifiably, that the Magistrate has made up his mind as to their guilt.

Reference was made to 10 C W N 848 (17), where it was held that a Magistrate, specially empowered under S. 30, Criminal P. C., to try cases exclusively triable by a Court of Session, could not after tendering a pardon under S. 337 (1) try the case himself, and that he was subject to the restrictions imposed by S. 337 sub-s. 4, as it then stood. This case does not appear to me to throw any light on the matter. I asked counsel for the appellants whether, if the proposition for which he was arguing was correct, it did not follow as a result, that it would be impossible in a trial before a Magistrate for the prosecution to tender the evidence of an approver except in those cases covered by S. 337 (1). In reply to my question counsel stated that it would always be open to the prosecution to have the accused tried separately, in which case each accused person would be a competent witness against or on behalf of such of his fellow accused as were being tried in different proceedings but for the same offence: 23 Bom 213 (18), 45 Cal 720 (19). I can only say that if such a course is legal, as it apparently is, the objections to it are fully as strong as any that can be urged against permitting withdrawal from the prosecution under S. 494. With regard to the narrower question propounded by the Division Bench, there is nothing in the Code to suggest that the legislature has intended to fetter the discretion of a Court in giving its consent to withdrawal under S. 494 where the circumstances are such that the accused will be discharged and not acquitted. The discretion however is a judicial discretion, and it appears to me that in cases, where it is open to the prosecution to obtain the approver's evidence by applying for the tender of a conditional pardon under S. 337 (1), the Magistrate must keep the provisions of that section before him when he exercises his discretion. I am disposed to go further, and to say that as a general rule the discretion will be wrongly exercised in such cases if the consent is given before the charge is framed. For reasons that I shall give shortly I am of opinion that the Magistrate in this case had power to tender a conditional pardon under S. 337 (1). No grounds have been suggested why the Magistrate should not have tendered a conditional pardon to Nalini, and I am therefore of opinion that he exercised his discretion wrongly.

Subject to the observations I have made I would answer questions 1 and 2 in the affirmative. I would remark that the case of 56 Cal 1023 (1) was one to which S. 337, Criminal P. C., had no application. I would also draw attention to and express my agreement with the observations of Meares, C. J. and Pig-gott, J., in 45 All 226, 230 (14):

There is no provision in Indian Statute Law, nor is there any principle of natural justice, which makes an accomplice, as such, an incompetent witness in respect of the offence in the commission of which he was an accomplice. The prosecution is not evading the provisions of S. 337, Criminal P. O., where it puts into the box an accomplice in the commission of an offence to which that section does not apply.

I have now to consider Questions Nos. 3 and 4. (3) Whether a Special Magistrate appointed under S. 24, Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act 12 of 1932, has power to tender pardon, under the provisions of S. 337, Criminal P. C., or otherwise. (4) Whether the cases of 60 Cal 652 (2) and 39 C W N 698 (3), and Appeals Nos. 844 and 845 of 1933 were upon this point rightly decided. The relevant provisions of the Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, 1932 are the following: Under S. 24, the Local Government has power to invest any Presidency Magistrate and certain Magistrates of the First Class with the powers of a Special Magistrate. Under S. 25 the Local Government has power by order in writing to direct that a person suspected of committing certain offences (including the offences with which these appellants were charged) or offences under the Arms Act, 1878 be tried by a Special Magistrate. Under S. 26, sub-s. 1 in the trial of any case under the Act such Special Magistrate is to follow the procedure prescribed by the Criminal Procedure Code for the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates. Sub-section 2, S. 26, is as follows:

In matters not coming within the scope of sub-section (1) the provisions of the Code, so far as they are not inconsistent with this Chapter, shall apply to the proceedings of a Special Magistrate and for the purposes of the said provisions the Special Magistrate shall be deemed to be a Magistrate of the First Class.

The only other relevant section is S. 34:

The provisions of the Code and of any other law for the time being in force, in so far as they may be applicable, shall apply to all matters connected with, arising from or consequent upon a trial by Special Magistrates.

What we have to decide is whether the provisions of S. 337 (1), Criminal P. C., giving a Magistrate power to tender a pardon on condition that the person to whom the pardon is tendered do make a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence, and the provisions of S. 337 (2) directing that every person accepting such a tender shall be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence, are inconsistent with the Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act: for if they are not inconsistent they will apply to trials by Special Magistrates by reason of Ss. 26 (2) and 34 of the Act. The appellants submit that a broad interpretation is to be given to the word "provisions" in Ss. 26 (2) and 34. S. 337, Criminal P. C., provides a definite machinery, whereby in certain cases the prosecution may obtain the evidence of an approver against his co-accused in cases tried by a Magistrate.

First there is the tender of the pardon, then, if it is accepted, examination by the Magistrate, then, if a prima facie case against the accused is made out, committed to the Court of Sessions or the High Court. It is argued that if S. 337 cannot be applied in its entirety then its provisions are "inconsistent" with the Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act within the meaning of Ss. 26 (2) and 34 of the Act. I agree with the contention that it makes no difference whether the section is subdivided into numbered sub-sections, as it is now, or not so sub-divided, as was the case before 1923. In my opinion however the various powers and directions given to Magistrates by S. 337 are so distinct and independent that each is a provision within the meaning of the Local Act. The position would be different if under the Code as soon as the conditional pardon were accepted the Magistrate at once lost seizin of the case, and was bound to transfer it or commit the accused to another Court. This however is not so, for under sub-s. 2 the Magistrate has then to examine the person who has accepted the pardon, and his evidence becomes evidence in the case. Neither the power to tender the pardon, nor the obligation to examine the recipient of the pardon, can reasonably be said to be inconsistent with the Local Act, though the obligation to commit the accused to another Court is admittedly so. Two other arguments must be noticed. It has been suggested that the Special Magistrate is only clothed with power to "try" the accused under S. 25 Local Act and not with the power to "pardon." This argument seems to me to construe "try" and "trial" in an artificial and unnecessarily narrow fashion. S. 337, Criminal P. C., is part of Ch. 24 which contains "General Provisions as to Inquiries and Trials," and the power to tender a pardon can be exercised "at any stage of the investigation or inquiry into, or the trial of the offence." In this case four persons were being tried together, and in my opinion the Special Magistrate authorized under S. 25 (1) had all the powers which the Code confers on Magistrates trying such cases, save such powers as are clearly inconsistent with the Local Act. Finally the appellants base an argument on a comparison of the Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, 1932, with the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act 1925. It is pointed out that by S. 7 of the earlier Act, the provisions of the Code, so far only as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of, or the special procedure prescribed by, or under the Act shall apply to the proceedings of Commissioners appointed under the Act, and such Commissioners shall have all the powers conferred by the Code on a Court of Sessions exercising original jurisdiction. Under S. 5 (1) the Commissioners have power to take cognizances of offences without the accused being committed to them for trial, and in trying accused persons they are to follow the procedure prescribed by the Code for the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates. By S. 8 (1) Commissioners are given power to tender pardon. By sub-s. (2) where the pardon has been tendered and accepted before the order for trial by Commissioners has been made, the provisions of S. 337 (2) and (3) are to apply as if the accused person had been committed for trial to the Commissioners.

It is argued that sub-s. 1, S. 8 shows that in the opinion of the Legislature S. 7 did not confer upon Commissioners the power to tender pardon given by S. 338, Criminal P. C. to the Court of Sessions and the High Court. I do not think any guidance can be obtained from the former Act, as the construction of the Act with which we are dealing seems reasonably clear. It may be the words "after commitment" and "the Court to which commitment is made" in S. 338, Criminal P. C. seemed to the legislature likely to create a difficulty and that for greater caution S. 8 was inserted in the Act of 1925. I have therefore arrived at the conclusion that questions 3 and 4 must be answered in the affirmative.

The case 60 Cal 652 (2), which is referred to in question 4 and which has been followed in the subsequent cases, was a case tried under Ordinance 2 of 1932, the relevant provisions of which correspond to Ss. 26 and 34, Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act 1932. The argument is not reported, and it was suggested that the point now raised by the Division Bench was not decided in that case. It was sought to be inferred from certain observations of Rankin, C. J., that the case only decides that a Special Magistrate, who has tendered a pardon, has no power to commit for trial under sub-s. 2-A of S. 337, Criminal P. C. This view is perhaps confirmed by what is, in my opinion, an inaccurate and unsatisfactory head-note. Reading the whole of the learned Chief Justice's judgment I have no doubt at all that so ridiculous a submission as that the Magistrate had such a power was never made to him, and that the point decided by that Division Bench was substantially the same as the point formulated by the Division Bench making this reference.

M. C. Ghose, J.—I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice.

Bartley, J.—I agree that these appeals must be allowed on the merits, but that we should not therefore decline to answer the questions propounded by the Division Bench, though we are strictly speaking entitled to do so. I am of opinion that all the questions so propounded must be answered in the affirmative. On the first question: S. 494, Criminal P. C., contains no reference to the object of withdrawing from a prosecution. It simply empowers the Public Prosecutor, with the consent of the Court, to withdraw proceedings, and defines the effect of this procedure. In the case which we are called on to consider, that effect is the discharge of the accused. The section does not deal with what may happen after that discharge or lay down any considerations which apply to the exercise of the Court's discretion to grant or refuse consent.

In view of the provisions of S. 337, the evidence of an accomplice is available to the prosecution, and the Court cannot be said to make an improper use of its discretion in consenting to the discharge of an accused on the ground that it is proposed to examine him as a witness. Nothing in the Code expressly limits the discretion given by S. 494 and the position that a discharge for the purpose of obtaining the evidence of an accused is contrary to the spirit of the Legislature does not appear to me to be in the least degree a sound position. It has been said that such a procedure is by way of bargain and should not be allowed; secondly that it must tend to affect the confidence of the accused on trial in the impartiality of the Court. Now the law provides for a conditional pardon in specific cases. I do not therefore think that there is anything contrary to its spirit if the Court consents to the withdrawal of a charge in order that the accused may be put into the witness box. Further, the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, cannot refuse to consider the interests of all the parties who are before it. I agree however that in cases to which the provisions of S. 337 apply, it is a better exercise of discretion on the part of the Magistrate to use that section instead of S. 494. With regard to the third question referred by the Division Bench, the answer depends on the interpretation of a statute which modified the previous law governing the conduct of criminal trials. I agree with the interpretation placed on the relevant sections of that statute in the judgment of Panckridge, J., and cannot usefully amplify what has there been said.

Final Judgment.

The result is that the appeals are allowed, the convictions quashed and the accused are acquitted. The appellants, as they are on bail, will be discharged from their bail bonds. This order however does not entitle the appellant Saroj Bhusan Roy alias Topa Roy to be released if he is undergoing imprisonment in respect of some other offence.

Civil Rule No. 163 of 1936, Decided on 18th March 1936.

Legal Practitioners Act (1879), S. 13 (f)—Certificate under R. 6 of Rules framed under S. 6 containing false statement regarding probationer—Case falls under S. 13 (f).

Bijan Kumar Mukerji—for the Crown.

Atul Chandra Gupta and Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta—for Pleader.

Order.—This is a rule upon Babu Probhat Chandra Bhattacharya, a pleader of Rangpur to show cause why he should not be suspended or dismissed under S. 13 (f), Legal Practitioners Act. The facts on which the rule was issued by this Court are these: Babu Probhat Chandra took Moulvi Md. Shafiuzzaman as a probationer for one year from March 1933 to 1934. The said probationer accepted the whole time appointment of a teacher in the Kailash Ranjan High English School in Rangpur from 1st August 1933. On 10th December 1934, the pleader granted the following certificate to the probationer: I Probhat Chandra Bhattacharya, a pleader practising in the District Courts of Rangpur certify that M. Shafiuzzaman has duly and faithfully served me as a probationer for the period required by the rules and in my opinion he is a fit and proper person to be admitted as a pleader in the District Courts of Rangpur subordinate to the High Court. The rules referred to in the certificate are the revised rules for the training of legal practitioners in the subordinate Courts framed by this Court under S. 6, Legal Practitioners Act. These rules came into force on 1st January 1930. R. 6 of these rules lays down that during the period of probation the probationer shall work with the pleader in and outside Court and such work shall be that of assisting the pleader in his professional work as a pleader. By R. 10 the pleader who takes a probationer is permitted to charge a fee of Rs. 50 for his remuneration for the training he gives to the probationer. By R. 12 the probationer has got to file with the District Judge a certificate in the prescribed form on the completion of the period of probation. The certificate which was given by the Pleader Probhat Babu to M. Shafiuzzaman on 10th December 1934 was given in pursuance of the rule in the prescribed form.

The question is whether the statements in this certificate bring him under S. 13 (f), Legal Practitioners Act. The pleader does not deny that the probationer accepted the whole-time appointment of a teacher in the High School mentioned above from 1st August 1933, and that he granted the certificate. He however says that he had no knowledge during the period of probation that the probationer was acting as a teacher since August 1933. He admits that the probationer is his neighbour and lives in the Rangpur town which is about 2 to 3 minutes' walk from his home. He also admits that the probationer used to come to his house almost every morning and that he used to call him to his house whenever he required his assistance. If he required the assistance of the probationer in his house in connexion with his professional work why did he not ask him to assist him in Court? His explanation is that he did not require the assistance of the probationer as his practice was confined to ex parte cases, Small Cause Court suits, rent suits and execution matters. But if for such a practice assistance was required in his house I cannot imagine why similar assistance would not have been availed of by him while he was conducting Small Cause Court suits and rent suits in Court if such assistance was in fact available to him. I am of opinion that the probationer was not assisting the pleader in Court not because the pleader did not require his assistance but because his assistance was not available during Court hours, as he was working somewhere else during this period. I cannot believe that the probationer who is a neighbour of the pleader and who used to come to him almost every morning to his house never told him that he was working somewhere else and that the pleader was ignorant of the fact that the probationer was employed elsewhere.

Again in the certificate it is stated that the probationer duly served him as a probationer. By R. 6 the probationer is to work with him in and outside Court. Admittedly he did not serve him in Court. Why did he then state that the probationer duly served him. The word "duly" means in accordance with the rules framed by this Court. The pleader does not say and it is not open to him to say that he did not know the rules. He however says that the rules framed by this Court regarding qualifications of pleader, etc., not having duly defined the duty of a pleader in relation to a probationer, he could not realize how he failed in this connection. But he took him as a probationer under the rules framed for the training of legal practitioners in Subordinate Courts and he was entitled to get remuneration for the training given. It was his duty to give him training in Court also. In his explanation he says that he did not consider it necessary for the probationer to work with him in Court as he had already acted as a pleader for two years at Muzzfarpur. He was not entitled to take this view of his duty as in spite of the practice of the probationer as a pleader in a different province he was required to enrol himself as a probationer for the purpose of being trained as a legal practitioner in this province. His certificate unmistakably shows that he certified that the probationer served him duly under the rules, i. e., in and outside Court. This statement is highly misleading if not false. From the facts and circumstances of the case it is clear that the pleader knew full well that the probationer was acting as a whole-time teacher in the local High School during the major part of the period of probation and in spite of this knowledge he intentionally gave the probationer a false or at any rate a misleading certificate about the training of the probationer in order to enable the latter to get permission to practise as a pleader. It must be remembered that the certificate of the pleader who takes a probationer for training is taken as a proof that the probationer has been trained as required by this Court.

If therefore a pleader intentionally gives a certificate which contains false statements or statements which are misleading he brings himself under S. 13 (f), Legal Practitioners Act. The next question is how the pleader is to be dealt with. Although we take a serious view of the matter, nevertheless having regard to the fact that the rules relating to the training of probationers have been recently introduced, we think that the ends of justice will be sufficiently met if he be suspended for a week. The pleader is accordingly suspended for a week from the date on which this order is communicated to him by the District Judge.

D. N. Bhattacharji—for the Crown.

Order.—This rule was issued calling upon the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta as well as upon the Chairman of the Calcutta Improvement Trust to show cause why the convictions and sentences under S. 171, Calcutta Improvement Act, passed upon the petitioners should not be set aside. The offence complained of was that the accused had put up structures in premises Nos. 14 to 23, Jackson Lane, Calcutta, without the permission of the Improvement Trust and without an agreement as required by S. 63 (8), Improvement Trust Act. The question is whether the accused have infringed the provisions of S. 171, which lays down that:

If any person, without the permission of the chairman required by S. 63, sub-s. (8) erects, re-erects, or adds to any wall (exceeding ten feet in height) or building which falls within the street alignment or building line of a projected public street shown in any plan sanctioned by the Local Government under the said section shall be punishable.

The grounds on which this rule is supported are (1) that there has been no re-erection of any building within the street alignment and (2) that in any case there has been no reconstruction or re-erection according to the plan Ex. 15, which the accused submitted. After the previous plan had not been accepted, this was the plan which was submitted by the accused as one according to which he proposed to construct a new building. As regards the first point it turns on the meaning of the word "re-erect." It is claimed by the petitioner that the word "re-erect" is to be interpreted according to the meaning of that word in the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1899. In S. 3, Cl. (39) of that Act it is laid down that the expression "re-erect" when used with reference to a building includes the reconstruction of a building after more than one-half of its cubical extent has been taken down or burnt down or has fallen down. It is argued that as the Calcutta Improvement Act of 1911 is a subsequent Act, and since the Improvement Trust and the Calcutta Corporation were working hand in hand, the same meaning should be attributed to the word by the Improvement Act as that put upon it in the Municipal Act. On the other hand, it is pointed out that there is no definition of the word "re-erect" in the Improvement Act, but in S. 2 it is stated that certain expressions, namely, drain, public street and street alignment, have the same meaning as in certain clauses of S. 3, Calcutta Municipal Act, the inference being that had the intention been to give any special meaning to the word "re-erect," it would have been mentioned amongst the definitions in S. 2, Improvement Act, and that otherwise the meaning should be the ordinary meaning of the word, and that it was for the Court to decide whether in fact what had been done amounted to re-erection. I think there is considerable force in this argument.

In the absence of any definition of the word "re-erect," I think it should have its ordinary meaning. Otherwise there was no reason, if it was intended that "re-erect" should be used in any other meaning than its ordinary meaning, why it should not have been defined in the Act itself. If then, it is used in its ordinary meaning, the finding of the Presidency Magistrate is that there has been re-erection in this case and the judgment shows that there has in fact been a considerable amount of re-erection, though it is admitted by the opposite party that if the meaning of re-erection in the present case coincided with the definition of the word as given in the Municipal Act, the work done would not amount to re-erection. In this view of the matter, the first contention of the petitioners fails. Then as regards the second contention, the charge is constructing structures in premises Nos. 14 to 23, Jackson Lane, without the permission of the Improvement Trust. It was not construction according to one plan or the other, and if it is found that the accused actually constructed structures on the premises in question, they come under the Act since it appears that no sanction was given to the erection of any structure on the premises whether according to one plan or the other. The petitioner has pointed out that according to the evidence, no construction has been made according to the plan, Ex. 15. But it cannot be said, in view of the findings, that there has been no re-erection. It was open to the petitioner to contend before the Presidency Magistrate that what had been actually done did not amount to re-erection. But in view of the findings that in fact there was re-erection of the building, this contention must also fail.

Another ground that the petitioners urge is that the sentence is much too severe. In this connection it is argued that under S. 171 the fine may extend to Rs. 500, whereas in this case the fines imposed on the five petitioners will amount in all to Rs. 750 and that therefore it is illegal. Under S. 171 any person who erects a building without sanction is liable to a fine of Rs. 500. So that where more than one person joined in erecting a building, they are clearly each liable to a fine extending to Rs. 500. There is therefore nothing illegal in the amount of the fine. On the other hand, it has been pointed out that these proceedings have been pending for about a year and in view of the conduct of the petitioners, the fine is not too severe. Considering the fact that the petitioners have no doubt been able to utilize these buildings erected without sanction for the period of a year, I see no reason to interfere with the decision of the Presidency Magistrate who is in a better position to assess the amount of the fine than this Court sitting in revision. The Rule is, accordingly, discharged.

Appeals Nos. 2054 to 2074 of 1933,
Decided on 12th March 1936, from appellate decrees of Dist. Judge, Khulna, D/- 30th June 1933.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (8 of 1885), Ss. 52—
What determines liability of tenants to pay additional rent stated.

The words "area for which rent has been previously paid" mean the area with reference to which rent was assessed or adjusted. In order therefore to prove the area for which rent was being previously paid it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove the area of the tenancy at its inception, and in order to determine whether the landlord is entitled to additional rent the question which has to be solved is whether the tenant is in occupation of the land for which no rent has been assessed and for which he is bound to pay rent. If since the date of the last assessment he has encroached on adjoining waste of the landlord he is liable for rent for the land encroached. If he has not encroached upon the adjoining waste and is in occupation of the same area which he possessed when the rent was last assessed he may be liable to pay the additional rent if it is proved that rent was not assessed at a consolidated sum upon the entire area found in his possession but upon an assumed area or upon an area determined by measurement as the area in his possession : 1928 Cal 553 and 1921 Cal 345, Rel. on. [P 376 C 2]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (8 of 1885), Ss. 105 and 109—Proceedings under S. 105—Claim for additional rent for unassessed land of tenancies not pressed—Suit for enhancement of rent is not barred.

Under S. 109 the withdrawal or failure to press the claim for additional rent for unassessed lands of the tenancies under S. 105 proceedings does not preclude the landlord from suing the tenant in civil Court for increasing the rent of tenancies : 1932 Cal 207 and 1936 Cal 307, Rel. on. [P 377 C 2]

*Bireswar Bagchi and Prem Ranjan Ray Chaudhury—*for Appellants.

*Atul Chandra Gupta, Rajendra Nath Das and Ganga Prosad Bose—*for Respondents.

Judgment.—These 21 appeals arise out of as many suits for recovery of arrears of rent. Plaintiffs' case briefly stated is as follows : Plaintiffs are the proprietors of 4 mouzahs in Touzi No. 98 appertaining to Pergana Salimabad. These 4 Mouzahs constitute Bandabasti Taluk Bisweswar Ray Chaudhury. Under the said Taluk there are tenancies of different grades held by the defendants in these suits. By a Robakari of the Commissioner of Sunderbans dated 1st July 1850, the rates of rent per standard bigha of 80 cubits payable by the tenants of different grades in respect of all the tenancies under this taluk are fixed. During the last settlement survey the lands of the tenancies in all the suits except suits Nos. 46 and 51 have been found on measurement by the same standard to be in excess of the area which were assessed at the rates fixed in the year 1850. Plaintiffs therefore are entitled to get additional rent for the unassessed lands of their tenancies according to the rates mentioned in the Robakari. In Suit No. 62 rent for the years 1335 to 1337 B. S. has been claimed. In the other suits the claim is for the years 1334 to 1337 B. S. Plaintiffs also claim cesses at a certain rate for 1334 and 1335 B. S. and at a different rate for the subsequent period. In Suit No. 64 plaintiffs prayed for enhancement under S. 30 (b), Bengal Tenancy Act. The defences common to all the suits are :

(1) That S. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, is a bar to the plaintiffs' claim for additional rent. (2) That the rent for each of the tenancies in suit is a consolidated rent fixed for the entire land of each of these tenancies. (3) That the entire amount of rent for the period in suit has been paid. (4) That the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim cesses at the rate mentioned in their plaints.

The learned trial Judge decreed the suits in part on the following findings :

(a) That S. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, as it stood before the Bengal Tenancy Amending Act of 1928, is a bar to the plaintiffs' claim for additional rent in Suits Nos. 14, 47, 49, 50, 56, 59, 62 and 63.

(b) That the plaintiffs are entitled to get additional rent for increase in areas in Suits Nos. 13, 52, 53, 54, 55, 57, 58 and 61 at 8 annas per bigha of excess land.

(c) That the plaintiffs are entitled to get cesses at the rate of 6 pies per rupee for the period previous to the last quarter of 1336 B. S. and at the rate mentioned in the Valuation Roll, Ex. 5, for the subsequent period.

(d) That the plaintiffs are entitled to get enhancement of rent at the rate of 8 annas per rupee under S. 30 (b), Bengal Tenancy Act, in Suit No. 64.

(e) That the pleas of payment taken by the defendants have been substantiated in part.

The plaintiffs and the defendants both appealed to the lower appellate Court. The learned District Judge has dismissed all the appeals excepting the appeal by plaintiffs in Suit No. 64 which was allowed by him. Hence these second appeals by the defendants ; plaintiffs have also filed cross-objections. The first point urged by the learned Advocate for the tenants is that the facts found by the lower appellate Court are not sufficient to establish the liability of the tenants to pay additional rent for the excess lands of their tenancies. By S. 52, Ben. Ten. Act, a tenant is liable to pay additional rent for all lands proved by measurement to be in excess of area for which the rent had been previously paid by him. Now the words "area for which rent has been previously paid" mean the area with reference to which rent was assessed or adjusted. [See the case of 55 Cal 680 (1)]. In order to prove the area for which rent was being previously paid it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove the area of the tenancy at its inception. In order to determine whether the landlord is entitled to additional rent the question which has to be solved is whether the tenant is in occupation of the land for which no rent has been assessed and for which he is bound to pay rent. If since the date of the last assessment he has encroached on adjoining waste of the landlord he is liable for rent for the land encroached. If he has not encroached upon the adjoining waste and is in occupation of the same area which he possessed when the rent was last assessed he may be liable to pay the additional rent if it is proved that rent was not assessed at a consolidated sum upon the entire area found in his possession but upon an assumed area or upon an area determined by measurement as the area in his possession. [See the case of 25 C W N 204 (2)]. From Ex. 1, dated 1st July 1850, and Ex. 6, dated 24th July 1850, the two Robakaris of the Commissioner of the Sunderbans, the following facts appear :

(1) That the Bandobasti Taluk in question was a part of the Sunderbans in Pergana Salimabad in the District of Bakargunj. (2) That the Mouzahs included in that Taluk were resumed. (3) That in 1850 the Mouzahs were permanently settled with certain Zemindars of Pergana Salimabad. (4) That at the time of this permanent settlement the Board of Revenue fixed 8 annas as revenue payable by the permanent settlement holders to Government for each standard bigha of 80 cubits. (5) That in the course of this settlement on the application of certain Sikmi tenure-holders the rates of rents payable by the subordinate tenants of different grades to their immediate superior landlords per standard bigha of 80 cubits were settled by the Sunderbans Commissioner and were accepted by all the subordinate tenants. (6) That these rates give the Sikmi tenure-holders, that is the middlemen, a certain amount as profit per bigha of 80 cubits. (7) That a Jamabandi was directed to be prepared in accordance with the rates settled and accepted by the subordinate tenants.

The Jamabandi has not been produced. It appears however that at the time of settling the mehal permanently the revenue for the mehal was settled at 8 annas per bigha. Ex. 6 shows the total amount of revenue payable to Government for the mehal in question. There cannot be any doubt therefore that the area of the mehal in question was ascertained by measurement before the total amount of revenue payable for the mehal was fixed. The dakhilas granted to the tenants after 1850 show the areas of the different tenancies as so many bighas, cottas and chataks, and the amounts of rent payable for those areas were worked out by applying the rates settled and accepted by the tenants in 1850; there is no evidence in these cases to show that in 1850 the tenants were in possession of these excess lands which have now been found to be in their possession. We are therefore of opinion that the lands in the possession of the tenants in 1850 were measured in 1850, and areas for which the rent was assessed in 1850 are the areas shown in the dakhilas and that the excess areas which have now been found to be in the possession of the tenants were not assessed in 1850 and are therefore unassessed lands. The Courts below were therefore right in assessing these excess lands. The second point urged on behalf of the tenant is that in determining the present areas of each of these tenancies at least 5 p. c., should be deducted for closeness of survey from the area found by measurement in the course of the District Settlement operation. The learned Advocate for the landlord does not seriously dispute this point. This contention is therefore accepted. The third point urged by the learned Advocate for the appellants is that the Courts below were wrong in not enquiring into the legality and correctness of the appropriation of payment on account of rent and cesses by the landlords in respect of all the 42 jamas held by the defendants under the plaintiffs. This contention has no substance because the tenants did not produce any materials which could enable the Courts below to make such investigation.

The last point taken by the learned advocate for the appellants is that in suit No. 64 the Courts below were wrong in enhancing the rent under S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act. This contention is well founded and the position is not seriously contested by Mr. Gupta appearing on behalf of the respondents. Plaintiffs' claim for enhancement of rent under S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act, in this suit is therefore disallowed. As regards the cross-objections the first point urged by the learned Advocate for the plaintiffs is that the Courts below were wrong in dismissing the plaintiffs' claim for additional rent in suits Nos. 14, 47, 49, 50, 56, 59, 62 and 63. It appears that the plaintiffs instituted proceedings under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act, before the Revenue Officer for additional rent for unassessed lands of the tenancies which are the subject-matter of these suits. The claims for additional rent however were not pressed before him with the result that S. 109, Ben. Ten. Act, precluded the plaintiffs from suing the tenants in the civil Court for increasing the rent of these tenancies. In view of the decision in 35 C W N 1147 (3) and our decision in Second Appeal No. 563 of 1934 (4) we overrule this contention.

The next point urged on behalf of the plaintiffs is that the Courts below are wrong in holding that the plaintiffs are not entitled to get cesses at the rate of more than six pies per rupee before the first quarter of 1336 B. S. It appears however that the plaintiffs did not produce the Valuation Roll before the trial Judge. On appeal they asked the learned District Judge to take a certified copy of the Valuation Roll as additional evidence. The learned Judge refused the prayer of the plaintiffs. The same prayer has been repeated before us. The learned Judge did not accept the explanation given by the plaintiffs for not filing the Valuation Roll in the trial Court. We see no reason to differ from the learned Judge in this matter. There are no materials therefore on which we are in a position to say that the rate of cesses which is payable by the tenants is higher than what has been decreed by the Courts below. The last point urged by the learned Advocate for the plaintiffs concerns the plea of payment. The onus of substantiating this plea is upon the tenants. It is true that they made certain payments from time to time. But they did not declare the year or the years and the instalment to which they wanted the payments to be credited. The plaintiffs therefore were justified in crediting these payments to the account of the years previous to the period in suit under S. 55 (2), Ben. Ten. Act. There are no materials on the record to show that this appropriation is wrong. The plea of payment therefore in all these suits fails.

The result therefore is: Plaintiff's claim for enhancement of rent under S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act, in Suit No. 64 and for additional rent for excess area in suits Nos 14, 47, 49, 50, 56, 59, 62 and 63 is dismissed. Plaintiffs are entitled to get additional rent for each bigha of unassessed area that is 19/20th of the present area as stated in the plaint minus the area shown in the plaint as already assessed at the rate of 8 annas in the tenancies which are the subject-matter of suits Nos. 13, 52, 53, 54, 55, 57, 58 and 61 and at the rate of one rupee one anna in the tenancy which is the subject matter of suit No. 64. The plea of payment in all the twenty-one suits is disallowed. The appeals and the cross-objections are therefore allowed in part. The decrees of the lower appellate Court are varied in the manner indicated above. Parties will bear their own costs in these appeals and the cross-objections. The prayer of the learned Advocates for the parties for a direction upon the trial Court to prepare decrees in accordance with our decision in these cases is allowed.

Appeal No. 79 of 1933, Decided on 11th February 1936, from original decree of Sub-Judge, First Court, Dacca, D/- 12th December 1932.

(a) Burden of Proof—Special plea—Pardanashin lady taking special plea that she did not understand nature of transaction entered into by her—She must establish case founded on special plea.

Where in a suit on a mortgage executed by husband and wife the wife, who is a pardanashin lady alleged, that she did not understand what she was doing and that she signed the document on being asked by her husband to do so, the pleas raised by the wife are in the nature of special pleas resting on facts within the knowledge of the party raising them and the burden is on the wife to establish her case founded on the special pleas. [P 380 C 2]

(b) Pardanashin Lady—Mere declaration by lady that she did not understand nature of transaction is not conclusive—Person enforcing transaction establishing that document evidencing transaction was free and intelligent act of lady—Transaction is binding on lady.

Although a pardanashin lady is entitled to receive at the hands of the Court the same protection which the Court extends to the weak and infirm and to those who for any other reason are specially likely to be imposed upon by exertion of undue influence over them, still independent legal advice is not essential and is not necessary in every case and the mere declaration by the lady subsequently made that she had not understood what she was doing is not in itself conclusive. It is sufficient if the person enforcing a transaction establishes that the document evidencing the same was the free and intelligent act of the lady. [P 381 C 1]

Where, therefore, in a suit on mortgage executed by husband and wife, the wife who is a pardanashin lady alleges that she did not understand what she was doing and it appears from the evidence that the lady was not a person, who required any special protection and in regard to whom it could not be presumed that any undue influence was exercised on her by her husband or by the mortgagee; but on the other hand the evidence coming from the mortgagees establishes the facts necessary to make the mortgage binding on the lady, namely that the transaction was fair and the lady fully understood the acts to which she was subscribing, the mortgage is binding on her. Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for enforcement of two mortgages purported to have been executed by defendants 1 and 2. One of these mortgage bonds in suit was dated 19th July 1926, and it was in favour of the father of the plaintiff; the other mortgage bond dated 15th August 1927, was in favour of the plaintiff himself; and the plaintiff prayed for a mortgage decree on the footing of the two aforesaid mortgages. The claim in suit was resisted by defendant 2, the wife of defendant 1, on the ground that she had no knowledge of the contents of the two documents in suit, and that she had not executed them. On the pleadings of parties, the question for decision in the case was whether defendant 2 executed the mortgage bonds with full knowledge of the terms of the bonds and with full knowledge of the transactions. The decision on that question arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge in the trial Court was against the plaintiff and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed, so far as defendant 2 was concerned, on the ground that defendant 2 did not willingly or knowingly execute the bonds, and that defendant 2 was not liable for the loans on the bonds. There was a decree passed by the trial Court against defendant 1 alone for the money lent under the bonds in suit.

The plaintiff appealed to this Court; and it was urged in support of the appeal that on the evidence on record the Court below should have held that the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to a mortgage decree against both defendants 1 and 2, the mortgagors. The materials on the record have received our careful consideration. Before however dealing with the evidence in the case, we consider it necessary to refer to the proceedings before the Court below, leading up to the filing of the written statement by defendant 2 in the suit, which call for special notice in view of the position that the mortgage bonds in suit were executed jointly by the husband, defendant 1, who was Gharjamai and the wife, defendant 2, to whom the properties mortgaged belonged. The plaint in the suit was filed on 24th June 1932; there was appearance in the suit by both the defendants by one and the same vakalatnama on 21st July 1932, the same pleaders representing them both. On the same date an application was filed on behalf of the two defendants, by one of the pleaders who accepted the joint vakalatnama, praying for time for filing written-statement after drafting the same on procuring necessary papers. Application for time for filing written-statement was again made by the two defendants jointly on 28th July 1932, on stating that necessary papers had not been procured till then. The third application for time for filing written-statement and after procuring papers was made on behalf of the defendants "owing to the physical indisposition of the defendant who looks after the case," and the written-statement that was ultimately filed on 23rd August 1932, was one by defendant 2. The material averments of fact made in that written-statement were those contained in Paras. 10 and 11 of the same, which are set out below:

10. About six years before, defendant 1 informed this defendant, who has no knowledge of the affairs of the world, is inexperienced and is a Pardanashin woman, that she would have to execute a document as he was in need of some money and if necessary defendant 1 would also have to put signature to the said document. A few days after that defendant 1 again came and informed her that this defendant would have to go to Court and put her signature there to a document. This defendant accordingly went to the Registration Office in a carriage drawn by horses and sitting in that carriage she put several signatures on two occasions. This defendant never went to the house of the plaintiff and never signed any document there. This defendant does not know to read and write at all. She can only sign her name with great difficulty. No document was read over to this defendant by any one nor did this defendant put her signature after knowing and understanding the contents of the document. The plaintiff or his father did not pay any money to this defendant. This defendant did not obtain any money on the basis of that document.

11. One year after the above, defendant 1 told this defendant that she would have to go to the Registration Office again as she did last year and to sign her name there. Accordingly this defendant went to the Registration Office in a carriage drawn by horses and put several signatures sitting in that carriage on two occasions. This defendant never signed any document at the house of the plaintiff. Nobody read over any document to this defendant, nor did she put her signature after knowing the contents of any document. The plaintiff did not pay any money to this defendant nor did she receive any money on the basis of any document. The bonds in suit are not bona fide documents so far as this defendant is concerned.

It was with reference to the aforesaid statements that the points for decision in the suit, relating to knowledge of the mortgage transaction question, the execution of the same by defendant 2 were raised. The filing of a written statement by defendant 2 alone repudiating liability under the mortgages in suit in the circumstances cast a doubt as to the bona fides of the defence to the plaintiff's suit, and the circumstances to which reference have been made above, go to indicate community of interest so far as the plaintiff's claim under the mortgages was concerned, and in our judgment throws a great deal of light on the defence ultimately taken up by one of the defendants, resting upon grave aspersions on the other defendant, the husband.

The case before us is not one in which there is a question as to the good faith of a transaction between parties one of whom stands to the other in a position of active confidence, and where the burden of proving good faith of the transaction is on the party who is in a position of active confidence. The case before us was one in which the usual defence open to a pardanashin woman in this country was taken, and in which evidence was adduced by both the parties and the relevant facts are before the Court, and the question of burden of proof was immaterial, and no importance was to be attached to the question on whom the initial onus lay. The entire evidence had to be considered, and on the consideration of the same, decision had to be arrived at.

The parties to the mortgage transactions in question were strangers, and in dealing with them it had to be considered whether one of the parties, a pardanashin woman, was or was not of such intellectual attainment as to be able to comprehend and understand the nature of the transaction, or had the full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered. The mortgages in question purported to have been executed by defendant 2 on two different dates are couched in plain and simple language. They were signed by her on all the pages in which they were written. One of the mortgage bonds contains an endorsement that it was read over to the executant, defendant 2 and both of them contain the endorsements by the registering officers that the execution was admitted by defendant 2. The second mortgage bond dated 15th August

The execution of the mortgage bonds by defendant 2's attestation of the same, as also the reading over of the documents to her at the house of the creditor, the payment of the mortgage money after execution and deposit of title deeds by the mortgagors, have been proved by witnesses whom we find it impossible to disbelieve. There were discrepancies in matters of detail as between the witnesses speaking to events, after a long interval of time; but we are unable to hold on the evidence before us, that defendant 2 had no knowledge of the contents of the mortgage bonds, or that she did not fully understand the effect of the transaction evidenced by them. On the evidence coming from the plaintiff's side, the special defence raised by defendant 2 had not been established in any way. The part taken by the husband, defendant 1, as mentioned in the written statement of defendant 2, was undoubtedly in the nature of special pleas, resting on facts within the special knowledge of the party raising those pleas; and it was, therefore, incumbent upon that party to establish her case founded on special pleas. Defendant 2 did not make a beginning of a case by leading evidence in support of the case stated by her in her written statement, and repeated in her evidence. The evidence of defendant 2, when examined in the light of the mortgage documents in question, and taken along with the evidence on the side of the plaintiff, which we see no reason to disbelieve in material particulars, appears to us to be altogether unreliable. On the question of defendant 2 being a pardanashin lady, who was inexperienced and who had no knowledge of the affairs of the world, arising on her statements in the written statement, we have arrived at the definite conclusion that her deposition in the case goes against her. She starts with the statement in her examination-in-chief that she was aware of the rate of interest on Rs. 100 or Rs. 150 four or five years back. She asked her husband about the necessity for raising money on loan, but was snubbed by him; but the enquiry about the transaction was there. There was knowledge on her part of deposit of papers, when the loan was raised; and certain documents relating to title to property were left in the custody of the plaintiff. The documents were not brought back and they were with the plaintiff. She had money-lending business previously, although it was her father who used to look after the business. It could not be suggested that a woman of the defendant's position was competent to look after a business, unaided by her male relation.

The evidence of defendant 2 does not enable us to hold, on the facts and circumstances appearing from evidence, that she was a person in whose case, it was necessary for a creditor suing upon a mortgage to establish that she had independent and disinterested advice when entering into the mortgage transactions in question. Defendant 2 was, regard being had to her intellectual capacity and experience of the world, fully able to comprehend the nature of the mortgage transaction, and the application in the case before us, of the general principles and formulae applicable to a case of a pardanashin woman would undoubtedly lead to denial of justice to an honest creditor, who on the evidence, took all necessary precautions in the matter of transactions to which defendant 2 was a party.

The facts and circumstances of the case before us lead to the definite conclusion that the mortgages sought to be enforced by the plaintiff in the suit, were binding against defendant 2 and that the defence of that defendant denying her liability under the mortgages was not a bona fide one. As it has been indicated already, independent legal advice is not essential, and is not necessary in every case; and the mere declaration by the lady subsequently made, that she had not understood what she was doing, was not, obviously in itself, conclusive; it is sufficient if the person enforcing a transaction establishes that the document evidencing the same was the free intelligent act of the lady; the evidence in this case satisfied that test. It is now settled that a pardanashin woman is entitled to receive, in the Courts in this country, that protection which the Court of Chancery in England extends to the weak and infirm and to those who for any other reason are specially likely to be imposed upon by the exertion of undue influence over them.

That is not however the case now before us. Defendant 2 in the case before us was not upon her own evidence, a person who required any special protection, and in regard to whom it could be presumed that any sort of undue influence was exercised by her husband, defendant 1, or by the creditor, who was a stranger, and the evidence coming from the plaintiffs establishes the facts necessary to make the transactions of mortgage binding on her namely that the transactions were fair and that defendant 2 fully understood the acts to which she was subscribing. The result of the conclusions we have arrived at, as mentioned above, is that we are unable to express agreement with the decision of the Court below that Defendant 2 did not willingly or knowingly execute the two mortgage bonds in suit, and that she was not liable for the loans of the bonds. The appeal is allowed; the judgment and decree of the Court below, so far as they relate to defendant 2 in the suit are set aside and the plaintiffs suit is decreed against both defendants 1 and 2 with costs throughout, including the costs in this appeal. An usual mortgage decree in favour of the plaintiff appellant and against defendants 1 and 2, respondents in this appeal, will be drawn up in this Court, in supersession of the decree passed by the Court below.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for possession on declaration of title, and is directed against the decision of our learned brother R. C. Mitter, J., affirming that by the Subordinate Judge, Bankura. The plaintiff prayed relief in the suit instituted by him on the basis of rent sale at which he was the purchaser of the property in litigation, on 22nd November 1923. The defendants who resisted the claim of the plaintiff in the suit, were the mortgagee purchasers at a sale in execution of their mortgage decree; the purchase of the defendants was on 20th May 1924. The case of the defendants was that the plaintiffs not having annulled the mortgage were not entitled to get possession as prayed by them in the suit without redeeming the mortgage. The learned Subordinate Judge in the Court of appeal below gave effect to the defence of the defendants, and the decree passed by him directed payment of the decretal amount of the defendants' mortgage, before he could get khas possession of the lands in suit. The decree so passed by the lower appellate Court was affirmed by Mitter, J., in Second Appeal. In the case before us, the defendants were mortgagees at the date of the rent sale at which the plaintiff was the purchaser; the rent sale was prior in point of time and the defendants purchased the property within a year of the rent sale in execution of their mortgage decree. The right of the defendants under the mortgage was not annulled.

On the facts of the case, about which there is no dispute, the legal position would be the one indicated by our learned brother Mitter, J., in his judgment, that the sale under the mortgage would not for all purposes extinguish the mortgage; the purchaser at the mortgage sale could fall back on the mortgage, and use it as a shield against the purchaser at a rent sale. This is in consonance with the principle underlying the decision of the Judicial Committee in 48 I A 465 (1), and is in accordance with the decision of this Court in 35 C L J 1 (2), in which it was held, in line with the decision in previous cases, that the mortgagee purchasing property in execution of a decree obtained by him in the suit instituted in the mortgage in which the purchaser at a rent sale was not made a party, does not lose his right to be redeemed by the purchaser at rent sale; and the relative rights of the purchaser at the rent sale and the mortgagee should be determined with reference to this position at the time of the sale. As indicated above, we are in entire agreement with the decision of our learned brother Mitter, J., and this appeal must accordingly be dismissed. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 264 of 1932, Decided on 7th February 1936, from original decree of Sub-Judge, Second Court, Hooghly, D/- 4th August 1932.

(a) Pleadings — Construction — Variance between plaintiff's pleadings and case alleged at trial—Court must look to plaint, issues and manner in which case was fought to determine if there is variance.

Pleadings should not be construed too narrowly and therefore in dealing with the question whether there has been a variance between a plaintiff's pleadings and the case alleged at the trial, the Court must look not to the mere wording of the plaint, but to the issues which were settled for trial and to the manner in which the case was deliberately fought out by both the parties in the trial Court: 1930 P C 205, Foll. [P 384 C 1]

(b) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 85 — Mutual, open and current account involves transactions on each side creating independent obligations.

In order that a transaction should disclose a case of mutual, open and current account within the meaning of Art. 85, there must be reciprocal demands involving transactions on each side creating independent obligations on the other, and not merely transactions which create obligations on one side, those on the other being merely complete or partial discharges of such obligations: 1931 Cal 359, Foll. [P 385 C 2]

(c) Limitation Act (1908), S. 3—Materials to sustain defence not put before Court—Court can reject plea of limitation in appellate stage.

No doubt the plea of limitation can be urged at any stage having regard to S. 3, but when a party does take the appropriate defence but does not put before the Court materials to sustain that defence, it is difficult for the Court sitting in appeal to give effect to the defence contention and the Court is justified in rejecting it. D. N. Mitter, J.—This is an appeal by defendants 1, 5 and 6 from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Hooghly, dated 4th August 1932, by which he decreed the suit of the plaintiff for recovery of a certain sum of money. Defendant 1 died during the pendency of the appeal and his five sons, who are defendants 2 to 6 to the suit, have been substituted in his place as the heirs and legal representatives under the law. The case stated in the plaint is that the defendants purchased from the plaintiff bricks and other materials for the construction of cooly lines of the Brahmanberia Jute Mills. It is alleged in the plaint that the defendant took material of the value of Rs. 12,674-7-0 from the plaintiff between 24th February 1925 and 27th October 1928. The defendants made payments from time to time of the sum of Rs. 8,725-9-9 between 9th April 1925 and 27th February 1929. The plaintiff accordingly sued for the balance of Rs. 3,948-13-3 and to their claim they added the sum of Rs. 1,777-8-0 for interest at the rate of 18 per cent per annum. The total claim was laid at Rs. 5,726-5-3. On 17th August 1928 defendant 1 wrote a letter in favour of the plaintiff in which he agreed to be bound as a surety for the debt of the partnership.

The suit was contested by defendant 1 and his two sons, defendants 5 and 6 who by their written defence denied liability on the ground that they are not partners of the firm which took the materials and were not liable. They also pleaded limitation of a portion of the claim. They further contended in their written defence that the interest at the rate of 18 per cent per annum was excessive and unconscionable. Several issues were joined in the suit. The Subordinate Judge after taking evidence came to the conclusion that all the defendants were partners and were liable as such. On the question of limitation he reached the conclusion that as the suit which was instituted on 5th May 1931 was within three years of the last payment it was within time and he decreed the plaintiff's claim in full. Against this decision defendants 1, 5 and 6 have taken this appeal to this Court and defendant 1 having died during the pendency of the appeal the appeal is being continued by his heirs. Several points have been argued before us in support of the appeal. It is argued in the first place that in finding that defendants 1, 5 and 6 were partners the Subordinate Judge has gone against the pleadings as the case in the plaint is that defendant 1 was the sole partner and that all these defendants have been made liable because the articles were taken through them and there is absolutely no evidence on the record to show that defendants 5 and 6 were partners. As against defendant 1, it is next contended, the claim on the basis of suretyship cannot stand for the case of the suretyship was not pleaded and even assuming that the case of suretyship is made out, the plaintiff cannot get a decree against defendant 1 on that footing as the plaintiff did not get payment from the principal debtor and the suretyship was consequently discharged. It is argued by the appellant that the claim includes the price of the material after the letter of suretyship was given; and it is argued further that a good portion of the claim was barred by limitation; and lastly it is argued that the question of interest was not properly dealt with by the Subordinate Judge.

We will take the grounds in the order in which we have stated them. In so far as ground 1 is concerned which really rests on the argument that there is a variance between the pleadings and on the question as to who are really the partners, our attention has been drawn by Mr. Bose, who appears for the appellant, to para. 1 of the plaint, where it is stated that the defendants are a firm of contractors and their firm is known under the name and style of Pelley Brothers. It is also stated then that defendant 1 is the father of defendants 2 to 6 and they live jointly as members of a joint family and the real owner of the firm of Pelley Brothers is defendant 1, and the sons being capable manage the business. It is argued that the Subordinate Judge's finding that all the six defendants were partners of the firm of Pelley Brothers is clearly inconsistent with the statement made in para. 1 where the allegation is that the real owner of the firm is defendant 1. It appears, however, that when the matter came before the Subordinate Judge several issues were framed of which issue 4 was to the following effect :

Who are the proprietors of firm of Pelley Brothers? Have defendants 1, 5 and 6 any interest in it? If not, are they liable for debts due to the plaintiff?

Upon this issue evidence was directed and the issue was deliberately fought out in the Court below. In such circumstances it would not be right for us to hold that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in arriving at the conclusion that all the defendants were partners of the firm even in view of the case as laid in para. 1 of the plaint. In cases of this kind one has to bear in mind certain observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council bearing on the question in 52 C L J 1 (1). In that case it was pointed out by their Lordships that pleadings should not be construed too narrowly and therefore in dealing with the question whether there has been a variance between a plaintiff's pleadings and the case alleged at the trial the Court must look not to the mere wording of the plaint, but to the issues which were settled for trial and to the manner in which the case was deliberately fought out by both the parties in the trial Court. Whatever the statement be in para. 1 of the plaint it appears clear that the parties understood that the real issue was whether all the defendants, including the appealing defendants, were partners or not. In the case before the Judicial Com-

Their Lordships so far as the first suit is concerned, see no reason to differ from the main findings of facts of the trial Judge and are of opinion that the High Court founded themselves upon too narrow a ground in dismissing the suit for variance. Their Lordships are satisfied that notwithstanding the form of the plaint the suit was fought by the parties deliberately upon issues substantially as framed by the trial Judge and ought upon that footing to be determined.

We do not think therefore that there is any substance in the ground which is raised as to the variance of the pleadings and proof having regard to the course which the trial took after the issues were framed. We do not think that there has been any prejudice in so far as defendants 1 to 6 are concerned. The next point taken is that there is absolutely no evidence to show that defendants 5 and 6 are partners. We do not think that this ground is sustainable seeing that there are a few outstanding facts which leave no doubt in our mind that the partnership consists of the father defendant 1 and his five sons. One of such outstanding facts is that it is admitted by defendant 1, the father, when he deposed before the Commissioner that he gave a sum of about 2½ lacs of rupees in order to enable the sons including the appealing defendants to start this business. We are asked having regard to the evidence given before the Commissioner that he was giving the sum to the other defendants, namely defendants 2, 3 and 4 for starting this business. But as has been pointed out by the Subordinate Judge that the right construction to be put upon the evidence of defendant 1 given before the Commissioner is to hold that he was giving it to all his sons, for it is not likely that he should invest a sum of 2½ lacs of rupees depriving his two younger sons from the benefit of the partnerships. This also appears to be the case from certain correspondence which has been referred to by the Subordinate Judge—certain letters and postcards Ex. 5 and 5 (a). There defendant 1 was writing to the other plaintiff Satis Nundy for taking time to adjust the accounts.

This is only consistent with the circumstance that defendant 1 was a partner. An attempt was made therefore both in this Court as also in the Court below, to show that neither Ex. 5 nor Ex. 5 (a) contains the genuine signature of defendant 1 and this attempt failed before the Subordinate Judge who had no hesitation in rejecting this contention. He held that the signatures on these two letters were genuine. The two letters Ex. 5 and Ex. 5 (a) are to be found printed at pp. 32 and 33 of the second part of the paper book. It is true that defendant 1 has given a denial to these signatures but the Subordinate Judge is of opinion that the evidence of defendant 1 is of a shifting and prevaricating kind, and that he was unable to place any reliance on it after a careful perusal of it, and it seems to us that the whole object of defendant 1 was to shield defendants 2, 3 and 4 and to make it difficult for the plaintiff to realize his money. We are in entire agreement with the Subordinate Judge after having gone into the entire evidence on this point. With regard to the ground about the liability on the basis of suretyship it is not necessary to come to any conclusion in view of our finding that defendant 1's liability as partner has been established to our satisfaction. The real question on which we have heard the respondent and thought that the case calls for a reply was the plea of limitation. It appears from the finding of the Subordinate Judge on this question of limitation that the issue of limitation was not urged or made out by evidence.

It appears that the Subordinate Judge negatived the plea of limitation on the ground, as he puts it, that the suit was instituted on the 22nd Baishakh 1338 B. S. corresponding to 5th May 1931 and that the claim was within time because the date of the last transaction was Kartick 1335 B. S. This finding of the Subordinate Judge would undoubtedly be justified if the case was treated as one of mutual open and running accounts within the meaning of Art. 85 of the Schedules to the Limitation Act. Having regard to the evidence which has been given in this case it cannot be said that the transaction in this case disclosed the case of mutual open and current account where there has been reciprocal demands. The present case appears to be one in which goods were purchased and payments made in discharge of the price of the said goods. The true test in cases of open and mutual accounts has been discussed in a very elaborate judgment of Sir George Rankin C. J., (as he then was) in the case of 52

C L J 314 (2). After an exhaustive review of the authorities Sir George Rankin summarizes his conclusion as follows:

There can I think be no doubt that the requirement of reciprocal demands involves, as all the Indian cases have decided following Holloway, Ag. C. J. transactions on each side creating independent obligations on the other and not merely transactions which create obligations on one side. Those on the other being merely complete or partial discharges of such obligations.

The present case is really a case where there are obligations on one side, those on the other side being merely partial discharges of the obligation. The goods were purchased and were paid for. In this view it appears that Mr. Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury who appears for the respondent does not contest the argument of the appellants that Art. 85 does not apply to this case but concedes that the real article applicable to the present case is Art. 52 for the price of the goods, and that the suit is to be instituted within three years from when the goods were delivered. It appears from the evidence that some of the goods the prices for which were sued for were delivered beyond three years of the date of the institution of the present suit, that is beyond three years of 5th May 1931, and we are told that it will be possible from an examination of the accounts to arrive at a figure which will show the amount that is barred by limitation. But it was not possible, having regard to the state of account books the only material available to the Court, for the learned Advocates on either side to arrive at a very definite figure. In these circumstances we have no other alternative but to hold that this ground cannot be sustained and this contention cannot be given effect to, having regard to the paucity of material on the record of this case. The defendants-appellants are to blame in this matter and to some extent. It is true that the plea of limitation can be urged at any stage having regard to S. 3, Limitation Act, but when a party does take the appropriate defence but does not put before the Court materials to sustain that defence it becomes difficult for the Court sitting in appeal to give effect to the defence contention. Before the Sub-Judge the point of limitation was faintly urged, for the learned Judge remarks: "Issues 2 and 3 were not urged or made out by evidence." It seems to us that the trial Judge must have felt the same difficulty which we have felt, viz., paucity of materials to sustain the defence. On these grounds we must regret the contention of the appellant on the question of limitation. In this view the ground which is based on the plea of limitation must also fail.

Having regard to the circumstance that the Subordinate Judge seems from his very brief finding on limitation to have applied a wrong article of the schedules to the Indian Limitation Act to the present case we are of opinion that that circumstance really bears on the question of costs. The defendants had fair reasons for preferring this appeal. In these circumstances we dismiss this appeal, but we do not allow any costs to the plaintiffs-respondents either in this Court or in the Court below. We affirm the decree of the Subordinate Judge except with regard to costs.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 39 of 1935, Decided on 19th March 1936, against judgment of R. C. Mitter, J., D/- 10th July 1935, reported as 1936 Cal 331.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 30 and Amending Act 4 of 1928—Amending Act is not retrospective in operation—Tenancy created before amendment and not holding—S. 30 and Amending Act cannot be combined so as to give landlord right to sue for enhancement of rent.

In the case of tenancy consisting entirely of undivided shares in parcels of lands or partly of entire parcels of lands and partly of undivided share in parcels of lands, S. 30 cannot be combined with the definition of holding as now amended so as to give the landlord the right to sue for enhancement of rent in respect of the tenancy created before Act 4 of 1928 came into force. The Amending Act cannot be given retrospective effect. [P 386 C 2; P 387 C 1]

Judgment.—The plaintiffs in the suit in which this appeal under S. 15, Letters Patent, directed against a decision of our learned brother R. C. Mitter, J., has arisen, claimed enhancement of rent under S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act, in addition to the claim for rent with cesses, and the question for consideration now before us relates to the right of the plaintiffs to claim enhancement in the manner mentioned in their plaint. The tenancy in question comprised 13 parcels of land and fraction of three other parcels; and it was not therefore a holding under the Bengal Tenancy Act, before the definition of holding was amended by the Bengal Tenancy Amendment Act 4 of 1928. The defence of the tenant defendant in the suit was that the definition of holding as amended in the year 1928 had no retrospective effect, and as such the plaintiffs as landlords had no right to apply for enhancement of rent under S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act.

The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that no vested right of the defendant was affected by the amendment of the definition of holding; the defendant was an occupancy raiyat under the old law, and he was so now. According to the Munsif, there was a technical flaw to the enhancement of his rent under S. 30, because of something in the nature of a defect or otherwise in the definition of the word holding under the old law, and that has now been removed. On appeal, the Court of appeal below differed from the view taken by the Munsif as mentioned above; and the Subordinate Judge in the lower appellate Court, held that the holding in question was not a holding within the meaning of the old Bengal Tenancy Act, and as such S. 30 (b) had no application. The change in the definition of holding could not legally take away a vested right in the absence of any clear provision in the statute. It was accordingly held by the lower appellate Court, that the rent of the holding in question could not be enhanced under S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act. On second appeal to this Court Mitter, J. affirmed the view taken by the Subordinate Judge in the Court of appeal below.
